PONCE DE LEON BALL PARK, Aug. 12.—Billy Smith's Crackers and the Barons met here this afternoon in the first game of their series. Hardgrove was Molesworth's selection to take the mound for the visitors, while Gilbert Price was on the hurling hill for the home talent.

Bibby Gilks, the Cleveland scout was at the game. It was rumored that he was looking over Harry Welchonce, who has not been grabbed up by any of the major league clubs.

FIRST INNING.

Marcan hoisted a high fly to Manush. Messenger ballooned to Welchonce. McBride waited for four wide ones and trotted to the initial sack. Kniseley was also awarded free transportation to Station One. Kniseley was caught off first. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Ager popped up an easy fly to Marcan. Manush slammed a one-timer to right. Marcan and Carroll disposed of Welchonce. Manush ambled to second on the out. Smith drew four wide ones. Bisland smashed a screaming single to left and Manush raced over the counting station. Holland lined to McBride. TWO HITS, ONE RUN.

SECOND INNING.

Mayer found one to his liking and pounded a single to left. Mayer was caught asleep off first, Chapman to Ager. Holland scooped up McDonald's grounder and threw him out at first. Ellam was disposed of over the strike-out route. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

Calvo flied to McBride. Chapman walked. Price flied to Kniseley. Ager singled to left. Manush popped to Ellam. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

THIRD INNING.

Carroll flied to Calvo. Hardgrove walked. Marcan walked. Messenger hit into a double play, Smith to Bisland to Ager. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Welchonce out, Marcan to Carroll. Smith singled to left. Bisland out, Ellam to Carroll. Holland flied to McBride. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

FOURTH INNING.

McBride out, Bisland to Ager. Kniseley popped to Ager. Mayer out, Bisland to Ager. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

LATEST NEWS

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 18.—Governor Sulzer was the only member of the Board of Trustees of Public Buildings present at a meeting called to-day. Martin H. Glynn and Speaker A. E. Smith, of the Assembly, were absent. Mr. Sulzer proceeded with the business alone. State Architect Pilcher read the bids for the new wing for the capitol to replace the part burned.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—Secretary of State Byran to-day denied a report that he had decided to leave the lecture platform because of unfavorable criticisms and public opinion.. The Secretary said he expected to resume the lecture platform as soon as he found it possible to start on a vacation.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 18.—Despite Washington dispatches to the contrary members of the Mexican government asserted today that President Wilson's note brought here by Special Envoy John Lind had not officially been laid before President Huerta. It was tacitly admitted that the note is in possession of the government and that it will have the formal consideration of President Huerty within twenty-four hours.

PROFOUND IMPRESSION MADE BY PRISONER'S REMARKABLE STORY

From the lips of the man accused of the murder of Mary Phagan, came a remarkable story Monday afternoon.

The spectators in a densely packed courtroom listened with strained interest as Leo Frank told in graphic words of the events of the day which brought the charge of a terrible crime against him.

It is doubtful if a tale so clearly told, so thorough in its detail, so logically presented ever has been related in a Georgia court of justice by a man over whom has hung the accusation of a horrible murder.

His wife smiled affectionately at him when he told of his marriage to her and said with feeling: "My married life has been exceptionally happy; in fact, the happiest period of my life."

His words, dispassionate at first, grew in force as he proceeded, but he seldom departed from his moderate tone of voice. The only exceptions were when he was referring to some particularly vital point.

At on point he adverted to one of the Solicitor's charges that he had not done all the work on Saturday that his lawyers claimed for him. Frank displayed a sheaf of requisitions to the jurors, and said with a trace of heat:

"Notwithstanding any insinuations that may have been made, I—wrote—these—requisitions!"

He brought out the closing words with a startling force he had not displayed before, emphasizing each word with a blow of his hand on the railing in front of the jury box.

At another time he held up a long sample case of vari-colored pencils t othe view of the jury.

Solicitor Dorsey objected to the display of the pencils on the ground that they had not been introduced as evidence.

Frank smiled and said to the jurors:

"I guess you have seen enough of the pencils to perceive there are a great many kinds."

The spectators smiled with him as they saw he had accomplished all he desired.

Here is Frank's story as it was told with its various interruptions:

Mr. Arnold: "Now Mr. Frank, such papers as you want to use you can come down here at any time or from time to time and get them on this table right here.

The Court: "Before you commence your statement I want to read the law. In criminal procedure, the prisoner will have the right to make to the Court and jury such statement in the case as he may deem proper in his defense. It shall not be under oath and shall have such force as the jury shall think right to give it. They may believe it in preference to the sworn testimony in the case. The prisoner shall not be compelled to answer any questions on cross-examination. He should feel free to decline to answer them. Now you can make such statement as you see fit."

The defendant said: "Gentlemen of the jury, in 1884, the 17th day of April, I was born in Terrell, Tex. At the age of three months my parents took me to Brooklyn, N. Y., which became my home until I came South, to Atlanta, to make my home here. I attended the public schools of Brooklyn and prepared for college in Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"In the fall of 1902 I entered Cornell University, where I took the course of mechanical engineering, graduating after four years, in June, 1906. I then accepted a position as draughtsman with the B. F. Sturdevant Company, of Hyde Park, Mass. After remaining with this firm for about six months I returned once more to my home in Brooklyn, where I accepted a position as testing engineer and draughtsman with the National Meter Company of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Came to Atlanta In October, 1907.

"I remained with these parties until about the middle of October, 1907, when at the invitation of some citizens of Atlanta, I came South to confer with them with reference to the starting and operation of a pencil factory to be located in Atlanta. After remaining here for about two weeks I returned once more to New York, where I engaged passage and went to Europe. I remained in Europe nine months. During my sojourn abroad I studied the pencil business and looked after the erection and testing of machinery which had been previously traded for.

"In the first part of August, 1908, I returned once more to America, and immediately came South, to Atlanta, which has remained my home ever since. I married in Atlanta an Atlanta girl, Miss Lucille Selig. The major portion of my married life has been spent in the home of my parents-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. E. Selig, at No. 68 East Georgia avenue. My married life has been exceptionally happy, indeed—it has been the happiest days of my life.

"My duties as superintendent of the National Pencil Company were in general as follows: I took charge of the technical and mechanical end of the factory, looking after the processes and seeing that the product was turned out in quality equal to the standard which was set by our competitors. I looked after the installation of new machinery, and the purchasing of any machinery, and in addition I had charge of the office work at the Forsyth street plant, and the lead plant on Bell street.

Looked After the Purchase of Mateials.

"I looked after the purchasing of the raw material.' I saw after the manufacture of pencils and kept up with the market of these materials and when the prices fluctusted so that the purchases could be made to the best possible advantage.

"On Friday, April 25, I arrived at the pencil factory on Forsyth street at about 7 o'clock, my usual time. I immediately started in on my regular routine work, looking over the papers I had laid out the evening before, and attending to any work that needed my special attention that morning.

"At about 9:30 I went over to the office of the general manager and treasurer, Mr. Sigmund Montag, whose office is at Montag Brothers on Nelson street. I stayed over there a short time, and got what papers had arrived in the mail—all the mail of the pencil factory comes over to their office. I got that mail and brought it back to the Forsyth street office. I then separated the mail and continued in my usual routine duties in the office on Forsyth street.

"At about 11 o'clock Mr. Schiff handed me the payroll booy, covering the plants at Forsyth street and Bell street, for me to check over and see if the amounts and extensions were correct. Of course, this work has to be very carefully done, so that the proper amount of money is drawn from the bank. This checking took me until about 12:20 p. m.

Went to Bank To Get Pay Money.

"I then went over to Montag Brothers, took the checks drawn and had them signed by Mr. Sig. Montag, after which I returned to Forsyth street and got the leather bag in which I usually carried the money and the coin from the bank, and got the payroll slip, on which the various demoniations which I desired to have on the payroll were made out, and went, accompanied by Mr. Herbert Schiff, my assistant, to the Atlanta National Bank, where I had the checks cashed.

"Returning to the factory in company with Mr. Schiff, I placed this bag containing the money for the payroll, in the safe and locked it. At this time my wife called for me and in her company and that of Mr. Schiff I went over to the car, and went with my wife home to lunch. After lunch I returned to the factory and took a tour for about an hour through the factory, after which I then assisted Mr. Schiff in checking over the amounts on the pay envelopes, checking the money against the duplicate slips that we had got from the bank to see that the correct amount had been given us, and helped Mr. Schiff in checking over the money and in filling the envelopes.

"This took us approximately until a quarter to six to fill the envelopes and seal them, and place them in a box we have there with two hundred pigeon holes in it, that we call our payoff box.

Paid One Mon Check in Cash .

"While I was so occupied with Mr. Schiff in filling the envelopes, a young man named Wright who had helped us out in the office as clerk during the past week came in and I paid him in cash, as Mr. Schiff had neglected to put his name on the payroll. I just made out a ticket and put it in the payroll box, not the cash box, and continued in the office with Mr. Schiff, taking all the envelopes that were due the help that had worked from April 18 to April 24, inclusive, to pay them through the window in one side of the office. There is a little window built in the hall. I had stayed in my office, checking over the amount of money which had been left there.

"This amount should have been equal to the amount loaned out in advance to the help. I took a ticket out when we were filling the envelopes in checking this amount there. As near as I recollect it, it was about $15.

"I noticed a shortage of about $1.20, or something over a dollar, at any rate, and I kept checking to see if I could find the shortage shortage in the various deductions which had been made. I could not locate it that evening, after the help had been paid off, during which time I stayed in my office. No one came into my office and asked me for the envelope or for an envelope of any other party.

"After the paying off of the help had taken place, Mr. Schiff returned and handed me the envelopes which were left over, bound with an elastic band, and I put them in the cash compartment, which is different from the the cash box, the key to which is kept in my cash box, and placed them in the safe, and Mr. Schiff placed the amounts in the box, and placed the box in the safe and left them.

Tells of Puting Slips in Time Clock.

"I placed in the time clock slips which were to be used the next day. I took the two time slips dated April 25, which had been used by the help on Friday, April 25—these are the two that I put in the slot" exhibiting the same to the jury.)

Mr. Dorsey thereupon vigorously protested that Mr. Frank should be allowed to exhibit these slips to the jury, because they had not been offered in evidence, on the grounds that they were immaterial and irrelevant, and on the second ground that he could not put them in evidence on his own statement.

Counsel for the defendant insisted, however, that they should be allowed to offer these slips in evidence, as they had been testified to by Mr. Darley and others. The testimony, however, was not produced, and Judge Roan ruled that Mr. Frank might make any statement concerning the same, but that he would withhold his ruling until further investigation. Mr. Frank thereupon proceeded to explain to the jury.

"Gentlemen, as I was saying, these two slips that have April 26, 1913, written at the bottom are the two slips I put in the clock on the evening of Friday, April 25, to be used on the day following, which, of course, was April 26.

"I neglected to mention also, in going over my duties at the factory, that Mr. Darley was superintendent of labor and manufacture, and it fell to his duty to engage the help and distribute the help throughout the plant, and to discharge the help in case it was necessary. It was also due to him whetner the wages were raised or not. In other words, he was the man that came directly in contact with the help. Moreover, he saw that the goods progressed through the plant without stopping, speedily and economically for their manufacture.

"On Friday evening I got home at about 6:30, had my supper, washed up, and with my wife played a game of auction bridge at a friend's home in the evening. My wife and I returned home and retired about 11 o'clock.

"On Saturday, April 26, I rose between 7 and 7:30 and liesurely washed and dressed and ate my breakfast, and caught a Washington Street or Georgia Avenue car. I don't really remember which, at the corner of Washington and Georgia avenue, and arrived at the factory, Forsyth street plant, at about 8:20.

"Upon my arrival at the factory I found Mr. Holloway, the day watchman, at his usual place, and I greeted him in my usual way, and found Alonzo Mann, the office boy, in the office.

"I took off my coat and hat and opened my desk and opened the safe, and removed the various books and files and wire trays containing the various imporant papers which were placed there the evening before and distributing them in their proper places about the office. I then went out to the shipping room and conversed a few minutes with Mr. Irby, who was at that time shipping clerk, about the work he was going to do that morning.

"According to my recollection, we did no shipping that day, owing to the fact that the freight offices were not receiving any shipments, due to the fact that it was a holiday.

"I returned to my office and looked through the papers and sorted out those which I was going to take over on my usual trip to the general manager's office that morning.

"I then turned to the invoice covering shipments which were made by the pencil factory on Thursday, April 24, and which were typewritten on Friday, April 25, by Miss Eubanks, who was the stenographer who stayed at my office. She had hurried through with the office work on the day previous, so that she could go home and spend the holiday in the country where she lived. But I didn't get to check over the invoices on the shipments on Friday, due to the fact that Mr. Schiff and myself were completely occupied the entire day. So we left the factory with the payroll. So that naturally, these invoices covering shipments which were made on April 24, ought to have been sent to the customers, and I got right to work checking them.

Shows Invoices to Jury First Time.

"Now I have these invoices here (taking up the papers and exhibiting them to the jury). These papers have not been exhibited to you before, but I will explain explan them. You have seen some similar to these.

"Of all the mathematical work in the office of a pencil factory, this very operation, this very piece of work that I have now before me is the most important. It is the invoices covering shipments and is sent to the customer, and it is very important that the prices are correct, that the amount of goods shipped agrees with the amount which is on the invoices, that the terms are correct, and that the price is correct. Also, in some cases, ther were freight deductions, all of which has to be very carefully checked over and looked into, because I know of nothing else that exasperates a customer more than to receive invoices which are incorrect.

"Now, with reference to the work I did on these orders—that is not such an easy job as you might be led to believe. Here are initials. They represent the salesman who took the order. Sometimes I have to go through a world of papers to find out to whom to credit these orders.

"I notice that one of the orders to R. B. Kindele calls for a specialty. That has to be carefully noted and recorded. One column represents the shipping point, another the date, etc.

"The next step is to fill in the orders on this sheet. On this sheet I must separate the orders into price groups. Evidently no work has been done on this sheet since he went away. The reason this is done —in the pencil business as in all manufacturing businesses—it is advantageous to sell as much of the high-preiced goods as possible.

"This sheet is the only means of telling how much of the various goods we are selling. It is the barometer of our business and requires most careful work.

Declares He Wrote Financial Sheet.

"After I have finished that work I have had to do this, and notwithstanding any insinuations that have been made, I wrote these requisitions."

Frank read the name on each requisition, which were the same as the names on the orders.

"Now that is all my handwriting, except what was written at a subsequent date to April 26."

Frank went back to the stand. He was handed a glass of water as he resumed his seat, but declined it.

"Miss Hall left my office" he continued, "on her way home at this time. There were then in the building Arthur White, Harry Denham and Mrs. White. It must have been from ten to fifteen minutes after that this little girl whom I afterwards found to be Mary Phagan came in. She asked asked for her pay. I got my cash box, referred to the number and gave her the envelope.

"As she went out, she stopped near my outer office door and said:

"'Has the metal come?'

Sound of Voice Made Little Impression.

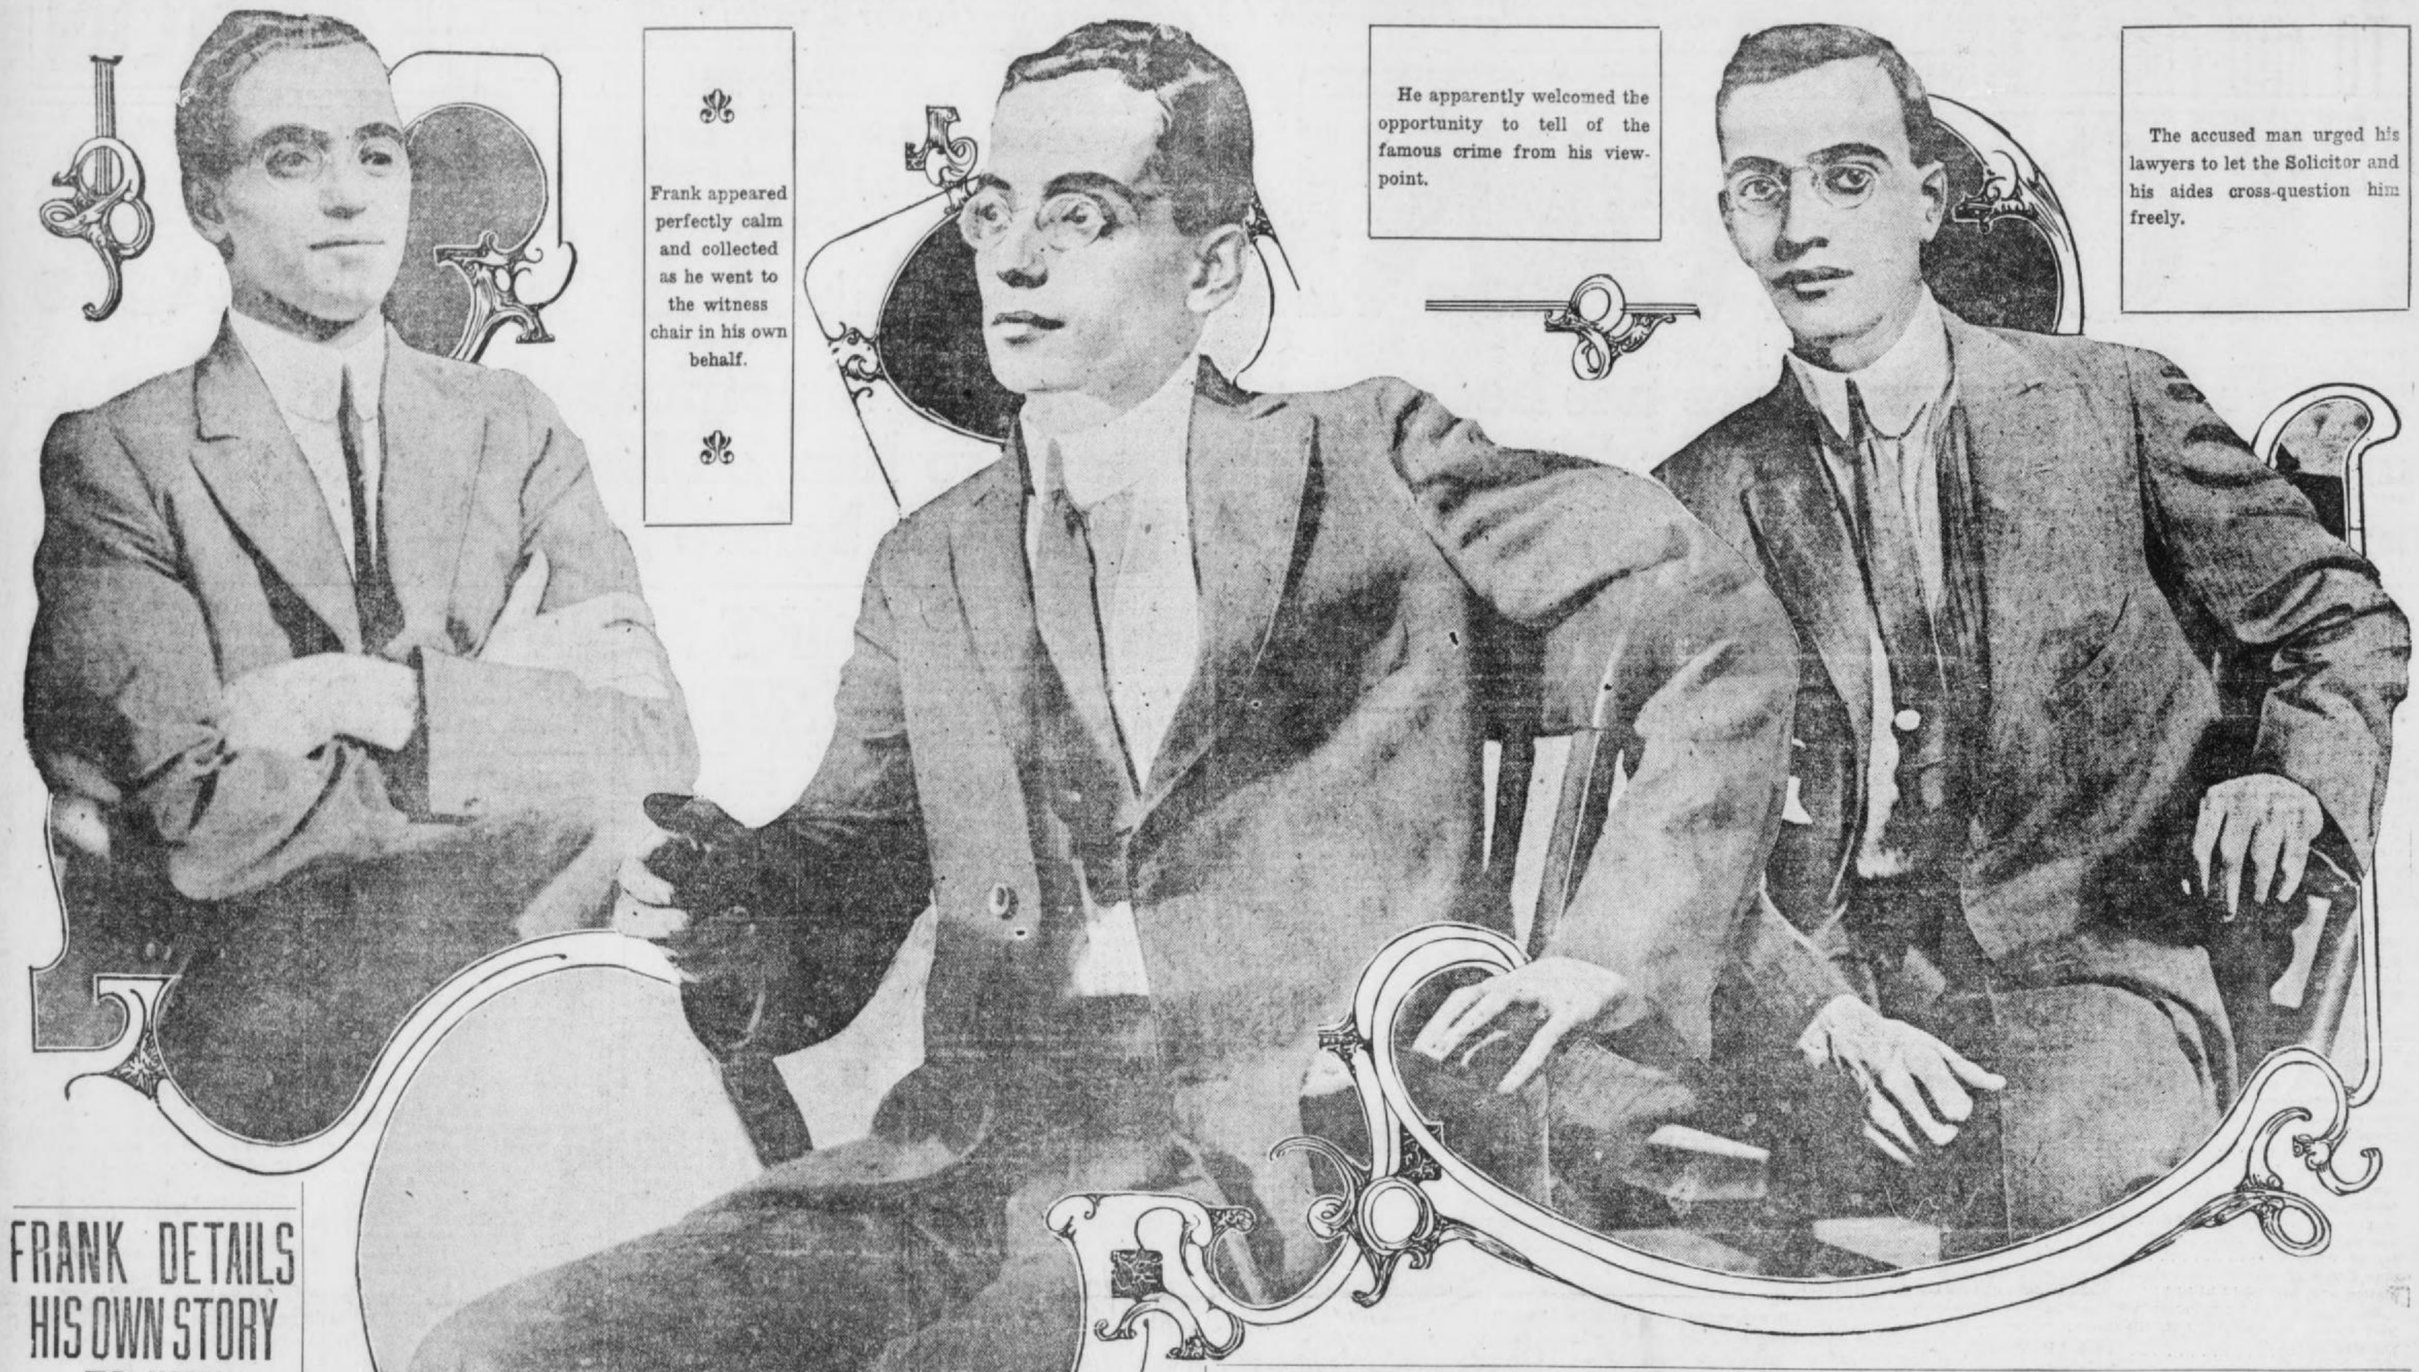

"The safe door was open and I could not see her, but I answered 'No.' The last I heard was the sound of her footsteps going down the hall. But a few moments after she asked me, I had the impression of a voice saying something, but it made no impression on me.

"The little girl had hardly left the office when Lemmie Quinn came in. He said something to me about working on a holiday and went out. A few minutes before 1 o'clock, I called up my wife and told her I was coming to lunch at 1:15. I then went upstairs to where Denham and White were working and found

FRANK LOOKS STRAIGHT AT JURY AND TELLS STORY DELIBERATELY

During his statement, Frank looked straight into the faces of the jurymen and talked very distinctly and deliberately. His voice was not very strong and the deputies had to rap frequently to keep down the noise.

LEO M. FRANK AS HE TOLD HIS STORY ON WITNESS STAND

Frank appeared perfectly calm and collected as he went to the witness chair in his own behalf.

He apparently welcomed the opportunity to tell of the famous crime from his viewpoint.

The accused man urged his lawyers to let the Solicitor and his aides cross-question him freely.

FRANK DETAILS HIS OWN STORY TO JURY

they had a bit of the floor taken up and were sawing.

"I explained to them that I was going to lunch and would lock the door when I left. Mrs. White left at this time. Some lady said that at 12:35 o'clock she found me in front of the safe. It is barely possible that she did. I don't recall her being there. Her memory probably is fresher than mine on this point.

"When I went up stairs I asked Mr. White if his wife was going to stay there with him. She said no, that she would go. She left and then I got my hat and coat and left, locking the outer door.

"Now, gentlemen, to the best of my recollection from the time the whistle blew until I went upstairs to see Mr. White, I did not stir out of my office. I went on home.

"I called up my brother-in-law, Mr. Ursenbach, to tell him I was unable to keep the engagement to go to the ball game. The cook answered the phone.

"My wife and mother-in-law were going to the opera. My father-in-law and I ate luhch. He went into the backyard while I lit a cigarette and lay down for a moment.

"I left and while passing the home of Mrs. Wolfsheimer, saw Mrs. Michael on the porch. I went in to see her and saw Mrs. Wolfsheimer, Mr. Loeb and others.

Watched Parade When Street Cars Stopped.

"To catch the next car I ran down to Glenn street. On the car I met my wife's cousin, Mr. Loeb. The car was blocked at the corner of Washington and Hunter streets. I walked up to Whitehall street and stood there possibly for fifteen minutes watching the Memorial Day parade.

"As I walked down Whitehall street I met Miss Rebecca Carson. This was probably 3:10 or 3:15 o'clock. I greeted her and walked on. I stopped at Jacobs' Pharmacy and walked on. I went from there to the factory.

"When I reached there I went upstairs and let the boys know I had returned. A minute later, I returned to my office and started to work on the financial sheet.

"In a few minutes the clock bell rang and Arthur White came into the office to borrow two dollars. It was while I was at work on the sheet at probably 4 o'clock that I went to the toilet.

"As I returned toward the office, Inoticed Newt Lee coming toward me from the head of the stairs. I told him he could go on off but to be sure and be back at 6 o'clock. I told him I was very sorry I could not let him know about the half holiday but that he was at liberty to enjoy himself as he saw fit, but that he must not fail to return at 6 o'clock.

"The first night that Newt Lee [illegible] work at the factory, I took him over the building, and stressed the fact that he must go into the basement, especially the dust bin, every half hour.

"I told him it would be part of his duties to watch the back door. He was to make a complete tour every half hour and punch the clock.

"Now, I will return to the work of the financial sheet. This sheet contains the cost o fall the pencils made that week. There are no names but this sample case will show you."

Evidence Excluded But Jury Sees It.

Frank unfolded a sample case.

Dorsey: "We object to this being used as evidence."

Judge Roan: "I sustain you."

Frank placed the sample case to one side.

"Well," he said, "you got a sufficient glance at those pencils to see there were a great many."

"In making up this sheet it was necessary to go through the list of all that were packed. Specials, of course, have to be figured separately.

"For instance, there is a special 60-60-x pencil known as 'Crackerjack.' Now I notice that the two expert accountants reported two errors. While they were unimportant, I wish to explain that those errors were not mine. They were made by Mr. Schiff. I never checked his figures. I checked over mine, but not his.

"Now the next is 'jobs.' The accountant found the only error in my financial sheet there in the item 'jobs. It was not an error, as I will show you. He did not know my method of figuring.

"Two items here are totals. The total gross amount is 791 gross, the total value amount $396.75. In figuring the average I obtained $50.01. In that average he discovered an error. It was not an error. I simply did not go as far into the decimals as he did. One-tenth of a cent was close enough for my purpose.

"Now some of the items in here are taken from the reports of the foremen of the different departments."

Frank then exhibited a report from the foreman or forewoman of each department and explained it.

"Then there is the report of Mr. Schiff, showing the gross of pencils shipped each day of that week—that week was an exceptionally heavy one.

"Now, there is a little report here that constitutes one of the most difficult calculations. It is from the packing room. We have a trick of the trade to put the pencils that do not sell very fast into fancy packages to make them go.

"Now, very often these pencils are taken from the shelf, where they have laid for more than a year, and repacked in the fancy cases. I made all the calculations on this that afternoon, despite everything that has been said here to the contrary.

Hapeville Episode Hinted by State.

That Frank rode on a street car to Hapeville with a girl the Saturday previous to the murder of Mary Phagan and repeatedly sought to persuade her to leave the car with him was the sensational testimony Solicitor Dorsey endeavored to get from Mrs. J. G. Wardlow Monday.

Anticipating the nature of the questions the Solicitor was about to ask Mrs. Rae Frank, mother of the defendant, stopped her ears with her fingers and then rushed from the room. Attorneys for Frank at first objected to the questions and the jury was excused. It was at this moment that Mrs. Frank made her dramatic exit. She was evidently fearful of repeating her outburst of a few days ago.

Mrs. Wardlaw denied that she ever knew of such a circumstance. She denied as well that she had been told of it by Harmes Stanton or H. G. Baker, street car men.

Another sensation was created when the defense called to the stand Miss Emmeline Mayfield, the young woman whom the State maintains was in the dressing room when Frank looked in at one time. Miss Mayfield denied this was true.

Paving the way for the eagerly awaited statement of Frank, the lawyers for the defendant devoted Monday morning to the gathering up of the story ends of their case, most of the time being occupied with the testimony of character witnesses.

More than a score of women and girls employed in the National Pencil Company were called to tell what they knew of Frank's character and what they had observed of his conduct about the factory. All asserted that they never had known personally of any misconduct on the part of the superintendent and never had heard of any.

Explains Looking Into Dressing Room.

Mrs. Mattie Thompson proved one of the most important of the character witnesses. After testifying to Frank's good character, Mrs. Thompson declared that the girls on the fourth floor were in the habit at one time of flirting from the windows of the dressing room. She said that the practice became a matter of comment among the elder women on the fourth floor and that she finally took it upon herself to report it. Whereupon orders were issued against it.

The testimony of Mrs. Thompson was produced to provide a basis for the contention of the defense that Frank had opened the dressing room door on several occasions solely for the purpose of determining if his orders were being carried out.

Miss M. E. Fleming, a stenographer, said that she worked in Frank's office from April to December, 1912, and that she never had observed any misconduct on the superintendent's part nor had seen women visiting his office.

Godfrey Winecoff, superintendent of the lead plant of the National Pencil Company, testified that it was his custom to visit the pencil factory office every other Saturday afternoon about 3 o'clock. He said he always found Frank or Schiff, Frank's assistant—frequently both—working in the office. He asserted he never saw any women there.

A large crowd was attracted to the courtroom by the probability that the prisoner would tell his story Monday, and the keenest expectancy prevailed. It was problematical whether there would be any cross-examination. Ordinarily, of course, the accused in a murder case merely makes his statement and the jury can believe it or discard it entirely as it chooses. It is said, however, that Frank has earnestly urged his lawyers to allow the Solicitor to cross-examine him.

When court reopened Monday Solicitor Dorsey took up the cross-examination of Harlee Branch, a reporter for The Atlanta Journal.

Took Conley 15 Minutes To Tell Crime Details.

Branch was asked:

"Can you give any estimate of the time taken in conversation in Conley's re-enactment of the crime?" He replied that it took about fifteen minutes.

Q. You never said it was about half the total time, did you?—A. I don't recall.

Attorney Arnold took the witness.

Q. You said it took about fifteen minutes to cover the time lost in conversation?—A. Yes.

Q. He began at 12:18 and you left at 1:08? That would be about 56 minutes that you were there?—A. Yes.

Q. How long was he writing the notes?—A. Two minutes at the most. He did not write fast or slow?

Q. How long did he stay in the wardrobe?—A. About one minute.

Q. Did you see Conley in the newspapermen's room here in this courthouse reading a newspaper since this trial began?—A. I saw him looking at one as though he was reading it.

Mr. Branch was excused and Lou Castro, former ball player and at present fight promoter, was called as a witness by the defense to testify to time it took to walk certain distances.

Q. Did you walk from Marietta and Forsyth streets to the second floor of the pencil factory?—A. Yes.

Q. How long did it take you?—A. Four and one-half minutes.

Q. Did you walk from the National Pencil Company to the corner of Whitehall and Alabama streets?—A. I did.

Q. How long did it take you?—A. Three minutes and twenty seconds.

Q. Did you walk from Broad and Hunter streets to the Pencil Factory?

Employees of Factory Character Witnesses.

Miss M. E. Fleming was the next witness called. She is one of Frank's former stenographers. She testified on direct examination that Frank's character was good. Dorsey cross-questioned her.

Q. Were you ever there on Saturday?—A. Yes.

Q. How long did it take you?—A. One and one-half minutes.

The witness was excused.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Frank day afternoon?—A. No, I was off then.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Frank work on the financial sheet Saturday mornings?—A. Yes, I saw him work on it a little.

Miss Fleming was excused and Godfrey Winecoff, superintendent of the lead plant of the pencil factory, took the stand.

Q. Did you visit the National Pencil factory on Saturdays between July 1, 1912 and May 1, 1913?—A. Yes.

Q. What time?—A. Three to 5 o'clock.

Q. How often?—A. Almost every Saturday.

Q. Did you ever see women there in Frank's office?—A. No.

Q. Who was there?—A. Frank, Holloway, Schiff and the office boy.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Are you sure Holloway was there at 3 o'clock?—A. Yes.

The witness was excused, and Mrs. Mattie Thompson, an employee of the factory working on the fourth floor took the stand and testified as to Frank's good character. Arnold questioned her.

Q. Do you know anything about that dressing room on the fourth floor and the conduct of the girls there?—A. I made a complaint about the girls flirting out of the window.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Who has talked to you in the last few days about what you were to swear on the stand here?—A. Mr. Haas talked to me.

FRANK MAKES HIS OWN BEST WITNESS TELLING DIRECT DETAILED STORY

The eyes of Leo M. Frank's wife and his mother-in-law, Mrs. Emil Selig, were constantly upon him as he sat in the witness chair talking conversationally with the jurors. His mother seldom looked at him, maintaining her usual attitude, looking slightly downward and toward the judge's bench.

Frank had been talking only 10 minutes when he unexpectedly was interrupted by a heated argument between the opposing attorneys over Frank's explaining the time slips, including the one which the defense claims was taken from the time clock Sunday morning following the finding of Mary Phagan's body.

Frank had mentioned the time slips and was undertaking to make an explanation of the manner they are used when Attorney Rosser called for the slips for Frank to explain before the jury.

Solicitor Dorsey made an instant objection, arguing that the slips had not yet been placed in evidence. All four of the principal attorneys interested in the case were on their feet at once, two and sometimes three of them, were talking at the same time.

Papers Withheld.

Judge Roan was compelled to caution them to proceed parliamentarily. His ruling was that Frank might refer to them as much as he pleased, but that he must not go before the jury with them until they had been properly identified and offered for evidence. The same situation developed when Frank sought to explain the details of his work by means of papers and records of his office. He was allowed to sit in his chair and refer to them but not to exhibit them to the jurors.

Fearless and Direct.

Frank taked to the jurors directly and fearlessly. There was no trace of uncertainty in his voice or in his manner. He appeared exactly as though he were in an informal conference with some persons interested in the factory and was outlining his duties and leading up to some particular incident that had engaged their attention and interest.

He was entirely at ease. He assumed an easy pose in his chair, gestured frequently as he proceeded with his narrative, and occasionally changed his position. His hands most of the time were clasped in front of him, except when he illustrated a point with an unconscious gesture. He found it necessary often to adjust his glasses which seemed not to fit him perfectly.

Tells Complete Story.

He touched only briefly on his early history, telling merely of his place of birth, his career in school and college, his short business experience after his graduation and finally his coming to Atlanta in 1908 to take charge of the National Pencil Factory.

He began with Friday, August 25, the day before the crime and recounted his movements almost minute by minute. Coming to the fatal Saturday, he told of leaving his home, reaching his office, talking with his employees and taking up the work of the day.

He was given orders, records, acknowledgment of orders, record sheets, financial sheets and all the other minute details that are involved in the work of the office. Those that had been submitted in evidence he took before the jury and explained at length and in detail the amount of work required in getting these out.

His Own Best Witness.

Notebook in hand, Solicitor Dorsey took a seat almost directly in front of Frank, but this appeared to disturb the prisoner not in the least.

Through the major share of the remarkable address, with its clear-cut statements and explanations, there was little or no attempt at oratory, but the speech was unquestionably a most eloquent argument. As had been prophesied, Frank was his own best witness.

LEO FRANK'S OWN STORY TO ADD FINAL TOUCH TO STATE'S GREATEST TRIAL

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

It is rather an extraordinary thing that on this Monday, the beginning of the fourth week of the most remarkable murder trial ever held in Georgia, the interest should be in nowise abated or lessened, and that the opening of court to-day saw the biggest, hungriest and most insistent crowd of curious spectators yet on hand at the opening of court.

Far from letting go the Phagan mystery, the public to-day seems to be gripping it even more eagerly than ever before.

Opinion still is widely divided as to the guilt or innocence of Leo Frank, and there have been many switches of conclusion and reversals of theory, pro and con, within the past week, and no doubt there is much more of the same sort of thing to come.

People to-day believe Frank guilty who started out believing him innocent, and the rule is working right around the other way, moreover!

Despite the many things that have been said and the countless things that have been written of the Frank trial and all that led up to it, it remains, on the threshold of its fourth week, the most absorbing melodrama ever enacted in Atlanta—the most bitterly fought and the most uncompromisingly contested trial known to the criminal history of the State of Georgia.

The principal parties to the case are, of course, Mary Phagan, the dead girl; Leo Frank, the defendant at bar, and Jim Conley, the grimly accusing negro.

Four months ago no one of these people was known to many Georgians.

Mary Phagan, a sweet little working girl, had a circle of perhaps a hundred friends—not 1 per cent of the population of Atlanta ever had heard of her.

Frank Little Known.

Leo Frank, the superintendent of the National Pencil Factory, was hardly known by very many more people—he had a business and college acquaintance, and a limited circle of social intimates. Not more than 2 or 3 per cent of Atlanta's population ever had heard of him.

Jim Conley, the negro, more than well known in police circles, along the way of the "Butt In" bar in Peters street, and a familiar figure enough along Darkest Decatur, numbered among his respectable acquaintances not more than 50 people—if nearly so many—perhaps.

Now—less than four months after the terrible deed enacted in the pencil factory on Saturday, April 26—there is not a hamlet a crossroads store or a country or city home in all Georgia that has not heard of every party to the sordid story, and that has not discussed everyone of them, together and singular, from every point of view imaginable!

It is more than morbid curiosity upon the part of people that prompts this great and never-flagging interest in the Phagan case—it is more than the mere fascination of crime that links the heart and mind of the people to it.

In the case of Leo Frank there is that indescribable element we call "human interest," that vague and elusive thing that tugs at the heart-strings and nags at the conscience—there is the knowledge upon the part of the public that a monstrous crime has been committed, and that responsibility for it must be fixed, no matter the cost and no matter the effort!

The public does not clamor for Leo Frank's life so much, nor for Jim Conley's—it demands that responsibility for Mary Phagan's brutal murder be fixed, and it will not be satisfied until that responsibility IS fixed.

At the same time, I believe—and I have believed all along—that the public wants to see justice done and fair play indulged in.

If Frank is not guilty he has been punished already beyond reason or reparation. He should be turned loose, with every amend decency and mistaken zeal may summon to their embarrassed effort at righting a frightful wrong.

If, however, he is guilty, and that is shown, then the inconvenience and discomfort accorded him thus far will matter little, if anything.

It is a tremendously big game the lawyers are playing in the stuffy little courtroom in the old City Hall Building.

On one side is the majesty of the law of the land, that must be maintained at any and all cost—that majesty of the law that may be invoked in behalf of the humblest no less than the highest. On the other hand is the defendant—an abstract thing in the sight of the law.

On one side is the great State of Georgia, calling for a "tooth for a tooth and an eye for an eye"—on the other side are those guaranteed rights of citizens, embodied in Frank, that must not be challenged lightly or without complete and compelling reason.

It Is a Big Game.

It is a big game—it involves that most precious of all gifts of God, a human life, and a human reputation, a home and the happiness thereof. It is a game, nevertheless, that involves on the contrary a sinister charge of utter unworthiness upon the part of the man who still protests his rights to these precious gifts, jealously given of a Divine Power, and as jealously guarded by His laws, no less than by the laws of human beings.

One can not get away from the conclusion, cited many times, that, after all is said and done, Frank's character will determine the verdict in the case now on trial.

His character will be found to be his greatest asset and his most sure dependence, in this his hour of pressing peril—as his lack of it, if shown, must prove to be his final and everlasting damnation.

Frank, by injecting his character in issue, has challenged the worst upon the part of the State.

He has cited scores of witnesses to uphold it—he has made a brave, and maybe an abundant, showing.

The State, however, says it will break down that character—that it will show Frank's unspeakable depravity, even as charged glibly and smugly by the negro, Conley, as yet uncorroborated by any person the most abandoned would care to believe.

If the State can do this thing——

Can it be possible that Frank, through all these years, has been leading a double life?

Can it be true that he has, while professing to be an honorable and upright man, a faithful husband, a dutiful and worthy son, a deserving and decent friend among his neighbors and his kind, nevertheless been, really, a moral degenerate, an ignoble and deceitful creature—and can it be that these things, so long and so cleverly concealed, at last led him to murder?

The State's Contention.

The State holds that his family circle, his intimate social acquaintances, and his business associates, would, as a matter of fact, be the last people in the world to know the truth of Frank's double life—for, say they, Frank would employ every artifice and summon to his aid every possible device to keep those very people from discovering the truth concerning him.

This, so the State contends, is precisely what Frank did do—and in that way they justify his alleged intimacy with Conley and his quick calling upon Conley for help, when eventually he found himself with the blood of a human being on his guilty hands.

The State is asking a good deal when it asks the public to believe this of Frank, in the light of the evidence of his good character tendered last week, and it hardly is possible that the public WILL believe it, unless the State makes its charges crystal clear.

Men will ask themselves—and will ask themselves wisely—whose reputation is safe, if it may be brushed away and broken down by the uncorroborated word of such a creature as Conley?

But, Conley uncorroborated in one thing—while Conley corroborated is quite and altogether another!

The State is yet to be heard in rebuttal of Frank's character witnesses—and so judgement must be suspended pending their revelations.

The only point is—and it has been an evident point so long that to reemphasize it seems trite—the State must make good on its sinister charge of perversion and degeneracy upon the part of Frank, or its case will be greatly weakened, perhaps beyond repair.

I have an idea that Frank's statement on the stand may weigh heavily in the minds of the jury.

Frank the Star.

Indeed, it is not improbable that the very best jury speech and jury argument put forth in defense of Frank, with all due appreciation and respect of and for Mr. Rosser and Mr. Arnold, will be made by Leo Frank himself!

His statement, although not sworn to, will carry an appeal that hardly can be framed of other lips—either that, or it will fall flat and stale and of no consequence whatever.

The trial long ago resolved itself into a matter of Frank vs. Conley.

It is the defendant's word against the negro's.

Both have self interest in the verdict—the life of one or the other must pay the forfeit of Mary Phagan's murder.

The forthcoming statement of Frank, and the rebuttal of the character witnesses, constitute the two events ahead that may, within themselves, make or mar this case, as one may come to view it eventually.

And it is this situation, no doubt, that holds up the interest to-day, as the fourth week begins—for, despite all that has gone before, the case is not yet nearly ended, and there still remains many things undetermined.

PASTOR TRIES TO SAVE M'NAUGHTON

Savannah Minister Declares That Flanders, Alleged Victim, Died From Natural Causes.

SAVANNAH, GA., Aug. 18.—The Rev. John S. Wilder, pastor of the South Side Baptist Church, has returned from Atlanta, where he appeared before the State Prison Commission in behalf of Dr. W. J. McNaughton, the Emanuel County physician who is in jail under sentence of death in September for the alleged murder of Fred Flanders.

All of the evidence has now been presented to the Prison Commission with the exception of one or two affidavits, which will be sent to Atlanta early next week. The commission is expected to act on the case on the first Monday in September. Immediately after the decision of the commission is rendered the matter will be taken up with the Governor. Everything will have to be done during the first week in September, because September 5 is the date set for the execution.

"I feel that nothing short of a pardon would vindicate an innocent man and correct one of the greatest mistakes ever made in Georgia," said Mr. Wilder, who expresses the utmost confidence that Dr. McNaughton will not be allowed to hang. "I have always contended that Flanders was not murdered, but died from natural causes. I think this has now been indisputably established. We have the sworn statements of seventeen of the most prominent physicians in Georgia, including an expert who gives more arsenic possibly than any other physician in the Southern States, all of them agreeing that Flanders did not have the symptoms of arsenic poisoning, but the symptoms of nephritis, or Bright's disease. If these medical authorities are correct, then no murder has been committed, and Dr. McNaughton should go free."

Patient Dies After 300 Neck Operations

BALTIMORE, Aug. 18.—After undergoing more than 300 operations during three years for the removal of a growth in his throat, George McDowell, 31 years old, formerly of Spartanburg, S. C., died in a hospital here while surgeons were making a last attempt to save his life.

For the last eighteen months McDowell breathed through a silver tube inserted in his throat. He had been under so many operations that he became immune to the effects of cocaine.

Autos Can't Speed At Five Points, Says Recorder Preston

Recorder Pro Tem. Preston Monday morning stressed the dangers of pedestrians at Five Points.

C. W. Green, a chauffeur, was on trial at the time for running his car against Herman Lichtenstein, a merchant, Saturday afternoon and jamming him against a trolley car. Traffic Officer Burnett and several witnesses testified that Green had speeded the car in an effort to beat the trolley car. Lichtenstein was in the act of boarding the car when struck. He was only slightly hurt. Green was fined $15.75, and Judge Preston warned that autoists must run slowly and use the greatest of care at Five Points.

THE PLAY THIS WEEK

Sailors in Movie Romance.

"Victory," a wonderful motion picture in five reels, will be the attraction all of this week at the Grand, daily matinee at 2:30 and night at 8:30.

The picture was made in Cuba by a company which had the aid and the permission of the United States Navy. It is a story of love and war. It shows exactly what the navy does in peace and what might happen in war. The Battleship Utah plays a most prominent part, and in the land and sea battles hundreds of sailors and marines are used.

After the picture was exhibited privately in Washington last month, Acting Secretary of the Navy Franklin Roosevelt gave the owners a strong letter of indorsement.

Many Surprises at Forsyth.

Pleasant surprises feature the bill at the Forsyth this week, taking the place of some of the acts announced to appear. In one case sickness prevented a feature coming on from New York and an accident broke the promise of another of the acts. However, these two happenings made it possible to secure Toots Paka and her Hawaiian dancers and musicians, and brings the famous Castillions, in their wonderful novelty act to Atlanta. The bill is going to be better than originally announced.

Willie Weston will appear in character songs and recitations. The other numbers on the bill will be Clayton Kennedy and Mattie Rooney in a piano playing, singing and dancing novelty; Forster and Lovette in a comedy idea; the Nikko Troupe of Japanese, the best in the profession, and Grace Demar, a pretty and entertaining comedienne.

INSTITUTIONS PUT ON HALF RATIONS

Factional Fight in the Tennessee General Assembly Hits That State's Wards.

NASHVILLE, Aug. 18.—The Tennessee General Assembly is scheduled to reassemble Tuesday so that the appropriation bill may be passed and prevent suffering in some of the charitable institutions of the State.

With the fall months approaching and some of the State institutions subsisting on half rations, the question grows serious with them when winter supplies must soon be purchased and the available means now being far less than the required sums for the summer months.

The institutions mostly in need of aid are the State Industrial School, the School for the Mutes, the Blind School and the Boys' Reformatory.

Notwithstanding these appeals that have come from trustees of these institutions, there is grave doubt as to whether the prolonged session of the General Assembly may be gotten in working order at any time soon because of the intense feeling that exists over the fight between the Democrats and the Fusionists.

M'KEE TO MAKE FIGHT FOR JOB IN SENATE

Atlanta Postmaster Counts on Aid of Strong Political Influence in Committee.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—The Postoffice Department has received information that Postmaster Hugh L. McKee at Atlanta will refuse to send in his resignation as asked for by Postmaster General Burleson in a letter dated August 14, but will throw his case before the Senate Committee on Postoffices when the name of his successor comes up for confirmation.

Notwithstanding the fact that he will not receive any support from Senator Hoke Smith or from Representative William Schley Howard, of Atlanta, Mr. McKee can count on aid enough to make a fight that will rank with the contest in the Gainesville office, when Mrs. Helen D. Longstreet opposed being supplanted.

"I will leave it to the people of Atlanta to decide whether or not my administration as Postmaster of Atlanta, is inefficient. The patrons of the office I consider more competent to judge than the Postoffice Department officials in Washington," said Postmaster Hugh McKee Monday, following the receipt of a communication from First Assistant Postmaster General Roper Sunday demanding his resignation within the shortest time possible.

"Further than this I do not wish to discuss the subject at this time," declared the Postmaster. "Within a few days I will prepare a reply to the letter received by me from my superior officer. I am not inclined to exploit my grievances with the Government in the public press."

"If there is inefficiency in the Atlanta Postoffice I repeat that I do not know it. While the time I have yet to serve is short, my term expiring in January, to the best of my knowledge I am guilty of no violation of departmental rules and see no reason why I should not serve out my full term.

"The report of the Postoffice Inspectors which was reported to have been submitted to the head of the department several months ago, it has been stated, contained all sorts of charges against me. I have never seen the report and do not know that there was one prepared, hence I am still in the dark."

Widow of Wealth 'Turkey Trots' at 78

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., Aug. 18.—In proceedings to test the competency of Mrs. Mary N. Gray to manage her $50,000 estate, it was testified that the 78-year-old widow had these fads:

Joy rides from Honesdale to New York.

Turkey trotting in the Wayne Hotel corridor.

Giving huge tips.

Wearing four skirts and a sweater to keep out evil spirits.

Robert H. Gray, of Denver, a nephew, says her physician has drawn exorbitant fees.

Woman Prefers Jail Term to Probation

When Mrs. Lutie Allen, 19, of No. 59 Tennelle street, vehemently refused to go on probation, Monday, she was allowed to pass 24 hours additional behind prison bars to "think it over."

Mrs. Allen, whose break with her husband, C. C. Allen, resulted in both husband and wife appearing before Recorder Pro Tem Preston last week, was arrested by Policemen Scott and McDaniel early Monday at Five Points at the request of relatives who wished her placed on probation.

Down Went His Gum, On Went His Train

ATLANTIC CITY, Aug. 18.—Chewing gum or tobacco while on duty has been forbidden the motormen by the management of the Short Line road.

Glen Grice bought a penny stick of gum at Ocean City just before he boarded his train for a run to this city. After the train had attained a 30-mile gait, Grice swallowed the gum. It lodged in his throat and shut off his wind.

The motorman fell over unconscious and the train, heavily loaded with passengers, ran for three miles before the conductor could stop it.

U. S. Will Cremate Dead in Canal Zone

Organist Would Bar Babies at Recitals

Eugene Wyatt, famous English organist, was of the opinion Monday that if he performed a second time at the Auditorium-Armory he would of a necessity exclude infants in arms from his audience.

His recital Sunday afternoon was frequently interrupted by the ambitious wails of prospective Carusos, Gardens and an occasional Scotti. Professor Wyatt is the first of a number of organists to be presented by the Music Festival Association before an official city organist is selected. He made a fine impression on a large audience.

THAW'S ESCAPE FROM MATTEAWAN ASYLUM COMPLETE

Legal Experts Declare He Can Not Be Brought Back From Another State

HARRY THAW NOT CAUGHT; SENDS MOTHER NOTE

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Aug. 18.—A warrant charging Harry K. Thaw with conspiracy in connection with his escape from Matteawan was issued this afternoon to District Attorney Conger, of Dutchess County, who will attempt to use it as the basis of an indictment. If Thaw is captured in another State, said the District Attorney, an effort will be made to extradite him on the conspiracy charge. It was said that another warrant charging bribery would be demanded.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Harry K. Thaw, who escaped Sunday from the Matteawan Asylum for the criminal insane, to-day wrote to his mother, Mrs. William Copley Thaw, at the Hotel Gotham, in this city, saying he was well and that he would meet her at Elmhurst, the Thaw summer home at Cresson, Pa.

Mrs. Thaw said she would leave at 9:25 to-morrow morning for Elmhurst. Thaw's note was in an envelope apparently addressed by one of the men who had aided him to escape. It had been mailed from Station O in this city at midnight Sunday.

Over the top Thaw had written: "Night letter. Fifty words. Twenty-five cents." He had evidently intended to send it by telegraph. The note was addressed to Mrs. William Thaw, Hotel Gotham, New York City, and read as follows:

All well; will take a rest before going to Elmhurst, as I might be asked for interviews and do not wish to refuse, yet do not care to make any statement. Hope H. and G. arrived safe and that you will go home together. Have sent short note to New York Evening Journal. H. T. K.

Thaw, together with a man believed to be Dr. W. B. Holden, of No. 220 West Ninety-eighth street, spent the night at the Lennox Hotel in Lennox, Mass., according to Richard A. Stanley, proprietor of a hotel there. About 8 o'clock a dust covered Palmer-Singer touring car containing two men drove up to the Lennox Hotel, which is a favorite stopping place for tourists in that section of New England. One man registered as W. B. Holden, of New York and the other as P. H. Sims.

They spent the night there, leaving about 6:30 o'clock this morning in the direction of Pittsfield. Their car had the appearance of hard usage and both men were stained and travel weary. Sims avoided other guests and refused to enter the dining room.

This morning when newspapers bearing the picture of Thaw were received at the hotel, Stanley at once identified "Sims" as Thaw. Over the long distance telephone it was said by the [illegible] both men left [illegible] any breakfast, Sims driving the car.

At Dr. Holden's office it was said that he is out of town making an automobile tour. He was last heard from near Saratoga, it was said, when his automobile had broken down.

Dr. Holden's asisstant denied that the doctor knew Harry Thaw.

The news from Lennox effectually stopped a search of the seas by wireless, as it was evident that the clews to the effect that Thaw sailed from South Norwalk, Conn., in a yacht with a yellow funnel were false.

He had also been reported from Danbury, Conn., and Newport, R. I. but the authorities threw aside all clews and theories save the Lennox trail.

The District Attorneys have begun plans for the detention of Thaw if he is found in another State. An effort will be made to hold Thaw on the charge that he bribed officials at Matteawan.

Evelyn Nesbit Fears Thaw.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, estranged wife of the fugitive, has hired private detectives to guard her.

"Harry Thaw is just as likely to appear at the corner of Broadway and Forty-second street and demand admittance to the theater where I am playing as he is to go anywhere else," said Mrs. Thaw. "He is dangerous and desperate and I fear him. So do his relatives fear him. When I woke up this morning the first thing I did was to thank God that I had been spared my life the night Harry was free. Harry can not be quieted over 24 hours. If he is on a yacht I will feel safer, but he has all the cunning of a maniac and it would be just like him to throw off his pursuers by pretending to sail for some foreign country. Thaw's escape proves that if one has money he can do anything."

Charging conspiracy in helping Thaw to escape, warrants were issued at Poughkeepsie to-day by Justice Morschauser for Richard Butler, Thomas Flood, Eugene Duffy, Mich[illegible]Keefe and Roger Thompson. [illegible]plaint of District Attorney [illegible]lum Guard Howard H. Barnum, who saw Thaw escape, was held on charges of bribery and neglect as a public officer. It was Barnum who was at the asylum gates as Thaw fled.

Thaw's Escape Dramatic.

Thaws escape by plot after five years of futile fighting in the New York courts combine all the romantic and sensational elements of fiction. From the moment that he dashed through the gates, eluding Keeper H. H. Barnum, while milk was being delivered at the institution, Thaw disappeared as completely as though the earth had swallowed him up.

District Attorney Whitman says Thaw can not be extradited if located.

"There is no indictment pending against Thaw in New York and he can not be brought back because he was legally adjudged insane after being acquitted of murder," said Mr. Whitman.

A rigid investigation is going on at the Matteawan Institution following ugly hints that Thaw had collusion inside the institition to aid his escape. Barnum was grilled so unmercifully that he nearly broke down. Time after time he declared that he used every means in his power to keep the prisoners safely. It was said that application would be made both to Governor Sulzer and Lieutenant Governor Glynn at Albany for a State investigation.

The only satisfactory method of finding Thaw, according to the police, is to fix the identity of the men who were waiting for him outside the institution with two automobiles. Something is known of these men. Ten days ago two men calling themselves Richard J. Butler and Michael O'Keefe, appeared at the Holland Hotel in Beacon, or Fishkill Landing as it was formerly known. They spent money freely and devoted considerable time to scouting about the country.

In answer to queries they said they were preparing to locate for the summer and wanted to find a quiet, restful spot. Friday evening they returned in an eighty-horsepower automobile. The size and strength of the car also caused much curiosity. They had with them men who registered as Roger Thompson and Eugene Duffy. A little later the party was joined by a fifth man, who registered as Thomas Flood. It was he who took the launch to Beacon. Flood was afterward identified as the reckless driver of the touring car who took Thaw across the Connecticutt State line at 70 miles an hour. He was the most reckless of the party.

Saturday morning the men left the Holland early and were not seen about the hotel again. From the talk of the men an impression arose that they were professional gun-fighters recruited from gangs in this city and were paid liberally to risk getting Thaw to safety. One of them, after drinking considerably in the barroom at the Holland Hotel, said: "It was his business to help good fellows."

Reward of $500 Offered.

Following the escape, Superintendent Raymond F. C. Kieb, of Matteawan Asylum, offered a reward of $500 for Thaw's arrest as a "dangerous fugivtive."

Dr. Kieb's belief is that Thaw made his way around Long Island and is now bound for Europe. Dr. Kieb feels that his personal reputation and integrity as a public official are at stake, and has personally hired a private detective agency to trail Thaw.

So closely has Roger O'Mara, the Pittsburg private detective, been connected with Thaw since the shooting of White that some persons jumped to th conclusion that O'Mara was concernd in some way with Thaw's escape. This was heightened by the fact that one of the men at the Holland Hotel slightly resembled him. Another posed as "Roger" Thompson. A Pittsburg telegram states, however, that O'Mara was in Pittsburg yesterday.

Mrs. Mary Thaw, mother of Harry K. Thaw, who has spent nearly a milli nodollars in trying to restore his liberty, was surprised to learn of her son's escape. She said she had come here in response to a requst from Harry that she pay him a visit.

The New York police department is keenly interested in the search for Thaw and have sento ut a general alarm with a description of the fugitive. The detective bureau will flood the country with circulars bearing Thaw's picture.

Escape Made Without Hitch.

The escape of Thaw was planned with the utmost precision and went through without a hitch. Thaw arose at his usual hour Sunday. After he had taken his breakfast he went into the storeroom, where he has been employed to do odd jobs. After spending a few minutes there, he went into the exercising yard. He wore a straw hat, which was usual for him, and he was otherwise attired for the outside. Keeper Barnum was in the yard at the time.

In a listless voice Thaw bid the keeper good-morning and remarked about the heat.

Then he took several turns up and down the inclosure and leaned against the gate. For many months Thaw had assumed the same attitude at the same spot and Barnum paid no particular attention to him. At 7:45 the milkman who supplied the institution with milk drove up and rang the gong. Barnum looked through the peephole, saw who it was and opened the gate. No sooner had the milkman entered than Thaw galvanized into activity. With the spring of a panther he was through the gate.

Just a short time before a roadster apparently had broken down outside the asylum's gate. The driver got down beneath the machine and was tinkering with it when the milk wagon drove up.

As soon as the institution's gate opened the repairs apparently were made, for the driver climbed into the machine and was just about to start when Thaw bounded through the gate.

Wild Race for Liberty.

The fugitive leaped into the machine, instantly the power was turned on and the machine sprang forward, about a mile farther on the roadster overtook the 80-horsepower touring car which had been seen at the hotel and Thaw was transferred.

Then began one of the wildest and most spectacular automobile rides in history. At Stormville, ten miles east of Matteawan, persons declared that five men surrounded Thaw in the touring car and that each clasped a revolver in his hand, evidently prepared to shoot down anyone who interfered with the car's progress. Pedestrians and carriage drivers east of Stormville said the touring car was going nearly 80 miles an hour. Many persons were nearly run down and killed.

Patrick Buckley, who was in charge of the storeroom yesterday at Matteawan, said that Thaw gave no indication of excitement.

"He came into the storeroom about 9 o'clock," said Buckley. "He said good morning, Mr. Buckley." I replied, 'Good morning, Mr. Thaw'; how do you feel this morning." He walked among the tables for a few minutes. His manner was just the same as it had always been. He was perfectly calm."

In fact, but two employees of the institution did see Thaw gain his liberty. They were Keeper Barnum and Mrs. James Maher, a laundress who was in a high tower overlooking the exercise grounds and the roadway.

According to Mrs. Maher's story, two automobiles, one a touring car, and another a roadster, passed the hospital shortly after 7 o'clock. The roadster stopped in front of the gate while the big six-cylinder car sped on to the foot of Lowery's Hill, almost a mile beyond the hospital.

There it stopped and the doors on both sides were opened for quick action. Mrs. Maher kept her eyes on the machine outside the gates. Although the driver got out and began to tinker with the mechanism, the motor kept humming and there were many loud explosions from the exhaust.

William Hickey's milk cart rumbled up to the gate while the roadster's motor was humming and thumping. Mrs. Maher said that as Thaw dashed through the gate he waved his arms and cried, "Go, go! For God's sake, go!"

Keeper Barnum was stunned for a moment by the quickness of the escape. Then he notified Superintendent Keb, who called up the Sheriff and notified police headquarters in this city.

Thaw got fully ten minutes start on his pursuers, being headed straight for Connecticut.

Harry Thaw Joins John A. Chaloner's 'Who's Looney' Club

Harry Kendall Thaw now is eligible for membership in the "Who's Looney Now?" Club of which John Armstrong Chaloner is charter and only member up to date.

The cases of Thaw and Chaloner are remarkable in their similarity. Each of them is officially insane in New York. Neither of them are insane, officially, anywhere else.

Chaloner escaped from Bloomingdale Asylum, where he had been imprisoned by relatives, in a gasoline launch.

Thaw escaped from Matteawan Asylum, where he had been imprisoned by the State, in an automobile and yacht.

Both men are of immensely women who had attained promiwealthy families. Both married nence before their marriage. Amelie Rives, Chaloner's wife, was noted as a novelist. Evelyn Nesbit, Thaw's wife, had achieved fame as a stage beauty and artist's model.

BIG SENDOFF IS GIVEN PATHFINDERS AS THEY START ON WAY TO PACIFIC

Cheered by hundreds of lusty-voiced good roads rooters and with the martial strains of the Fifth Regiment band and the hearty good wishes and godspeeds of scores of Atlanta's most prominent citizens and officials ringing in his ears, E. L. Ferguson, official "pathfinder" for the all-Southern open-the-year-round transcontinental highway, Monday morning glided up Alabama street to Peachtree for the start of the long auto-hike to San Francisco.

Mr. Ferguson's "official" family consisted of Mrs. Ferguson, two little Fergusons and Hugh Grant, representing The Sunday American, inaugurator of the monster campaign, who will accompany the party as far as Birmingham.

There seldom has been a warmer "sendoff" than that prepared for "Pathfinder" Ferguson and party on Monday morning. All were in readiness—those entered in the last week, including the Mayor, the chief of police and the fire chief—and scores of other prominent citizens and autoists besides.

Makeup of the Parade.

First came the Fifth Regiment band, followed by the trans-continental car occupied by Mr. Ferguson and party and in the order named, Mayor Woodward, in his private car; Chief Beavers, Fire Chief Cummings and other city officials, in addition to scores of cars piloted by the drivers who compete from time to time at the 'Drome. A number of motorcyclists were also in the line of march.

Stretched out on long, snaky Peachtree, after the departure from The Georgian-American office on East Alabama street, the parade assumed an imposing appearance, much to the delight and admiration of enthusiastic citizens.

The crowd caught the "drift" of the affair. This was no mere parade. Here was a man, without a peer in the art of "trail blazing," starting out for far-away San Francisco, from Atlanta—obviously a monster project in which Atlantans should take particular pride and one filled with all sorts of possibilities, not only for the Gate City of the South, but the entire Southland, including the great Southwest, and the Pacific Coast country.

Big Papers Behind Project.

With these things in mind they gave this man Ferguson a send-off which will be heralded all the way to 'Frisco, through the medium of a score of leading Southern newspapers, including The Georgian and American, The Birmingham News, The Montgomery Advertiser, The New Orleans Item, The Dallas Times-Herald and The Houston Daily Post.

Mr. Ferguson left Atlanta with virtually every detail of the first lap to Birmingham complete. Traveling almost due west from Atlanta, the party will reach the Georgia-Alabama line at Tallapoosa late Monday afternoon. Here the party will spend the night, resuming the journey early Tuesday morning in company with President John Craft, of the Alabama Good Roads Association, and State Highway Commissioner Keller, who will make the entire trip through Alabama.

Arriving at Anniston early Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Ferguson and party will be received officially by the Mayor, the president of the Chamber of Commerce and other prominent citizens and officials. The Alabama city, it is understood, has planned a big reception for the tourists following a lively campaign conducted recently in the interest of good roads between Anniston and Birmingham.

Birmingham Plans Greeting.

In line with tentative plans, as a result of a choice of two routes between Anniston and Birmingham, Mr. Ferguson probably will decide to spend Tuesday night in Anniston, leaving there Wednesday morning. Pell City and Riverside will be reached in the order named; Wednesday night will be passed en route, and Birmingham, the end of the first lap of the long journey, will be reached shortly before noon Thursday.

If reports are accurate, the Magic City good roads boosters will give the transcontinental tourists a reception and send-off never before equaled in the Alabama metropolis. Prominent officials of the Alabama Good Roads Association, city and county officials, representatives of The Birmingham News and others, headed by Nappi's Band, will meet the party several miles outside of the city and escort it downtown, where a monster demonstration has been planned.

From Birmingham the tourists will go direct to Montgomery, where Governor O'Neal, a good roads enthusiast, will receive them officially.

The remainder of the route will include Mobile, New Orleans, Dallas, Houston, El Paso, Phoenix, San Diego, Los Angeles and San Francisco. Mr. Ferguson expects to make San Francisco by October 1, perhaps sooner, after which he will return to Atlanta to begin a second trip to check up the results obtained on the first.

Apprehension as to possible blowouts, with resulting delays along the long route, were allayed Monday morning through the generosity of J. H. Kelly, of the Republic Rubber Company, who has offered to furnish Mr. Ferguson any number of Staggard-Tread tires throughout the entire trip.

Pathfinders Get Big Welcome at Austell.

AUSTELL, Aug. 18.—Pathfinder E. L. Ferguson and party arrived in Austell at 12:30 o'clock Monday afternoon on the first stage of The Hearst Sunday American transcontinental tour, and found a royal welcome awaiting them by Austell and Douglasville citizens. A few miles out from Austell they were met by a Douglasville delegation, who escorted them into Austell and on to Douglasville. The party was scheduled to reach Douglasville at 1:30 o'clock, where a reception and a dinner awaited them.

The trip from Atlanta to Austell was made in good shape. Four miles out from Atlanta a halt was made and the group of Atlanta escorts enjoyed a watermelon cutting. Talks were made by Mayor Woodward and Chief of Police Beavers, and everyone wished the pathfinding party good luck.

From Atlanta to the Chattahoochee River the tourists passed over a magnificent road, while the dirt road from the river to Austell was in fairly good shape. Reports here are that a good road will be found all the way to Tallapoosa, where the stop for the night will be made.

The Douglasville delegation was led by Mayor L. G. Upshaw, President J. T. Dake, of the Douglasville Commercial Club; R. E. Edwards, banker; J. F. Long, superintendent of the Douglasville Cotton Mill; J. M. Banks, merchant, and J. T. Lee and A. L. Gresham, County Commissioners.

BOTH GLYNN AND SULZER TRY TO RUN STATE

Each Sends Representative to Open Bids on $1,000,000 Capitol Construction Contract.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 18.—Forces were marshaled to-day for another week of bitter warfare in the fight between Governor William Sulzer, the impeached Executive of this State, and Lieutenant Governor Martin H. Glynn, for possession of the gubernatorial prerogatives pending Mr. Sulzer's trial on charges of high crimes and misdemeanors next month.

A physical clash between the two aspirants was expected to-day at a meeting of the Trustees of Public Buildings, which was scheduled to open bids for $1,000,000 worth of work on the burned portion of the Capitol. Under the law the secretary of the Governor is a member of the Trustees of the Public Buildings. Chester C. Platt, private secretary to Mr. Sulzer, was designated to go to the meeting and receive the bids turned in by State Architect Pilcher.

One of Many Tangles.

Lieutenant Governor Glynn, who claims to be the constitutional acting Governor, directed his secretary, Frank A. Tierney, to get the bids and to prevent them from falling into Platt's hands.

This was just one of the incidents in the tie-up of the State machinery which involves millions of dollars in various ways.

Governor Sulzer, accompanied by his bodyguard, arrived at the State Capitol at 10:30 o'clock and entered the executive suite. The Governor found a number of friends to greet him. He said he was feeling good and that Mrs. Sulzer, who had been suffering from a nervous collapse brought on by the political struggle, seemed in good spirits.

Not to Weaken, He Declares.

He said he had no intention of weakening in the fight to hold his office, although he did not want to precipitate an unseemly contest which might hurt the State's dignity in the eyes of the nation.

It is learned that the Sulzer array of counsel, headed by Judge D-Cady Herrick, are planning to base their defense of Sulzer's claims to the Governor's chair upon an article in New York's Constitution which provides that "no judicial officer of the State shall serve during impeachment proceedings." The Sulzer lawyers construe this to mean that all State officers may serve from the time they are impeached until actually convicted.

Many members of the Legislature arrived for a big conference of Tammany men, at which plans will be made for further warfare upon Governor Sulzer in the Legislature which meets to-morrow.

Tom Lawson Backs Anti-Tammany War.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 18.—A national campaign against Tammany, backed by a $2,000,000 fund and directed b, a country-wide committee, was indicated to-day in telegrams exchanged between Thomas W. Lawson and Lyn J. Arnold, president of the Knickerbocker Press, of this city.

Lawson, who promised a few days ago to give $100,0000 and to undertake the raising of twenty times that sum for fighting the Tamany organization, says New York City and State is under control of "the system" and that Sulzer's impeachment can be made an opportunity "to let daylight into the black cave where works the system's machinery."

"I believe," he adds, "if publicity is set to work rightly, as it can be with right men and money, hell will be to pay for the system before the Sulzer trial is half over."

Arnold replied, also by wire, that his paper to-morrow morning will call upon patriotic men to form a committee to receive cotributions and perfect an organization in Sulzer's behalf.

Prisoners in Coupe Until it Runs Down

HUNTINGTON, IND., Aug. 18.—J. W. Caswell, president of the Huntington Commercial Association, and his family of four children were prisoners last night in a rapidly moving electric coupe which Caswell could not stop.

For six hours the family rode about the streets of Huntington and made excursions out into the country, unable to halt the car. Early to-day the car stopped, its batteries exhausted, on the outskirts of the city and the Caswells walked home.

Birmingham Plans To Close Tenderloin

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 18.—Notice has been given again to occupants of houses in the segregated district of Birmingham that the tenderloin is to be abolished October 1.

While no positive statement has been made, it is understood that the section of the city heretofore designated as the segregated district will be used as a wholesale or jobbing section.

Flyer Falls Into Sea In English Air Contest

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

YARMOUTH, ENGLAND, Aug. 18. The around Great Britain flight begun by H. D. Hawker at Southampton Sunday and continued by Aviator Sydney Pickles, was again up in the air to-day when the aeroplane fell into the sea. Pickles took Hawker's place because of serious illness which beset the latter and planned to finish the 2,000-mile journey from Yarmouth.

Pickles arose at 5 o'clock and soared out over the sea, but his motor stopped and the aeroplane dropped. Neither Pickles nor the car was hurt and another effort will be made to resume the flight Wednesday.

Hitch Arises in Plan For Race With Lipton

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—As a result of a hitch in the negotiations between the present holders of the America cup and Sir Thomas Lipton it is considered likely that the 1914 contest yet may be called off.

It is learned that the point of variance is the old one regarding the size of the defending vessel, Sir Thomas wants the New York Yacht Club to say it will select a boat of the same size as the challenger to defend the trophy.

Atlanta-Made Show Goes to Vote Tuesday

The final outcome of the proposed permanent exhibit of Atlanta-made goods will be determined at the luncheon to be given the manufacturers of Atlanta by the Chamber of Commerce at the Hotel Ansley at 1 o'clock Tuesday. Nearly two of the four floors allotted for the exhibit are yet unsold.

Over 150 guests have been invited, and several prominent business men will speak.

Booster Bulletins Put Out Broadcast

The industrial and statistical bureau recently added to the Chamber of Commerce is preparing a bulletin of information about Atlanta's various manufacturing enterprises; also facts of interest to prospective manufacturers. These bulletins will be put out every two months, and will be distributed all over the country.

W. H. Leahy, who has charge of the bureau, says the bulletins are expected to bring a number of new concerns to Atlanta.

Wins Race to Dying Husband's Bedside

MEMPHIS, TENN., Aug. 18.—Mrs. R. P. Moore, wife of an insurance man of Jackson, Miss., arrived here to-day in time to take her husband's hand and hear his last words.

She came on a special Illinois Central train, an automobile hurried her from the special and she ran up three flights of stairs. Her husband grasped her hand feebly and said: "My dear, I have waited for you, good-bye," then fell back on his pillow dead.

Pin in Fondler's Dress Stabs Baby

Little Mary Lola Morris, 18-months-old daughter of W. T. Morris, secretary to Chief Beavers, was painfully injured Sunday when a dress pin was accidentally plunged into her arm to the bone.

The little girl was being fondled by a woman caller when the pin, which had become unfastened, stuck into her arm.

Rains Lift Water Famine in Kansas

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 18.—More than half of Kansas was covered by rains to-day and it is believed the heat and drouth has been effectively routed. Little benefit to corn was contained in the belated rains, but forage and alfalfa were helped.

Pools that had dried were refilled and live stock was relieved. The highest mark reached by the thermometer in Kansas City yesterday was 92.

LOCAL DRUGGIST MAKES STATEMENT

Says Dodson's Liver Tone Is the Best Remedy for Constipation and Shirking Liver He Has Ever Sold.

Every person who has tried Dodson's Liver Tone and knows how surely and gently it starts the liver to working and relieves biliousness will bear out the druggist's statement about Dodson's Liver Tone.

"It is a purely vegetable liquid, that entirely takes the place of calomel, harmless and pleasant to the taste, that has proven itself the most satisfactory remedy for a slow-working liver that most of our customers have ever tried. A large bottle sells for 50 cents and we do not hesitate to give the money back to any person who tries a bottle on the strength of this statement, and is not satisfied with the result."

In these days of doubtful medicines and dangerous drugs, a statement like the above is a pleasant assurance that Dodson's Liver Tone is a reliable remedy for both children and grown-ups. In buying a bottle for immediate or future use it is well to make sure you are getting the genuine Dodson's Liver Tone and not some spurious imitation that has copied our claims but do not stand back of their guarantee. You may be certain of getting the genuine if you go to any druggist for it.

JUDGE SLAIN, HIS BRIDE WOUNDED BY EX-WIFE

W. S. Godbee Shot to Death by Divorcee in the Streets of Millen, Ga.

MILLEN, GA., Aug. 18.—Judge W. S. Godbee is dead and his wife fatally wounded from shots fired by Mrs. Edna Godbee, the divorced wife of Judge Godbee.

Five years ago Mrs. Edna Godbee sued for and obtained a divorce. Less than a year ago Judge Godbee married Miss Florence Boyer, of Williamsport, Pa. They lived at the Estelle Hotel here.

This morning about 9 o'clock Mrs. Edna Godbee walked into the postoffice just as Judge Godbee and his wife were leaving. She immediately began shooting them in the back.

The judge was killed outright and his bride has only a slight chance to live.

Mrs. Edna Godbee walked to her home and has not been arrested yet.

Judge Godbee was a member of the Board of County Commissioners and a large landowner. Mrs. Edna Godbee comes from one of the oldest and most respected families in this section. She was a Miss Perkins, daughter of Mills Perkins.

The shooting created intense excitement; many persons being on the street at the time.

Sees Wrath of Lord In Drouth in Kansas

ZION CITY, ILL., Aug. 18.—"Kansas and adjoining States have reaped a harvest of wrath of the Lord. It will do them no good to pray for rain. The drouth which has affected the land there has been the Lord's direct answer and warning that he will not send rain to grow hogs to pollute the people."

This explanation of the drouth in Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri and Nebraska where corn crops were ruined, was offered by Wilbur Glenn Voliva, successor of John Alexander Dowie, as the head of Zion City.

Bell-Swenson.

At the First Presbyterian Church in Birmingham Saturday morning Mr. Joseph J. Swenson and Miss Genae Bell, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Bell, were married. The invitations were limited to a few friends, who gathered at the appointed hour to witness the ceremony, with Dr. J. S. Foster officiating.

The bride wore a traveling suit of blue cloth. Her maid of honor was Miss Josephine Aldrich, of Aldrich, who also wore a becoming tailored suit, and both carried shower bouquets of roses and valley lilies. The bridegroom met the bride at the altar, accompanied by his best man, Mr. Henry J. Noble.

The bride is a member of one of Birmingham's pioneer families. The bridegroom is connected with one of the largest industrial corporations in the district. They will make their home at North Haven after their wedding journey.

Out-of-town guests at the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. Jordan, of Atlanta; Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Aldrich, of Rajah Lodge; Miss Helen Robertson, of Atlanta; Miss Mary Robertson, of Atlanta; Miss Mary Robertson, of El Paso, Texas; Mrs. Swenson, mother of the bridegroom, from Atlanta, and the Misses Easley, of Anniston.

Miss Tucker Hostess.

Miss Helen Tucker entertained at an informal party Saturday afternoon at her home in Juniper street.

The game of "up-jinks" was played. Miss Nellie Dodd won the first prize, a pair of white silk hose, and Miss Cornelia Walker cut the consolation, a silver picture frame.

Among the guests were Misses Emily Robinson, Nellie Dodd, Martha McGill, Rebecca Harrold, Hallie Crawford, Elizabeth Crawford, Virginia Walker, Cornelia Walker, Marion Dean, Carrilu Born, Emily West, Ludie Speer, Almeta Jackson, Irene Thrower, Catherine Hook, Eleanor Hook, Nina McCleskey, Florine Connally, Ruth Yarbrough and Marie Stoddard.

D. A. R. Scholarship Notice.

Applicants for the Bessie Chandler scholarship in the Washington Seminary, which will be awarded by the Atlanta Chapter, D. A. R., are requested to send in their applications at once to Mrs. McDowell Wolff, No. 9 Peachtree place, where they will have immediate attention and conditions for scholarship will be explained. Competitive examination will not be necessary, as heretofore given out. The time for application will expire September 3, and those wishing to get a full four-year course should apply at once to Mrs. Wolff, who is chairman of the educational committee of the Atlanta Chapter, which is giving the scholarship free.

St. Anthony's Guild.

St. Anthony's Guild of St. Anthony's Church will give a lawn party Wednesday afternoon and evening from 4 to 10 o'clock on the church lawn.

Sack races, potato races and all kinds of games will be played, for which prizes will be given. In the evening there will be a musical program to interest the grown-ups.

Father Jackson has returned from his vacation.

Miss Beatie Honor Guest.

Miss Josephine Smith will entertain at a spend-the-day party Tuesday in honor of her guest, Miss Eva Beatie, of New York. Those invited are Misses Edwina Harper, Emily Wimpy, Lula Ponder, Kathleen Law, Julia Dunning, Marie Norris and Eva Beatie.

Miss Edwina Harper will entertain at a bridge luncheon Wednesday morning in honor of Miss Eva Beatie, of New York.

Akridge-Muirhead.

The wedding of Miss Genevieve Akridge to Mr. W. E. Muirhead took place Saturday afternoon, August 16, at the home of the bride, No. 124 Mangum street, the Rev. A. C. Ward officiating.

Watson-Lagerquist.

Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Watson, of Albany, Ga., announce the engagement of their daughter, Emily Irene, to Mr. Frederick Wilson Lagerquist, of Albany, the wedding to take place September 26.

Wilson's Own Dentist In Navy, Mann Charge

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18. — The charge that "the navy is making a farce" of the retirement age law, and the further disclosure that President Wilson has appointed his personal dentist to the reserve corps are made by Minority Leader Mann.

"While the retirement age in the navy is 62," said Mr. Mann, one of thees new dental surgeons is now over seventy-six. But he happens to come from the same town as the Secretary of the Navy. One of the surgeons is 62 years and another who is 42, was the personal dentist of the President."

Mob at Gadsden Is Thwarted by Sheriff

GADSDEN, ALA., Aug. 18.—Dave Tarvin, a former inmate of the Georgia Asylum for the Insane, was rushed from here to Anniston last night to escape a mob after he had attacked a young white girl of this city.

Sheriff Lister had information that a mob was forming and with the prisoner in an automobile ran through a crowd of several hundred persons that was rushing toward the jail to storm it.

Tarvin's victim is reported to be dying.

Cool Days Promised As Breezes Return

The breezes, which had been on a strike for the past few days, were back at work Monday, keeping Atlanta's business section cool. The thermometer registered 70 degrees at dawn, after a night cool enough to make a blanket appreciated.

Although September is usually one of the hottest months in Atlanta, Forecaster VonHerrmann says it will be an unusually cool month this year.

Fair weather Monday night and Tuesday is predicted by the local bureau.

Savannah Expects Big Seaboard Offices

SAVANNAH, Aug. 18.—In connection with the removal of the division headquarters of the Seaboard Air Line Railroad from Savannah to Americus, effective Saturday, there is a report that the Seaboard system contemplates the removal of its general headquarters from Portsmouth, Va., to Savannah.

The rumor has it that the Seaboard contemplates the erection of an eight-story building in Savannah upon the property recently acquired by that road, in which its general headquarters will be installed.

Bryan's Peace Dove War Eagle in Action

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—Bryan's dove of peace is a war eagle—at least the treaty seal of the State Department so represents it.

The seal's design is an ancient coin representing a war eagle preparing to attack its prey and a figure of the war god, Zeus. The martial emblems are placed on all treaties signed by the Secretary.

Brass and Iron Beds At "Blue Tag" Prices

The "Blue Tag" Furniture Sale is a big, broad-gauged affair, bringing savings on all the furniture (except contract price furniture) in this big five-floor furniture store.

To-day's news is of brass and iron beds. The list below serves only as a guide to what you may expect—it is by no means complete. Not one of these beds is a specially bought sale bed, but rather of that dependable soundness and worth that characterize all Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose merchandise at regular prices and "blue-tagged" regardless.

It is worthy of note that the lacquering on even the most inexpensive brass bed that we carry is the best.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

YOU MUST DECIDE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am in love with a young man who lives in the same neighborhood and is of a very high standard. He has told me he loves me and would like me to become his wife, but as he is a Hebrew and I am a Christian would like your advice, for I can not live without him. G. M. S.

This is a matter too serious for a third party to determine. Marriages of this nature are sometimes happy, but the risk is great. When it means an estrangement from one's family and friends, I would throw my influence against it.

BE PERSISTENT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 19 and deeply in love with a young lady one year my senior. One day I proposed to her and she said her parents would not permit the marriage because of the difference in nationality.

Please let me know what to do, for I love her. HEARTBROKEN.

You are too young to marry even though you had their consent, so do not feel discouraged. Go on loving her; attend to your business duties faithfully; develop yourself mentally, and don't despair or worry. Make yourself such a desirable suitor their objections will vanish.

DON'T MAKE THE EFFORT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a girl of 18 and in love with a man one year my senior. We have never kept company. He tells everyone he loves me, but while he is in my presence I fail to see it. How may I find out if he is true to me? I. H.

The man who tells "everyone" he loves a girl, and gives her no evidence, doesn't love her very much.

Unless you have made mutual vows of love, he can not be untrue to you. A man must make vows before he can break them. Do not fret yourself about him. Time for that when you are engaged.

YOU ARE A LITTLE EXACTING.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18, and for the past four months have been keeping steady company with a young man of 20. When I first became acquainted with this young man he was making a nice salary, but I told him that if he wanted to go with me he must change his profession, which he did, therefore starting at the bottom of the ladder again. It is also understood that he will not care to be married before three years, to which my parents and myself agree, provided we become engaged in about a month from now, which he absolutely refuses to do, claiming that he does not want to become engaged before next year. My parents have therefore forbidden my going with him under any other conditions.

Now, do you think that if he really loves me, as he claims he does, he would allow a matter of a few months to break our keeping company? The only reason he gives for not wanting to be engaged is that he is making a small salary, but if I and my folks are satisfied, I don't see why he should object. IN DOUBT.

He gave up his profession for you, starting at the bottom of the ladder again. I think he has conceded his share, and, under the circumstances, you should not nag him into an engagement until he is ready. Love is worth too much to risk it by the exacting attitude which I am afraid you are taking.

Two Birds—One Stone.

Norah had arrived from Erin's Isle a week before, and was with difficulty being "broken in" to the routine of an English household. Cleanliness was not a very strong point with her, and her cooking, apart from "spuds," was hardly all that could be desired.

"If you are not quite sure on any point, come and ask me at once," said her mistress.

Dinner was just about to be served when there was a clatter along the hall, and the breathless Norah poked her head around the dining room door.

"Please, ma'am," she asked, "an' how will I be knowin' when the puddin' is done enough?"

"Stick a knife into it," said her mistress, with a resigned air. "If the knife comes out clean, the pudding is ready to serve."

"Yes, ma'am," said Norah; "and I'll be after that crathur that's boilin' over."

"And, oh, Norah"—the mistress had an after-thought—"if the knife does not come out clean, you might stick all the rest of the knives into the pudding."

In a Nutshell

By MINNA IRVING.

WE heard with equanimity
That coal was soaring high,
We bore it when the price of meat
Went kiting to the sky;
When eggs and butter followed suit
We stood it like a sport,
But, lo, the worst has come at last—
The peanut crop is short.

Oh, what is summer time without
The tuber of delight?
We ought to bust the peanut trust,
We ought to make a fight;
We ought to put our woe in print,
We ought to go to court,
We ought to take the warpath when
The peanut crop is short.

The Mistakes of Jennie .:. By HAL COFFMAN

Being a Series of Chapters in the Life of a Southern Girl in the Big City

"No, no, my boy; I could not be so selfish."

CHAPTER XXV.

AFTER the row Jennie had with the installment man, she still owed $28 for her clothes. The man had come for his weekly payment on the clothes, which Tom had to pay to keep the man from literally tearing them off Jennie's back, for Jennie didn't have the money to pay him, and if Tom hadn't been there at the time Jennie would probably have had to do like other girls have done in such an emergency—gone out and GOT the money, never mind HOW.

When Jennie told Tom she still owed $28 for her clothes—that she foolishly bought and did not need—Tom left Jennie in the front room, saying he wanted to go in and talk to her mother a while.

Jennie's mother was lying in bed, and, sick as she was, managed a cheery smile at seeing Tom and told him she always regarded him as her boy, and that she had always hoped that some day he would marry Jennie. Tom did not tell Jennie's mother how much Jennie still owed on her clothes, for he knew that she had trouble enough without worrying any more. Instead, he told her that he had a little money saved up—for the time that Jennie would consent to marry him—and that he wanted her to take it and to go down to the beach somewhere, take a good rest, get well again and take Jennie with her.

At this the good woman cried and said over and over, as she patted Tom's hand:

"No, no, my boy. I could not be so selfish as to take your money that was meant for yours and Jennie's happiness."

A VERY NEAR THING .:. A Complete Short Story

VANSITTART was going to smash. At least, it looked ominously like it. Nobody said it openly. Nominally, nobody was supposed to even suspect that it was likely. But men whispered it to one another in the city; and when men whisper about a thing it is oftener far more serious than if they talked about it in their loudest voices.

"There's about one chance in a million for me!" he told himself. "If the Oriental Bank floats, I'm safe; if it closes down, I'm finished. And it will close down unless a miracle happens, and—Lily will know that the gods have given her her revenge!"

Vansittart's world would have been astonished, perhaps cynically amused, had it seen him now. After locking the door of his room from the inside, to render intrusion impossible, he opened a secret drawer in his desk by touching a spring, and took from it a bundle of letters and a photograph.

The letters were love letters, and the photograph that of a girl.

A fair-haired girl, with a pretty face, without Vansittart's pitiless power, but brave and patient, with love and faith in her eyes. And the letters had been written by a girl to the man to whom she had given her heart, whose wife she expected to be.

"By jove!" muttered Vansittart, as he put the letters down, "she's had to wait for her revenge, but it looks as if Fate is going to give it to her at last."

It had been an ordinary, commonplace story of a man's selfishness and falsity and a girl's outraged trust and love. Vansittart had been engaged to Lily Gordon, a girl clerk in the city, before he had begun to rise, and had left her without a word to fight life's battle for herself as soon as he began to grow rich.

Too Late.

"I was a cur, a mean cur!" he muttered. "But it's too late to think of it now. If I go down she'll know. Will she be glad, I wonder?"

He tried to laugh, but there was a harsh discordance in the sound. Replacing the letters and the photograph in the desk, he went out.

He felt he could not sit there waiting for ruin to come.

There was a man in the city, another speculator, named James Harper, whom Athol Vansittart had helped many times, by whose side he had stood in more than one threatening crisis. Harper had not the power to save him in his turn, but Vansittart felt that he must talk to someone if something in his brain were not to snap.

So he went to him now.

Harper was a keen-featured man, with a trick of half curving his lips in what promised to be a smile and never became one. He was alone in his office when Vansittart entered and grasped his hand cordially.

"You've come to talk over things, old chap?" he said. "I'm glad of it. I'd like to cheer you up. But wait a minute."

He closed the inner door.

"Anything wrong?"

"Oh, no; only a new girl I've got to help with my letters, and I don't want her to hear too much of our talk. Business is one thing, but a confidential chat between friends is another. I hope it's not so bad with you as some fools are making out?"

"I'm afraid some fools are rather wise," returned Vansittart, grimly. "It is no use blinking things. I'm done for if the Oriental closes down."

Harper's tone was sympathetic, but he was pretending to pick up something he had dropped on the floor and his eyes were very eager.

"Look here, Harper," Vansittard said with an effort; "I've come to you because I believe you're the only true friend I've got. As I said, I shall pull through if the bank stands firm. But I don't think it can. It's in a bad way itself, and if it can't raise a big loan practically, at once it will close its doors. And if it does that I can't face the music."

"Surely, it's not so bad as that?"

Very Desperate.

"I tell you it is!" Vansittard answered, fiercely. "I shall owe more than I can pay. I shall be disgraced as well as ruined. But I'm not going to stop to face it. Harper, if—if anything happens to me, do your best to prevent too much mud being thrown on my name. It's all you can do."

There was a threat of self-destruction in his tense expression, if not on his lips. Harper knew it, but he did not endeavor to stop him or to argue with him. He only gripped his hand once more, with a few conventional words of sympathy.

And when Vansittart had gone Harper laughed.

Laughed, and then sat considering and frowning, until he suddenly struck his hand on his desk with a low, triumphant exclamation, as though he had hit on a way of accomplishing something that had seemed impossible before.

He left his office hastily, and when he had gone the inner door opened and there came out a girl, with love and terror on her colorless face.

It was late before Vansittart went home. He had gone back to his office and waited for news, but none had come. He left the place at last with a morbid conviction strong on him that he would never return to it. He hailed a hansom, but the man had to ask him twice before he was told where to drive him.

It seemed to Vansittart a matter of indifference where he went. It was not that he had abandoned all hope. He clung to the gambler's belief that there is always a last chance. But he was too restless and excited to fix his mind on anything except the news he was waiting for.

Ah, what was that?

The Crash.

The street was quiet, all but deserted. There was a gas lamp opposite Vansittart's door, and the illumination was gleaming on a pink something. It was the placard of an evening newspaper which a hawker was offering for sale.

He hastened toward it. In bold, merciless letters, the words stared at him:

"FAILURE OF THE ORIENTAL BANK."

He bought a paper, oblivious that he gave a sovereign for it. In the space reserved for late news were two smudged lines, stating that the Oriental Bank had closed its doors that evening and posted a notice outside that they would not reopen on the morrow.

So it was all over. It was useless to hope against hope any longer. His career was finished. He was a ruined man, with disgrace awaiting him if he lived.

He let himself into his house with a latch key, and went straight to the library, where he had been in the habit of working. At first he switched the electric light on full, but at once lowered it to a tiny shimmer. No need of much light for what he was going to do!

A revolver was ready to hand when he opened a drawer. There was nothing else for him to do.

* * * * * * * *

"No, no! Listen to me, Athol. I've come to tell you—I've come to tell you it's a lie."

Lily was beside him, struggling with him to get the revolver away. He stared at her stupidly.

"A lie?"

"The placard. The bank was not stopped. Mr. Harper had the false placard and the two lines of false news put in one copy of the paper. I have proof of it; I have found the man who printed it!"

The Plot.

He was hard to convince. But she told him how she had been in the inner office while he was talking to Harper, and how, after he was gone, Harper's manner had been so suspicious that she had followed him to see what he meant to do. He had gone to a printer. It was not for a long time after he had left the shop, however, that she half forced and half frightened the printer to confess that Harper had paid him handsomely to turn out the sham placard and insert the two lines in the paper. He had said it was for a joke, but the girl had not believed it. She had guessed that he intended to use the placard and doctored newspaper to drive Vansittart to desperation by leading him to believe that all was lost.

"So I came here to tell you," she said. "I saw you come in, but you did not see me. So I had to knock, and when the servant opened the door I ran past her. I had seen the light flash from the window into the street, and that helped me to find my way to you. The placard is a lie!"

Vansittart looked at her; there was

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XXII.

SO agitated had Mrs. Danforth been at the news of Mary's break with Gordon Craig that she lay down on the couch in the tiny parlor until the dishes were washed and put away. This task the daughter performed quickly and noiselessly. She was thankful that her mother had asked no more questions just then, for she felt that she had not the courage to reply to them. Her work done, she glanced nervously at the clock. It was now a quarter past eight. Bert Fletcher would be here soon. She must prepare her mother for the call. She went into the parlor and, drawing a chair close to the couch, took the pale and worn woman's hand in hers.

She Started Nervously.

"Mother, dear," she said, "I think you ought to go to bed now, for you do not feel well enough to see company."

Mrs. Danforth started nervously. "Company!" she exclaimed. "Why, what company could you be expecting?"

Mary smiled bitterly at the suggestion implied by the question.

"That's true, mother," she said, a hard ring in her voice. "I am not troubled with friends or guests, am I? But this evening will be an exception, for I am expecting a caller—Mr. Fletcher."

Her mother sat up and eyed her keenly. "Mr. Fletcher?" she asked. "Is he the man who was so nice to you one evening last winter?" There was eagerness in the tone, and as she noted this the girl appreciated that her loving, gentle mother was actually anxious to have her marry if it would mean freedom from care for herself and the girl.

"Mary, why don't you answer me?" demanded Mrs. Danforth.

Mary started guiltily. "I beg your pardon, mother," she said. "Did you ask me a question? I must have been absorbed in my own thoughts. What did you ask, dear?"

"Only if this Mr. Fletcher is the man who brought you home one night in a cab when it was stormy?"

"Yes," assented Mary, "that is the man."

"Well, I remember that you once said he was very kind," remarked her mother, watching the girl's face.

"Yes," said Mary, "he is kind—even if he is not a cultured gentleman and does murder the king's English. But, after all, truth and fidelity are more than education and manners. I have had enough of men of culture and of nothing else." She tried to change her sharp speech into a laugh that her mother might not suspect how sore her heart was.

Mary Remembered.

The widow replied with one of her sighs, but this time the sound was indicative of hope and satisfaction.

"He evidently knows that you are a lady, and he treats you as if you were. So he must be something of a gentleman himself. I am ready to like him if he is good to you. Oh, my child," lifting one of her daughter's hands to her pale lips and holding it there, "nobody, not even you, knows what I have gone through in seeing you overworked and in trying to save and manage here at home. There have been times when but for you I would have prayed to die."

Mary remembered how, less than two hours ago, she had said to herself: "If it were not for mother I would want to die." But she smiled reassurance into her mother's face.

"Since we need each other, mother," she said, jestingly, "let us both determine to live for each other. And there's a better time coming for us both."

The mother looked at her anxiously. "You mean that, Mary? You are not keeping the truth from me or trying to pacify me by seeming hopeful when you are not, are you, dear?"

"No, mother," replied the girl. "I am speaking the truth when I say that I believe there is a better time coming for you."

She did not add "and for me." Perhaps she did not think of it.

"I do not like to seem inquisitive," Mrs. Danforth went on, "but I am wondering how long ago you broke your engagement to Gordon—Mr. Craig, I mean."

The girl hesitated a moment before replying, and she avoided her mother's gaze.

"Not so long ago," she said indifferently. "You know I always think that when people find they are not suited to each other it is best for them to agree to disagree with as little fuss and talk as possible."

There was so much finality in her manner that the elderly woman ventured to say no more about the Texan. Yet she was not satisfied, and soon asked timidly:

"This—this Mr. Fletcher—do you like him very much, Mary, my dear?"

"I have told you, mother," said the girl, "that he is a kind man, and has been good to me—so why should I not like him?"

Her mother began another question, but a ring at the bell checked it.

"Good Night, Dear."

"Good night, dear," she said, rising hastily and hurrying into her own room.

When the door had closed behind her mother, Mary stood, her hands over her eyes. Perhaps she was praying, perhaps trying to collect her thoughts. But as the bell sounded forth a second summons she went slowly into the kitchen and pressed the button releasing the catch of the lower front door. For another minute she stood poised as if now, at this last moment before her guest's arrival, she would escape him, would avoid receiving him. Then, recovering her self-control and courage, she passed out into the narrow hall, opened her front door and stood waiting for the man whose footsteps she heard on the stairs ascending toward her.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THE most restful way for spending one's vacation is to watch one's neighbors. If they are idle, it makes the one on a vacation just indignant enough to make his blood circulate, and if they are working, the sight of their labors makes his own idleness soothing in contrast.

The man who lived next door interested himself with the Lysander John Appleton family, who were occupying their summer home. He watched them the day they moved in: Two women of regal bearing, a boy with a forehead like a Mansard roof, and a meek-looking man who might be a servant, the Appleton family being an ideal American family.

It was the women who interested the idle man the most. They were of such queenly bearing and had such perfect figures he longed for the fingers and skill of a Rodin. "I never," he murmured, "saw more perfectly-formed women."

They entered the house, closed the door, and for a half hour there was no outward evidence of occupancy, and then the man on the side porch saw a woman emerge from the back door the sight of whom made him throw back his head and laugh.

She had a figure like that of a featherbed, and if she had ever had a waist line it had long ago moved up and become lost in the foothills of her mountainous bosom. She shook and quivered as she walked like a bowl of calves'-foot jelly, and while he gazed at her in bewilderment the door opened again and there emerged a younger woman so thin that she looked the same coming as going.

For a week he saw two women with perfect figures enter and emerge at the front door, and a feather bed and a bean pole from which garments drooped like a flag at half mast emerge and enter at the back door. Then one evening when he saw Lysander John sitting alone on the porch in front he walked across the lawn and asked for an explanation.

"They are the same women," said Lysander John sadly. "If you are interested, I will show you the means of the transformation."

He led the way upstairs to a dressing room where two long, vise-like garments hung over the back of a chair.

"The modern magician's wand," he said, pointing to two corsets."

The Ten Commandments of the Summer Wife

By DOROTHY DIX.

He is as a phonograph.

ARISE, sister, gird up thy straight front, put glad raiment upon thyself and take thy vacation: yea, take it though thou hast to fight for it with tooth and nail, for she that hath wrestled with the robber that lieth in wait in the butcher shop and the despoiler who abideth in the grocery store, and who hath provided the wherewithal her family is fed three times a day for three hundred and sixty-five days, needeth to slip the yoke for a space while the galled place healeth.

2. When thou takest thy vacation, go it alone. Be not as those foolish wives who say, "I have never been parted from my husband, and lo, where he goeth there will I go also," for belike thou hast gotten on thy husband's nerves and he would fain have a rest from thee.

3. Reflect that nine months of the year can a man rejoice and be exceeding glad to be married. Ten months can he steel his heart with fortitude to endure it, but on the twelfth month he noticeth that his wife's nose is crooked, and he knoweth her cooking. Therefore get thee hence on the twelfth month, and when thou shalt return to him he will make a feast at thy coming.

They shall mock thee.

4. Stay not too long, though, on thy vacation, for it is not good that a husband should be left alone to his own devices until he can find the secret spot wherein the clean shirt hideth itself and the fresh collars are secreted. Verily it was written in the Book of the Prophets that a little absence maketh the heart grow fonder, but too much absence inclineth it to another skirt.

5. When thou rockest in the chair that swayeth back and forth on the Summer hotel gallery, boast not thyself of thine automobile, and thy butler, and thy social prestige, and the diamonds thou hast left behind thee in thy husband's safe; for the women thou braggest to are the Daughters of Missouri, that even require to be shown, and they shall mock thee behind thy back as a liar.

6. Tell not the secret of thy life. Reveal not the weaknesses of thy husband, and pull not forth from thy closet the skeleton where it is hidden because thou happenest to stroll in the twilight with a sympathetic sister, for lo she shall tell the tale to another, and she shall repeat it to still another, and scandal shall be heaped upon thy name.

7. When thou playest bridge, get thee a strangle hold upon thy purse, for peradventure the society dames with whom thou sportest shall shear thee even as a lamb is sheared on Wall Street, and thou shalt have to write home for more money.

8. Take not the lone Summer man away from the maidens when he fleest to thee as to a temple of refuge, because thou already hast a husband and cannot expect him to marry thee. Flirt not with such an one, but stand thou to one side and give the virgins their chance, for lo in these days a husband is scarce and hard to come at.

9. Listen not to the man who wandereth on the beach with thee in the moonlight and who sayeth, "Would God I had met thee in time," for behold he is but as a phonograph with one record, and hath already said the same thing to 981,735 other women. Also he draweth but twenty-five bones per in a department store, whilst thy husband hath skill with the shekels, so that thou adornest thyself in purple and fine linen and split skirts therewithal.

10. Forget not that gossip stalketh through the halls of a Summer hotel, seeking whom it may destroy; therefore bear thyself as though thou posest in a moving picture film and converse as though thou consortest with a dictagraph. So shalt thou meet thy husband with a glad smile when he cometh down on the Saturday afternoon train, and thy heart shall not quake with fear when thou thinkest of what one of the old cats who knit pink sweaters in the hotel lobby may reveal unto him.

Selah.

'Tain't No Use.

The tramp approached the proud citizen and asked for alms.

"'Go to the ant, thou sluggard.'"

"'Tain't no use, mister. Me aunt's jist as tight-fisted as me uncle an' all de rest uv me relashuns. I fear I'll have to go to work at last."

Childlife.

"Come, Willie," said his mother, "don't be so selfish. Let your little brother play with your marbles a while."

"But," protested Willie, "he means to keep them always."

"Oh, I think not."

"I say, 'Yes,' 'cause he's swallowed two of them already."

.:. The Coralbank Case .:.

By MATTHEW JAMES.

ONE of the smarest little robberies that has ever come under my notice," said Detective Hunter, of Scotland Yard, as he musingly lit his first cigar one night recently at my rooms in Portman Square, "was that perpetrated in the autumn of last year upon a Mr. Silas Jay, then residing in a pretty little house known as "Coralbank" and situated about half a mile beyond Windsor."

I was on the alert in an instant, for there were few things I like better than listening to one of Detective Hunter's professional experiences.

"Perhaps," he said after a few moments' reflection, "I had better give you the particulars as they were narrated to me by Mr. Silas Jay himself, since I personally had nothing to do with the case."

The story ran as follows:

First, I must explain that Mr. Jay, who was a bachelor, was a man of many prejudices. He suspected everybody, and regarded all recognized and established institutions with unqualified distrust. Those that were national were torpid, and therefore mere shams, while those that were not were established chiefly for the fattening of financiers by any process, honest or otherwise, but more generally otherwise.

The existing police system held a prominent position in the former category, while banking houses figured no less conspicuously in the latter. This last opinion induced hmi to distribute his capital among six or seven banks, in order that, should any one of them fail and swindle him out of his money, his fortune would not be very materially impaired. Well, among these banking houses was one situated in Windsor, which, for the sake of convenience, he always used when at home, and in this bank the sum of $60,000 was deposited.

The Rumor Spreads.

How the rumor reached him I was never able to discover, but one day in October he presented himself in great excitement at the offices of the bank in question, declaring that he had heard it whispered they contemplated suspending payment, and demanding an immediate surrender of his credit balance of $60,000.

The manager indignantly repudiated the suspicion, but the old gentleman was thoroughly frightened, and finally the money was handed to him over the counter in the shape of a hundred $500 and two hundred $50 notes. These, as he afterwards explained to me, he intended depositing the following day in another of the local banks. But this intention was frustrated.

Early the next morning it was discovered that during the night an entry had been effected into the house, and the alarmed Mr. Jay, descending hastily to the library, discovered, to his mortification, that the larger of the two parcels of bank notes, of the value of £10,000, had been abstracted from the drawer in which he had locked it. The smaller but more valuable parcel he had placed, for greater security, in a secret compartment of his secretary, and this, to his intense relief, he found to be intact. The ingeniousness of the contrivance had baffled the thief, who had been forced to retire without securing the bulk of the money.

Mr. Jay dispatched a servant with a telegram, which he had himself indited requesting the authorities at Scotland Yard to send down a detective at the "earliest possible opportunity."

Half an hour later the servant returned without having dispatched the telegram and accompanied by a tall, shrewd-looking, businesslike man of about thirty-five. He was immediately conducted to the library, where, without loss of time, he introduced both himself and his errand to the astonished Mr. Jay. He spoke with a quick, intelligent precision that was not without its effect on his listener.

"Mr. Walter Craft."

"Mr. Silas Jay, I believe?" he said, briskly. "I chanced to be in the telegraph office when your servant entered, and, observing the direction of the message he was about to dispatch, took the liberty of interrupting it until I had seen you. But first allow me to introduce myself."

He took a card from his pocket and laid it on the table. Mr. Jay picked it up and read the name, "Mr. Walter Craft, detective inspector, Scotland Yard."

"As you see," resumed the stranger in a matter-of-fact tone, "I am connected with the establishment to which your telegram was directed, and, this being so, I took the further liberty of making myself acquainted with its contents. The closing words, 'earliest possible opportunity,' particularly appealed to my professional recognition, of the value of time; so, being on the spot, I have come straight to you to offer my services in discovering the perpetrator or perpetrators of the robbery which took place here last night, the chief particulars of which I have already elicited from your servant."

Mr. Jay rose from his chair, "I am glad you came," he said.

The detective bowed, and then, resuming his brisk, businesslike air, which appeared to afford his listener no small satisfaction, said:

"Then let us begin at once."

"Had you any other money in the house?" His keen, gray eyes searched Mr. Jay's face.

The latter hesitated. He was at all times a suspicious man. But the detective's keen insight into the position of things had strongly prepossessed himself in his favor, while his character was no doubt unimpeachable. So, after a moment's consideration, he told the story of the untouched parcel of bank notes, even going so far, in the exuberance of his spirits at the thief's failure, as to touch the secret spring which opened the hidden compartment and reveal to the detective the notes within. As he did so, however, he appeared to regret the action, for he made a movement as if to reclose the compartment, but the detective stopped him.

"Pardon me," he said quickly, "but did I understand you to say that you drew these notes from the bank with those that are missing?"

Silas Jay nodded.

"In that case," said the detective, emphatically, "I must ask you to allow me to examine these notes. A great deal may depend on my doing so."

The Suspicion.

Silas Jay reluctantly drew them from their hiding place and handed them to the detective. The latter turned them over, one by one, his fingers lingering long over the task. Then, with a half-suppressed sigh, he handed them back to their owner and watched that gentleman as he once more replaced them in the secret compartment of the secretaire, and heard the sharp, metallic click of the spring as it flew into position.

When this was done he asked to be allowed to see the servants, and one by one they were called into the library. He said but little to them, however, chiefly impressing upon them the necessity for silence on the subject of the robbery, and dismissed them once more to their respective duties. Then he turned to Mr. Jay.

"Now," he said briskly. "I think I may confide to you the fact that my investigations so far have not been without their reward. To-morrow morning I shall return and shall probably require to again examine—and, if may be necessary to photograph—the notes still in your possession. I will now bid you good-day, as there are several things that need to be done in the meantime."

At half-past ten the following morning there was a loud pealing of the front door bell, and a few minutes later a servant announced that two police constables in uniform requested to see Mr. Jay on a matter of sonsiderable importance. They were shown into the library, and awkwardly touched their helmets to the master of the house. They were typical country policemen—thickset, stolid-looking individuals, who might certainly form part of the arm of the law, but possessed no iota of its brains.

"Are you Mr. Silas Jay?" inquired one, in a slow, expressionless voice.

Mr. Jay admitted that such was the case.

"Well," explained the constable "we're in search of a feller who's wanted up in Brummagem for a little lob o' 'ousebreakin'. From information received"—he coughed to emphasize the professional phrase—"we know he's in this district, and we are hinformed that a man answerin' to his description was seen a-comin' into your 'ouse yesterday afternoon."

Silas Jay turned pale as a horrible suspicion crossed his mind. With a quick movement he pressed the secret spring of his secretaire, and a sigh of unutterable relief escaped his lips as he beheld the precious bank notes lying safely within their ingenious hiding place. Then, closing the compartment, he turned abruptly to the constables, who were watching him in evident curiosity, and said:

"He promised to be here at eleven this morning, and it barely wants a quarter to that now."

Instantly the men were on their feet.

"I wonder if he'll come?" said one.

"If he does," replied the other, "we've got 'im, and then we're safe for a stripe or two."

Eluded.

Simultaneously they moved to the window and stood looking out down the gravel paths that skirted the lawn and across the tall gates that led on the road. As for Silas Jay he was too bewildered even to think coherently and sat, with his chin resting on his hands, staring straight before him. An exclamation from one of the constables roused him.

"Here 'e is!" exclaimed the man.

Mr. Jay leaped to his feet and ran to the window. At the same instant a man who had just turned in at the gate came to a standstill and glanced irresolutely in the direction of the house.

"You infernal fools!" exclaimed Mr. Jay, with all his old disgust for the police returning in full force. "The fellow has seen your confounded uniforms through the window and has taken the alarm!"

It certainly looked as if this was actually the case, for at that instant the man turned and swiftly retreated through the gates and out on to the road, where he was immediately lost to view behind the tall hedge which shut in the lawn. With a smothered oath, Silas Jay threw up the widow, and, climbing out as quickly as his age would allow, started in hot pursuit. One of the constables followed his example, and, being a younger man, soon outstripped Mr. Jay.

When the latter reached the gate and looked down the road he beheld the bogus detective far away in the distance, speeding along through a cloud of dust, mounted on a bicycle. He was getting up a good pace, and, upon seeing Mr. Jay, waved his hand in token of his determination to catch the now rapidly disappearing thief. When Mr. Jay returned to the house he found that the other policeman had taken himself off.

The next day he was so restless that he could bear the house no longer, so he determined, as there was nothing to hinder him from doing so, to take the hundred $500 notes into Windsor and there deposit them in one of the local banks. He touched the concealed spring of his secretaire and the secret compartment flew noiselessly open. And then, with a wild cry, he staggered back against the wall and fell in a heap upon the floor. The bank notes were gone!

As soon as he recovered he rushed into Windsor and wired to Scotland Yard, and the chief sent me down to investigate. Both detective and his confederates, the country constables, were unknown—in that capacity, at least—to the authorities. When I communicated this information to Mr. Silas Jay I thought he would have a fit.

"What are you going to do?" he asked.

"I am afraid," I said, "there is but little left for me to do. I have been to the bank, and find that, owing to the ridiculous discussion which took place, the manager, in handing you the notes, omitted the customary precaution of taking down their numbers. All we can do, therefore, is to endeavor to trace the criminals by means of their description. But this is a tedious process, and not always crowned with success."

He handed me the card which the bogus detective had given him.

"An alias, I suppose," I said. "And Walter Craft is not an inappropriate name for one of his calling."

A gleam of something like self-contempt shone in the old man's eyes.

"Scarcely as appropriate as my own," he exclaimed savagely, "for if any man richly deserves the name of Jay, I am certainly he!"

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

Happiness the Real Secret, Says One of the Stage's Prettiest Girls

"Being happy is the secret of being well, looking well and feeling well."

This is Miss Lois Josephine's recipe for obtaining and maintaining a beautiful face and figure.

Miss Lois Josephine in two poses.

"I AM determined to be happy," said Lois Josephine to me, smiling the while with the wistful sweetness that is the heritage of Irish blood. "I think that being happy is the secret of being well, and doing your work well, and looking well, and feeling well! Well, with all these wells to be acquired, my search for happiness is going to be untiring."

"Just how does one go about being happy—deliberately happy?" I asked. The blue-bird of happiness is an elusive-winged creature, and even when he is found at last at your own fireside he flies away as you clasp him in the welcoming circle of your hands.

"To be happy," answered Miss Josephine, with a tiny shadow of a smile that ought to lure happiness right to her side, never to depart, "to be happy, you like all the things you have to do, you trust your friends, you love all the beauty of nature around you—and you avoid unnecessary contact with tasks that you can not teach yourself to like. Oh, truly, I think that if you are happy you will be healthy and wealthy and wise and—and, yes, beautiful!"

Now, Miss Josephine is the Sunshine Girl in "The Passing Show of 1913" up at the Winter Garden in New York, and most charmingly does she and her partner, Wellington Cross, dispense gayety and sunshine as they dance their "joy of living" steps for you. Perhaps it is here that Miss Josephine found her inspiration to be a sunshiny girl in everyday life, but to be happy seems to me to be a most excellent way to acquire beauty.

Her Program.

"I am going to be so happy and contented with life that I will just naturally attract sunshine instead of shadow," went on the dainty girl whose picture delights you to-day. "I am going to be so pleased with my life and work that my expression can never be bitter or discontented, but instead must be sweet and friendly.

"Bitterness, discontent, envy, worry, anger, malice—I am going to banish them from my mind more and more earnestly as I get more and more power to pursue a search for happiness. If only girls knew what foes to beauty these evil feelings were they would all join me in a happiness hunt and get such sweet expressions that every one would be exclaiming: 'Well, I declare, if Mamie Jones isn't getting to be a beauty—she has the most attractive expression!' "

Suddenly Miss Josephine trilled out a merry laugh.

"Want to see one practical detail of my hunt for happiness? Well, I am making my feet happy, too! I wear flat-soled tennis shoes with buck instead of tennis soles, since rubber draws the feet, and so rest and relax the muscles and tendons of my feet. Narrow, tight, high-heeled shoes do not make your feet comfortable; they actually hurt your health, and they do great harm to the serenity of your face. You know the desperate expression you often see on the face of a girl whose shoes are too tight or are pitching her forward, with the strain coming heavily on already tired muscles. Well, an expression like that may carve its way in ugly lines right into a face. So I recommend making your feet happy if you want your face to look happy!

Ventral Courtesy.

"I am very polite to my digestion. I don't ask its overtaxed organs to handle heavy meats and rich sauces all through the hot summer. Instead, I eat vegetables and salads and the lighter meats, and give my system tonic food, instead of task food, in summer. An ideal summer program is to have meat on your dinner menu only two or three times a week. For instance: Chicken on Sunday, steak on Tuesday, lamb on Thursday, fish on Friday, and on the other three days try soup and a few extra vegetables for your dinner. Simple menus will give your 'digestery' a rested, happy feeling that will tell in a happy, rested-looking face.

"If you like it as well as I do, you will be delighted to drink three glasses of buttermilk during the day, and on rising and on retiring you will enjoy a bit of watercress with salt. Fine tonics for the system—both of these. Then to make your skin and muscles rejoice in the general prosperity, try a morning and evening rub with equal parts of alcohol and witch hazel. That will add a fine glow to the general beauty-dealing feeling of happiness you want to acquire. Oh, it is great fun working out a system whereby you will acquire happiness and all its attendant blessings of beauty and health and power to advance in the world."

As we left Miss Josephine's pretty home on a cross street, just west of Broadway, a friend called to the little blue linen-suited figure: "Hello, little bluebird!"' And the bluebird is for happiness, you know.

LILIAN LAUFERTY.

Its Virtue.

President A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard, said at a dinner in his honor in Chicago:

"Early marriages are the best. It is neither good for the man nor for the community that he should wait until he is 28 years old before marrying."

President Lowell paused a moment and then, smiling, he continued:

"Another trouble about late marriages is that the man's habits—his bad habits—are formed, and it's hard to break him of them. You know, perhaps, the story of the cigarette?

"A man of the old fashioned 'manly man' type—the soft, full-stomached type that drinks too much, belongs to too many lodges, and must be superior to woman in everything—this man took umbrage over his wife's cigarette, the one modest cigarette that she took after dinner, though he, of course, smoked like a chimney all day long. And so he said, one evening:

"'I believe you think more of that nasty, poisonous cigarette than you do of me, your husband.'

"'Well, dear,' his wife replied, smiling and blowing a cloud, 'I can keep my cigarette, you know, from going out.'"

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Mildred Farley was a dressmaker," this gentleman went on. "If you read the newspapers you know that, and also know that she worked hard at her duties for some weeks before her death. But what is very strange in her connection, and, together with some other reasons unnecessary to state here makes it difficult for the police to settle down to the belief that her death was the simple suicide it at first seemed, is that no one has succeeded in discovering for whom she worked, and to what home she carried the various dresses she finished in that time. For though it may not be material to know this, and may not help the affair forward one jot toward its rightful issue, yet because it is a mystery and an unsolved one, those whose business it is to see every doubtful case made clear, have sent me to this house to see if some light can not be thrown by you upon it."

He paused and looked at Genevieve. She at once raised her eyes and surveyed him steadily.

"You think, then, that I knew Mildred Farley?" was her question, clearly and coldly uttered.

At Loggerheads.

"Did you not?" he inquired.

Her lips broke into a smile. "Ask Dr. Cameron," she suggested, and seemed to think she had answered his question.

Their visitor glanced at the doctor, met only a dubious shake of the head, and continued in a more formal tone.

"If you did not know Miss Farley, it is strange she should have made the dresses of your trousseau, Mrs. Cameron."

"I don't understand you," was that lady's reply. "My dresses were made by any one but that girl. This I can assure you most positively, sir."

"You can. We are then brought round to my first question: who was it that did make your dresses, Mrs. Cameron?"

It was smilingly said, but it caused her to flush with great indignation.

"Is it necessary that I should tell you?" she somewhat haughtily inquired.

"If you do not, I cannot prevent certain people I know from thinking it was Mildred Farley."

"And why?" Dr. Cameron now broke in. "What reasons have they or any one to connect my wife with that poor unfortunate?"

"Only a very material one which I leave to Mrs. Cameron to explain. In the room of that dead girl were found scraps and ends of silk and velvet, which were preserved by the police as pieces of the goods she had been lately making up into dresses. Among these was a morsel of trimming—here it is—and as this trimming or some just like it was seen by chance upon a dress worn by Mrs. Cameron, it struck one of our agents that she was in all probability the lady who had profited by this poor girl's handiwork."

"The conclusion of a man!" exclaimed Mrs. Cameron, with chill sarcasm. "I suppose there are in this city to-day, twenty ladies with just that trimming on their gowns."

"And with this gray velvet for a dress? And this—I do not know how to call it—for another? And this soft white silk so suitable for a bride's adorning, and"——

"Enough, enough," cried Mrs. Cameron, putting up her hands merrily as a half dozen samples of various goods and colors fell in a shower into her lap. "I own to these, but I do not own to Mildred Farley. You waste your time; you will never find that she did any sewing for me, however she came into possession of these pieces." And with a half careless, half disdainful smile, she flirted the bits aside, looking so imperious and so charming, that for a moment her visitor seemed a trifle abashed and half rose as if to go. "You see if I had anything to tell, I would," she murmured, graciously. "But I have not. I cannot explain any more than you how these samples from my dresses should have been found where they were. I can only look at them and wonder. Is that enough, sir?"

"Hardly," his look seemed to say, but he rose. "And you will not tell me where your dresses were made?" he smiled.

She shook her head, laughed and rose with an arch air.

The Back Porch.

"It is a secret I have kept even from my husband, but if you must have it, you must. And rising on tiptoe with a look of merry defiance at the doctor, she whispered something in the visitor's ear.

He listened, stared at her a moment and broke into a genial laugh.

"And so this is your secret," he cried. "Well, I know how to respect the secrets of a lady when such respect does not interfere with my duty."

And with a gallant bow he took his leave, expressing the hope that he had not made his call to lengthy.

After he was gone Dr. Cameron turned to his wife.

"And what did you whisper in that big man's ear to calm him so suddenly?"

"Ah, you want to know my secret too," she laughed. "Well, I told him that the work which has been so much admired had been done by no woman. That in my vanity and desire for originality I had had the poor taste to employ a man, and that I was secretly ashamed of it."

"She told you that?" cried Mr. Gryce. "And you believed here? Humph!"

"She spoke the truth," asserted his companion—the gentleman whose name we purposely suppressed in the last chapter."

"You think so?"

"I do. There was something in her tone, whisper though it was, which brought conviction. I do not question her word in the least."

"Well, we will see; I did not hear her and so may be pardoned for having my doubts. I will talk with you again, sir. The play may not be worth the candle, and it may; a few days more will determine."

"And Molesworth?"

"Is very well as he is."

This conversation, fragmentary though it is, will show something of the stand which Mr. Gryce was taking in this matter. He had Molesworth under his eye and as good as under arrest, and yet he was not satisfied. Something—was it instinct or experience?—told him that this affair possessed complications of no ordinary nature, and that to a conscientious man like himself there were doubts to be solved and possibilities to be sounded, before he would dare proceed against the doctor as against a presumably guilty man.

But with the kindred remembrance of what the woman in Mrs. Olney's boarding house had said about Mildred Farley's frequent comings and goings with her great box, he did not consider it so foolish now, and only wished he had probed the subject deeper at the time. It was not so late yet, however, but that proper inquiries in the right places would settle the question as to whether these two girls were the same. He had only to pass a word or two with the complaisant butler at Mr. Gretorex's house, to learn enough to have the laugh, to say the least, on his somewhat credulous superior. To Mr. Gretorex's house he therefore went, and to Mr. Gretorex's butler he at once addressed himself.

He found this person quite ready to talk in his easy, French way.

The Butler.

"Zat girl? I—none of ze help know somezing bout zat girl, only Mees Gretorex always was at home when she come. A vell for ze face? Oui, so zick you no can see if she was black or white. But she was ver pretty—look good, Sacre! She walk good—proud like a comtesse. She no look at me. One time Pierre try, I try to speak wiz her. It was no good. If she was much deaf she do just so; for she look not to me, she look not to Pierre."

"You're right, Count," laughed a voice over their shoulders, "and one of us ain't a bad looking man, either."

It was Peter, who liked a bit of gossip as well as his neighbor, and who now came forward smiling.

"I feel ze compliment, M. Pierre, and it is ver much good for you to say so," retorted the "Count" with a grandiose bow. "It is ze opinion of ze ladies in ze house."

The butler then winked slyly at Gryce, and satisfied that he had effectually discomfited the footman, proceeded to put questions to the detective as to his reasons for the interest he showed in this girl, which that functionary had wit and experience enough to successfully parry.

Peter helped him; for Peter was a rival of the butler's in more than one field, and in his good-natured way invariably took part against him in any controversy, and it was from Peter that Mr. Gryce finally got the acknowledgment that this young woman, or lady, as he persisted in calling her, usually wore a long, black ulster and made her appearance in the evening.

Now this was satisfactory. In the closet of Mildred Farley at Mrs. Olney's house there was a long, black ulster, and she, as we know, was accustomed to take her work home evenings.

"But she didn't have the ulster on the last time she came, oh, no," continued Peter. "I don't know what it was made the difference, but she looked foine. O, now! well I'm tellin' ye I wouldn't have known her at all, at all, but for her ould brown veil and little handbag. Them wur the same as before and so was the air of her. Not a word nor the divil of a look for one of us; but being the night o' the wedding, she got out o' me head, for sure I had enough else to moind."

Her Handbag.

This last admission was a surprise, but Mr. Gryce was accustomed to surprises, so he kept quite still; the more so that he saw the butler was about to speak, and he always preferred to glean his facts through the questions of other people rather than his own.

"Zat girl here on Miss Gretorex's wedding night? I zink you was mistake, Pierre."

"Mistaken is it I am! when these two hands let her in meself at the back door. It wasn't only here she was, but it's helpin' Miss Gretorex to dress she was, and divil a minute she had to spare, aither, being just in the nick of time to be of any help at all, at all, to her. I didn't see her leave, though."

Mr. Gryce felt his interest cool. Reason told him how improbable it was that this person with all her mysteries, could have been the runaway bride of Julius Molesworth. Even if this house had not been miles distant from the C—— Hotel where he had himself seen her at 7 o'clock of that same night, the great improbability of her fleeing from her own nuptials to assist in this very humble capacity at those of another, was too manifest for his consideration even. Yet because habit was strong in him and habit forbade him to leave a subject till he had exhausted it, he put in a word which he thought must settle the matter.

EVANS DECLARES CLOUDY DAY IS BEST FOR GOLF

By Chick Evans.

TO my mind a gray day gives the ideal golfing weather. This sort of a day frequently precedes or follows rain and there is something in the moist freshness of the atmosphere and absence of glare that is wholly delightful. The clubs at such a time seem unusually light and if they are your own there is a wonderful balance and the blades appear to lie supremely well. The grip also seems perfect because the moisture of the air gets into the leather and gives that feeling of absolute security to the grip. While this feeling in damp weather is true of all grips, it is particularly true of the oiled leather kind.

For some reason, whether it is a quality of the atmosphere or because one's clubs feel so good, the flight of the ball seems steadier and the picture of the little white globe floating in a true and steady line against a dull gray background of sky is a sight to warm the heart of every golfer

Sun's Glare Hampers Player.

On a bright, warm day the glare from the sun is often distressing to the eyes of the golfer, and a round of golf under a midsummer sun leaves him exhausted. But an overcast day is a comfort to the eyes and a strengthening tonic to the whole physique. One's game itself is better, too, for the moist greens hold the iron shots and permit accurate placing.

The game of golf evolved under gray skies, along wide, moist, grassy places by the sea. In Great Britain there are hundreds and hundreds of overcast days. Then, on these matchless courses, in sight and sound of the waves, with the smell of the sea and the moist freshness of its breath in one's nostrils, the game is enjoyed in all of its natural flavor.

Prairie Courses Harder.

We miss, perhaps, a good deal of this subtle enjoyment of the game on our sun-baked courses. When the greens are like lightning and the fairway cracked and seamed iron shots will not stay where put and fine points of the game are impossible of application. But while we miss much, we are spared that frequent British affliction—a downpour of rain in the midst of an interesting match.

I love an overcast day for golf, the gray sky and moist breeze are like an inspiring draught, but heaven preserve me from a rainy day upon the links.

Sports and Such

FAMOUS IN SPORT—VII.
The Fight Manager.

THE FIGHT MANAGER IS AN ever-present example of the value of human endeavor, so long as you can get somebody else to do the endeavoring. It is the mission of the Fight Manager to live by the toil of other men, and, so far as we are a judge, he does his duty. We never heard of one who starved to death.

Managing fighters has all of the advantages of managing a bank, with none of the risks. When a bank gets in bad you can not shake it and pick up another one; but the average Fight Manager continues to blow expensive cigar smoke into the eye of the Sporting Editor long after dozens of fighters he has managed have gone back to sparring for pork chops in the outskirts of Detroit and Cincinnati.

Lest you be thus encouraged to rush blindly into the business, it is our duty to warn you that certain natural gifts are essential. The successful Fight Manager must have tireless vocal chords, a barb-proof hide, a property smile and the imagination of a mining-stock salesman. Also, the gall of a policeman.

It is by no means necessary that he have a fighter. Many men have tried to get by with merely a fighter and have failed. It is much better to tow around some muscular misfit with a ten-ounce brain and by persistent talking and "gettin' in with the right guys" convince the public that he is a fighter. A real fighter usually has enough intelligence to want to audit accounts every now and then, and this is a serious handicap to real success in this profession.

But for the kind of man that fits into the profession it is certainly the kind of profession for him to fit into. Two or three thousand per cent profits are common. For instance, Lute McCarty won $4,000 in his last fight, and when every one had gotten his there was $26 left for the estate. That's a business.

(Get set for the next one—"The Queer Ride.")

Tuesday Society Night at 'Drome

R.F. Maddox Sweepstakes Feature

TUESDAY night has been selected as "society night" at the Motordrome, and a special card has been arranged to delight the large attendance that is expected to witness the events.

The feature event on the program is to be the Robert F. Maddox Sweepstakes, to be run in three heats of six riders each. The award will be on points.

Then there is a three-cornered race among Jock McNeil, Harry Glenn and Harry Swartz, which also promises a lot of excitement.

Here is the program:

Motordrome Purse.

(Heats, 1 mile, final, 2 miles; winner in each heat and second man in fastest heat.)

First Heat—Graves, Swartz and Lockner.

Second Heat—Richards, Luther and Renel.

Third Heat—McNeil, Lewis and Glenn.

Three-Cornered Match Race.

(Three heats, 1 mile, 2 miles and 3 miles.)

First Heat—Glenn, McNeil and Swartz. One mile.

Final Motordrome Purse, two miles.

Second Heat — Three-cornered match race, two miles.

R. F. Maddox Sweepstakes.

(French point system, 10 for first, 6 for second and 2 for third; three heats, 2, 4 and 6 miles.)

First Heat—Two miles: Graves, Richards, Luther, Lewis, Renel and Lockner.

Third Heat—Three-cornered match race, three miles.

Second Heat—Maddox Sweepstakes, four miles.

Third heat—Maddox Sweepstakes, six miles.

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

TWO MINUS ONE.

(Paraphrasing a well-known author.)

Two things greater than all things are,
One is a bush league baseball star
Who smites the ball with a heart of vim
And earns the kale they have paid for him.

P.S.—The other thing doesn't count.

It is said Fred Merkle is the lad who smote John McGraw on the jowl. This shows that ivory never melts.

In golf, which Mr. Merkle is alleged to play every morn, the slogan is: "Keep your eye on the ball." In baseball, which Mr. Merkle is alleged to play every afternoon, the slogan is: "Keep your eye on the base."

Charlie Ebbets is said to be figuring on a new manager, thus showing that he is willing to go to any expense to get something new to dedicate.

One is not surprised to read that Miller Huggins wants an entirely new team. But one might be surprised to read that he is satisfied with the team he has.

Occasionally a youth from California gets a trimming in a tennis tournament. We said occasionally.

Ban Johnson announces that the world's series will open on October 6. The announcement is received with great enthusiasm among ticket speculators.

It is claimed that tickets speculation on the world series has been reduced to a minimum. Figuring thusly, a maximum would be approximately 175 per cent of the gate receipts.

The report that Clark Griffith has offered $100,000 for Ty Cobb leads one to suspect that he is hitting .400 in the hop league.

We note in the newspapers that one Ar Chung, a Chinese lightweight, made one Pat McCarty quit. The A. O. H. will now proceed to start a libel suit.

It is rumored that Freddie Welch has saved $100,000 out of his earnings. This reveals the fact that his earnings were $100,000.05.

THIS PARAGRAPH IS WRITTEN TO IMMORTALIZE ONE HUMID KALLA PASHA, AN HONEST WRESTLER. HUMID IS HONEST ENOUGH TO ADMIT THAT THERE AIN'T NO SUCH THING.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Tommy Walsh, of New Orleans, who looks after the affairs of Joe Mandot, has also in his fold George "Kewpie" Brown, the Chicago middleweight, under his management. He has matched Brown to meet Jack Dillon, the Indianapolis fighter, in a ten-round bout at a show to be brought off at Terre Haute, Ind., on Labor Day.

* * *

Tom McCarey, the fight promoter, has offered to assist Jim Coffroth, the San Francisco promoter, in getting a star bout for his show on Labor Day afternoon. As Champion Willie Ritchie has agreed to fight Freddie Welch at Vancouver on that day, Coffroth has been left without an attraction. McCarey is willing to let Coffroth have Johnny Dundee, Ad Wolgast or any fighter that is under contract to him.

* * *

Jimmy Clabby, the veteran middleweight, is in San Francisco trying to get a match with Bob McAllister. Jim Coffroth is trying to match the pair for a September date. Clabby is one of the real marvels of the boxing game and should be a big hit on the coast.

* * *

Charley White, who defeated Frank Whitney here last week, will meet Johnny Griffiths in a twelve-round bout at Akron, Ohio, on Labor Day. Griffiths recently defeated Young Saylor and also knocked out Phil Brock in three rounds. After this scrap White may go to the coast for a set-to with Harlem Tommy Murphy.

* * *

The San Langford-Joe Jeannette match, which has been hanging fire for some time, is now a settled affair. Tom McCarey has received assurances from both fighters that they will be ready to go the marathon route on October 7.

* * *

If the proposed match between Willie Ritchie and Freddie Welch goes through it will be the first international contest for the lightweight championship since George Lavigne and Dick Burge fought in England a number of years ago.

* * *

It is impossible to any longer overlook Gunboat Smith as a candidate for the heavyweight championship honors. Smith has gone right along whipping every man he has been matched with. His latest victory over Jim Flynn has certainly added a big feather in his cap.

TOMMY LONG AND CHAPMAN PLAY TO-DAY

HERE'S a grain of comfort. The Crackers will be able to send their regular line-up against the Barons this afternoon, when the first game of the series begins at 3:30 o'clock—note the change in the time.

Manager Smith said this morning that Tommy Long had about got over his severe cold and would be in left field this afternoon. Chapman's wrenched ankle has come around in good shape and Harry will be back of the wood.

As to the first slabman to get a whack at the Moles, Bill is going to try out the Gil Price jinx again. Gil has had something on the Barons all season; they haven't seemed able to make a start against the big left-hander, and Gil himself is eager to tackle them in the jump game.

A report from Birmingham announces the purchase of Ed Ery, leading pitcher of the Georgia-Alabama League, who is to report here to-day. "Rube" Evans, the big left-hander, has been suspended for failure to keep in condition, and Bill Prough was called away from the club by a sister's illness, so Molesworth's slab staff is badly in need of bolstering.

The Barons' manager said this morning that Prough was expected on almost any train from the direction of Athens, Ala., and that Ery was being looked for hourly, also. McGilvray is out of the line-up, too. Hardgrove is scheduled to pitch this afternoon.

Crackers Sign 'Goat' Holliday For Next Season

"Goat Holliday, the former crack first baseman of Tech, to-day signed a contract to play with the Crackers next season. He will report next spring.

Holliday was one of the greatest college first sackers in the South two years ago and should prove a good man for the local representatives in the Southern League.

As Joe Agler has been sold to the Jersey City club of the International League, the Crackers will have to unearth a worthy man for the first sack. Holliday may prove the right man.

Thousands at Burial Of Mine War Victims

CALUMET, MICH., Aug. 18.—A big public funeral for the two copper strikers killed in a fight Thursday night between Deputy Sheriffs and strikers was held here yesterday. A special train brought the bodies here from the Champion mine and thousands of strikers from every part of the copper district attended the services.

HANLON GETS PLAYERS.

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—E. J. Hanlon, president of the Sioux City Western League club, obtained from the Detroit Americans the outfielder and pitcher he needed for his team, it was learned today. Hanlon's visit here was brief and he did not give out the names of his new players.

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

Intense rivalry in Empire League cities is in evidence now in every game played. Charges and counter charges are being hurled at first one team, then another, while the president of the league gets his full share, too.

* * *

Babe Wilder, the wonder of the league, has lost the last three games he pitched for Cordele. The losses were not his fault, as errors behind him let his opponents score enough to win.

* * *

Brouthers, playing in the field for Americus, came mighty near pulling off a fatal play for his team recently. He tried to get a stone in center field, thinking it was the ball which had just been hit safely. A fellow fielder saw the mistake and nipped the real article up in time to save a run.

* * *

Left Fielder Powers, of the Waycross team, has returned to Jacksonville. He was declared ineligible and Waycross had nothing to do but let him go. He is a fleet fielder and has made a neat record during his stay with Waycross.

* * *

Ten victories to one defeat is the pitching record held by Dacey, of the Americus team. He was signed originally as a fielder but has developed into a pitcher as good as the best in the league.

* * *

Outfielder Schuyler, of the Brunswick team, is climbing rapidly in batting. He hits the ball hard regularly.

* * *

Day came back strong against the Valdosta team after they knocked him out of the box and won his game with ease for Thomasville. His shut-out record in the Empire is a good one.

* * *

Otto Jordan seems good on picking up good players. He has landed Wise, a catcher, and from the way the fellow plays he is slated for faster company. Gordon and Vaughan, pitchers, will both land in the Sally and perhaps higher. Gordon has already gone to Macon and ought to make good. And the Valdosta team has others just as reliable.

* * *

Umpire baiting in the league has ruined a number of games recently and the fans generally are in hopes of changes before another season arrives that will make this impossible. Attacks on umpires by players have received only minor treatment.

* * *

By winning four straight games, two from the league leaders, Waycross climbed out of the cellar position for the first time since early in July, when the second half of the season started.

* * *

Added to his fielding ability Doc Fenton, playing center for Waycross, has started hitting at a terrific clip. He got two home runs in succession and four hits in succession the next day. His put-out record is eight for one game, and has no equal in the league.

* * *

Red Stiles, who started the season with Waycross and went to Thomasville when he was released, has been suspended for the balance of the season at his own request.

* * *

"Handy" Anderson, who is playing third for Waycross, has developed into a remarkably fine player for a youngster. He joined Waycross from a school team, and made good with a rush. He plays short splendidly and is at home in the field. His bunting is a feature and he seldom fails to reach first when he gets one placed to his notion.

* * *

Stewart, the new pitcher with Brunswick, has a cross-fire ball that is mighty hard to hit. He has worked it with success on the best batters and fooled them every time. His brother, playing with Americus, is also able to work some deceptive balls over the plate.

JEFFRIES 'DOPE STORY' GAINS NEW HEARING

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—The direct statement that James J. Jeffries, after his defeat by Jack Johnson at Reno, sought and secured proof that he had been drugged before the battle with the negro was made in a signed article written by a New York sporting editor and published in an evening paper to-day.

The statement follows, in part:

"Jeffries hired one of the greatest detective agencies in the world to run down the facts. The details he gathered make up a complete story of the most sordid plot that ever turned fair sport into a sure-thing gamble. Possibly Johnson would have won in any case, but the clique that handled the betting made it a certainty by drugging Jeffries with the help of men who were in his confidence and who had the run of his camp. They cleaned up a fortune through betting commissioners stationed in many cities. In Paris alone they wagered $24,000 and won $40,000. In Reno and San Francisco and Los Angeles and New York their gains went into the hundreds of thousands.

"The 'tip' for the big killing was received by the waiting commissioners less than 24 hours before the fight when the gamblers knew that Jeffries was 'safe.'

"The grst plot was broached in a back room; the last man necessary to its success accepted his part in a meeting in a Reno alley two nights before the fight, after having learned that he could make no more money with Jeffries and that he could win thousands by turning Judas. One man whose available cash was also secretly wagered on Johnson smilingly posed as a friendly adviser of Jeffries during the fight."

FRANK GOTCH RETIRES AGAIN FOR STEENTH TIME

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Aug. 18.—Frank Gotch, greatest of all wrestlers, is through with the mat forever. In a letter to the sporting editor of The Minneapolis Daily News, received today, Gotch says:

"While the Minnesota State fair people made me an excellent offer to wrestle Zbyszko on September 5, I have turned it down, as I will all other propositions to return to the game.

"I have enough money, am happily married, and will spend the balance of my days with the people of Humboldt, Iowa, which means more to me than living in a mansion in New York City or in a castle in England. I shall always be an interested follower of the wrestling game, but will be satisfied to sit an the outside of the ring in the future."

Organize Dixie League Club Here

New Circuit Planned for South

APPLICATION for a charter for the Atlanta Baseball Club of the Dixie League was filed this morning in the office of the County Clerk, the petition being signed by the following incorporators:

Guy Hawkins and M. C. Kiser, of Atlanta; Carl Camp, of Fulton County, and Judge W. J. Bacon and H. N. Pharr, of Memphis.

W. W. Hood, local attorney for the club, which now is in the process of organization, spoke very highly of the prospects and aims of the new league.

"It has the proper men back of it, for one thing," Mr. Hood said. "Then it has the cream of the Southern cities. Here is the list: Atlanta, Memphis, New Orleans, Birmingham, Chattanooga, Nashville, Little Rock and Shreveport.

"With the exception of the last two cities, all now are members of the Southern League, with established rating as baseball towns. Little Rock and Shreveport have held Southern League franchises, and are eager to get regular league baseball again."

Besides being an incorporator of the Atlanta club, Judge Bacon is president of the new league. He is a man of much prominence and influence in Tennessee, and states plainly that the league has ample financial backing to launch its circuit next season without the need of placing any stock with outsiders, though it is thought best that each club shall be controlled by men living in its own city.

Application is to be made to the National Commission for affiliation under the present national agreement, which would give the new league a recognized standing at once. If that is denied, however, the league will proceed just the same.

In a statement issued to-day, Judge Bacon asserted that it was not the plan of the Dixie League to fight the Southern, but rather to arrange its schedule so as to furnish continuous baseball in the six cities which would have two clubs. At the end of each season an All-Southern championship is suggested, similar to the world's series, between the champion club of the Southern and that of the Dixie League.

Another meeting of the directors of the league will be called within 30 days, by which time the various local clubs are expected to be well organized.

TINKER READY TO QUIT JOB AS REDS' MANAGER

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—The repeated rumors that all was not well in the affairs of the Cincinnati camp and that the days of Joe Tinker as manager were numbered, were partly confirmed to-day.

The hustling leader of the Reds admitted he was ready to quit. The policies of Garry Herrmann, president of the club, does not jibe with his own, he said, and unless his superior was willing to reconstruct some of his pet theories the team would soon be under a new leader.

Tinker's declaration to-day was caused by the receipt of a telegram from Herrmann notifying Joe that he had "violated baseball law" by airing their differences.

* * *

"I REALIZE that I must take a stand with regard to the management of the club, or step down and out," said the Red manager. "The showing of the team has been a great disappointment to all concerned and I have held off because I felt that I am not a success myself, so far as I have gone. Since the club has not been making money I felt that it was up to me to stand for some things that I would not otherwise have endured."

* * *

THE selling outright of his players to minor leagues was what caused the break, according to Tinker, who felt that he should be allowed to make profitable trades with the other National League teams.

"I would rather go out to my fruit farm in Oregon," he added, "than to try to handle a club when I am not backed up by the owners. I shall not let another player go unless I know just what the deal is."

GRAND CIRCUIT MEET OPENS AT CHARLESTON NEXT WEEK

CHARLESTON, ILL., Aug. 18.—The Eastern Illinois Grand Racing Circuit opens the season with a program at Charleston next week, the dates being August 19 to 23. Entries to both meetings have been satisfactory.

PITCHER COMSTOCK SOLD TO DETROIT FOR $5,000

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Aug. 18.—Pitcher Ralph Comstock, of Minneapolis, who has been doing sensational work in the American Association, to-day was sold to the Detroit Americans for $5,000, Catcher Rondeau and a pitcher to be named later. Comstock had been reported sold to Comiskey's club, but there was some hitch in the deal.

Barons Loaded for Grouch Fight

Next Series an Elimination Bout

By O. B. Keeler.

BESTOWING a parting and futile imprecation upon the Pepper Kids, Atlanta fandom will now direct its clamorous attention to the advancing Barons, here for three games.

Indications point to another grouch fight.

Moley still might be considered a pennant contender, if you are good at considering. The reason Moley isn't more of a p.e. is because the Crackers licked him a straight series in Slagville recently.

So you may see quite easily the esteem and affection Moley would hold for our crowd, who also can be considered a pennant possibility—granting for the second time that the consideration faculty is working well.

* * *

THE approaching combat, therefore, takes on the status of an elimination bout for the Hope Championship. If the Barons obtain the measure of revenge they naturally are seeking, the stuff is absolutely off for us, barring miracles.

And miracles do not happen in baseball as frequently as one might suppose.

On the other hand, if Messrs. Moley, Prough, et al, again fail to come through, M. P. & Co. are entirely to the frittz, so far as 1913 is concerned.

And as for our own little outlook, that depends very largely on what is happening to the Gulls.

* * *

OF course, as long as Mique Finn can keep his justly celebrated $30 ball club steaming along at anything approaching its present clip, it really doesn't make a blamed bit of difference whether the Crackers win double-headers and things or lose them.

That is the strategic disadvantage of being seven or eight laps back of the pacemaker.

ON the whole, we are beginning to frog up a little stuff about the prospects for 1914—proclaiming loudly, nevertheless, our entire willingness to die game on the platform as adopted by the 1913 convention.

* * *

THAT Chattanooga series, now, fell in on us at a thoroughly unfortunate place.

Chapman was injured and the services of the speedy and hard-hitting Tommy Long were lost after the first indecisive struggle.

* * *

That of itself would make an acceptable alibi, if this were the open season for alibis.

Except, in that case, the Pepper Kids could put witnesses on the stand to testify to their own dismemberment and the fact that they had so few pitchers that the huge Pole had to be unloaded three times in one series.

That, however, is strictly an alibi with a flareback. If the full staff of Chattanooga hurlers could have been sent against the Crackers in order, and the Pole left in the lumber pile, it would have been an agreeable surprise for the Town Boys.

That's the kind of a pest the Pole is.

* * *

WELL, here are the Barons, and, as stated somewhere up ahead near the baggage car of this alleged train of thought, the meeting is in the nature of a grouch fight.

That usually makes business good—also baseball. No man full of red corpuscles cares to see a baseball game played as if between roommates.

Then, too, Bill Smith's birthday comes along next Wednesday, and there is going to be a little party at Ponce DeLeon in his honor. There will be a band, and about nine thousands guests are expected—if it doesn't rain.

This will be a good chance for the great body of fans who like Bill and his work to come out and let him know about it.

LARGE CROWD SEES YOUNG AND WILLARD WORK OUT

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 18.—Packed to capacity training camp crowds saw "White Hope" Jess Willard and "Bull" Young, matched to box twenty rounds before the Pacific A. C. at Vernon next Friday night, go through with their work-outs yesterday afternoon.

Leach Cross, matched to box Mexican Joe Rivers on Labor Day, returned from Catalina Island yesterday and will immediately open his camp at Doyle's resort, Vernon. Rivers will start work to-morrow. The local boy is to select a camp site at one of the beaches.

EARLY BASEBALL MEETING.

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—The annual meeting of the baseball league will be held here in October instead of December, according to B. B. Johnson. The earlier date was chosen on account of the world tour of the Chicago club.

A. A. C. WILL HAVE WATER SPORTS NEXT SATURDAY

There will be a lot of splashing, plain and fancy, at East Lake next Saturday when the second annual "water sports day" is to be observed by the Atlanta Athletic Club.

The water sports committee now is at work on the program, on which there are to be nine events, including swimming, canoeing, boat racing and fancy diving.

A dinner-dance will top off the afternoon's diversions.

JEANNETTE AND LANGFORD TO CLASH IN 10-ROUND GO

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Sam Langford, the Boston "Tar Baby," and Joe Jeannette, the Hoboken heavyweight, have signed articles to box ten rounds at Madison Square Garden the latter part of September. The match was closed yesterday.

KETCHEL GETS LONG SCRAP WITH EDDIE JOHNSON

DENVER, COL., Aug. 18.—Steve Ketchel's manager, Larry Lichtenstein, to-day accepted the terms of Jimmie Fitzpatrick to have the Englewood lightweight star meet Eddie Johnson, the "fighting Dane," before the Pueblo Athletic Club, September 15. This contest is scheduled to take place during "Star Fair Week" and the fighters will go twenty rounds, but not to be 133 pounds at 3 o'clock.

BROOKLYN MAKING CHANGES.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Aug. 18.—The Brooklyn club yesterday announced the unconditional release of Outfielder Scheer. Catcher Edwin was sent to Toronto. The club has exercised its claim on Outfielder Hub Northern of Toronto and relinquished its claims on Pitcher Williams of Nashville and Pitcher Echardt of Indianapolis.

PALZER TO MEET MORAN AT NEW YORK NEXT MONTH

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Al Palzer, the big Iowa farmer, plans to celebrate his return to form again with a bout with Frank Moran of Pittsburg, at the St. Nicholas Club here on September 3. The Pittsburg heavy has improved steadily of late and believes he can give the undefeated Western a very interesting evening.

Both fighters expect to start training shortly for the bout.

CHAMPAIGN WINS FLAG IN ILLINOIS-MISSOURI LEAGUE

CHAMPAIGN, ILL., Aug. 18.—Champaign won the pennant of the four-club race of the Illinois-Missouri League, after a brush with Lincoln, which was only decided by the final game of the season. As Lincoln won the six-club race last year a post-season series will be played between Champaign and Lincoln. Champaign played a doubleheader with Streator as the season's windup, winning both games, 6 to 1 and 2-1.

DUNDEE AND AD WILL NOT BOX BEFORE THEIR BOUT

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 18.—Ad Wolgast and Johnny Dundee have telegraphed that they will live up to their articles of agreement with Promoter T. J. McCarey and will not enter the ring until they face each other here on admission day.

Dundee returned from San Francisco yesterday morning and Wolgast is to follow inside the next few days.

"My alleged match with Tommy Murphy was only to bluff Wolgast out of fighting young Azevedo," said Manager "Scotty" Monteith. "We had no intention of breaking our contract. We do not want anybody else to get a chance at Ad before us. Dundee will stop Wolgast inside the twenty round limit."

MEAT IS GOING UP AND UP AND UP

Experts Say Country Will Have Worst Shortage of Beef in Its History.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18—This country will experience next winter the greatest shortage of beef in its history. Prices, which already have advanced 25 to 50 per cent in a year, are to be 10 to 13 per cent higher by January 1. Meat will sell at unheard of figures.

The representative of a big packer in Chicago said yesterday: "Forty cents a pound for the choice cuts seem a certainty, 45 cents in a probability, and even 50 cents a possibility before spring."

George L. McCarthy, proprietor of The National Provisioner, said today that the stock population in the United States is more depleted at present than it has been at any previous time in ten years. That in itself, Mr. McCarthy said, is sufficient cause for very high retail prices. But the drought in Kansas, Oklahoma and the Southwest has aggravated the situation bad before, till it may now be called alarming.

Sky-High Prices by Midwinter.

The expert buyer for Richard Webber, a butcher with an extensive business in New York, didn't hesitate to say that prices are going sky-high by midwinter. The average price paid by the laborer for beef to-day, he said, is 16 cents a pound. The same cuts will cost 18 cents or more in a few months.

The same authority predicted that the average price of sirloin steaks will creep up 3 cents in as many months, while the average price of porterhouse steaks will advance 4 to 5 cents in the same period.

The corn-killing drought in Kansas and neighboring States has deprived the cattle-raising sections of feed for their stock. Fodder remains, but the corn itself, necessary to fatten the steers for market, will have to be shipped into sections of country naturally grain exporters, at an expense that will preclude the idea of satisfactory profit by cattle raisers at anything near the present prices.

For ten days a steady rush of cattle to the big stock markets of the Middle West has been in progress. The raisers can't afford to hold and feed the cattle. In many instances, cows are being sent to market in such numbers that the generation of calves due next spring will be much less than the average.

Rushed to the Slaughter Houses.

Cattle receipts in the Western markets first rose above the normal when the hot weather killed the pasturage. Carload after carload of steers went to Chicago and Kansas City. The general movement to the slaughter houses is still in progress. In the first three days of the present week 129,000 cattle were received at the Western markets, nearly as many as in the entire week a year ago.

The same condition to a certain extent holds true in the hog market, and receipts have been nearly doubled since the drought.

The general situation is about as bad in the East. Mr. McCarthy said that farmers over a great part of the East are selling cattle just now that they would be holding had the hay crop been up to the standard.

Live stock prices are naturally slumping while the markets are loaded with stock. But in spite of the fact that steers and hogs are costing the packers less than at any time for several months no reduction in the wholesale price of meats is announced, and the housewife has obtained no benefits because of the present abnormal conditions in the markets.

The drought, according to stock men, will result in immense profits for the packers because of their ability to buy now and when the cattle raisers are at a disadvantage and to set prices this winter when there is a scarcity in the cattle receipts.

To The Young Expectant Mother

Women of Experience Advise the Use of Mother's Friend.

There is a certain degree of trepidation in the minds of most women in regard to the subject of motherhood. The coming to possess is often contradicted by the inherent fear of a period of distress.

But there need be no such dread in view of the fact that we have a most noble remedy in what is known as Mother's Friend. This is an external application that has a wonderful influence and control over the muscular tissues of the abdomen. By its daily use the muscles, cords, tendons and ligaments all gently expand without the slightest strain; there is no pain, no nausea, no nervousness; what was dreaded as a severe physical ordeal becomes a calm, serene, joyful anticipation that has its impress such as our foremost teachers of Eugenics are striving to drill into the minds of the present generation.

In almost every community there are women who have used Mother's Friend, and they are the ones that recovered quickly, conserved their health and strength to thus preside over families destined by every rule of physiology and the history of successful men and women to repeat the story of greater achievement.

Mother's Friend is prepared after the formula of a noted family doctor by the Bradfield Regulator Co., 138 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Write them for their instructive book for expectant mothers. You will find Mother's Friend on sale by all drug stores at $1.00 a bottle.

Burglars Get $600 Worth of Jewelry In Home; Rob Store

Burglars broke into the home of J. W. Russell, No. 3 Lafayette Drive, Ansley Park, Saturday night and stole $600 worth of jewelry. The department store of Morris Brothers, No. 137 Decatur street, was entered through the skylight and a large amount of clothing was stolen.

The robbery at the Russell home was discovered about 11 o'clock, when the family returned. The rooms on the upper floor had been ransacked. Entrance had been gained through a window. Among the stolen articles was Mrs. Russell's wedding ring and two fine watches.

In breaking into the Morris store the burglars were compelled to cross the roofs of seven buildings. They gained access to the roof of the first one from the Washington street viaduct.

New Boll Worm Invades Carolina

GREENVILLE, S. C., Aug. 18.—From Dunklin Township, in this county, come alarming reports of the invasion in that section of a small worm which is said to be playing havoc by devouring cotton bolls.

Large fields of cotton, it is said, are infested with the worm, and the farmers are greatly exercised. They are unable to account for the presence of the worms, and they say they are the first of the kind ever seen in this section.

The worms are rapidly spreading over the lower section of the county, and it is feared that unless something is quickly done to stop the ravages of the pest the crop in that section will be seriously damaged.

Underwood Urged to Run for the Senate

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 18.—Friends of Congressman Oscar W. Underwood, leader in the House of Representatives, are urging him to become a candidate for the United States Senate in the elections of next year, to take effect in 1915.

Even with the positive announcement that he is going to run to the very last, made by Congressman Richmond Pearson Hobson, who has been in the canvass for some time and is still running, it is believed that it would come to pass that Congressman Underwood would have no opposition.

Broker Tries Suicide; Saved by Pulmotor

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Harry Lattimer Bloodgood, broker and society man, attempted suicide by gas, but was saved from death by the use of a pulmotor.

Bloodgood was found in his home with his face covered by a large tin funnel attached to the end of a tube through which gas was flowing. He was seemingly lifeless. The pulmotor soon revived him.

Bloodgood is a brother-in-law of Clara Bloodgood, the actress who killed herself in Baltimore a few years ago.

Mount Zion Plans Big Camp Meeting

GRIFFIN, Aug. 18.—A coming event for the next week that is attracting unusual attention is the opening of the annual camp meeting at the old historic Mount Zion camp ground next Friday night.

Camp meetings have been held annually at that camp ground since 1832, excepting the years of the Civil War.

U. S. Gunboat Nearly Wrecked by Typhoon

SHANGHAI, Aug. 18.—The United States gunboat Wilmington had a narrow escape from destruction in the harbor here to-day during a typhoon. Her anchor began to drag and was going toward shore when rescued by a powerful tug.

The storm did great damage to shipping.

Negro Slayer Taken To Macon for Safety

MACON, Aug. 18.—Doc Mathis, a negro charged with having shot and killed R. L. Jossey, a prominent Lee County planter, was brought to Macon yesterday and lodged in the Bibb County jail for safekeeping. Threats of lynching had been made.

He was trapped at his home at Williamsburg, and fired at the arresting officers several times while they were approaching his house.

OBITUARY

The funeral of William F. Robinson, who died at a hospital Sunday, will be held at the residence, 339 Greenwich avenue, West End, at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon. He was 56 years old, and is survived by his wife, five sons, R. L., W. B., C. H., Angus and John Robinson; four daughters, Mrs. C. J. Endemoser, Misses Mae and Lucile Robinson, of Atlanta, and Mrs. E. C. Henderson, of Jacksonville, Fla.; his mother, Mrs. Martha A. Powell, of Central, S. C.; one sister, Mrs. F. B. Morgan, of the same place, and two brothers, T. A. Robinson, of Winslow, Ala., and J. F. Robinson, of Atlanta. Interment at Westview.

J. S. Brooks, a veteran of the Civil War, died at the Soldiers' Home Sunday. He was 77 years old. The body is at Poole's chapel, pending funeral arrangements.

The funeral of Beulah B. Jones, infant child of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Jones, who died Saturday, was held from the home Monday morning. Interment at Hollywood.

Benjamin E. Dearybury, 2-year-old infant of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Dearybury, 72 Spring street, died at a private sanitarium at 2 o'clock Monday morning. The body was removed to Poole's and funeral announcements will be made later.

WIVES OF DIGGS AND CAMINETTI WILL TESTIFY

Women To Be Asked to Tell of Their Knowledge of Husbands' Elopement

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 18.—Interest in the trial of Maury I. Diggs on the charge of violating the white slave law will be given fresh impetus to-morrow, when Mrs. Diggs and the wife of F. Drew Caminetti will take the stand as witnesses for the defense.

Mrs. Diggs, who is a handsome, dark-eyed woman, was expected to be called as the first witness. Last Friday she appeared in court with her young daughter, Evelyn, and was one of the most observed persons that sat facing the bench presided over by Federal Judge Van Fleet.

Mrs. Diggs and Mrs. Caminetti will be asked by the defense to tell of their knowledge of the relations between their husbands and Marsha Warrington and Lola Norris.

It is the contention of the attorneys for the defense that one of the reasons for the flight of Diggs and Caminetti to Reno with the two girls was that they believed their wives were about to have them prosecuted by the officials of the juvenile court of Sacramento. It is maintained by the defense that Mrs. Caminetti told her husband that she had complained to Judge Hughes, of the juvenile court of Sacramento, about Diggs and Caminetti in an effort to induce them to sever their relations with Miss Warrington and Miss Norris.

The Government contends that Diggs and Caminetti were reckless debauchers who had decided to go to Reno to desert their wives and induce the girls to lead immoral lives, in violation of the Mann act.

Promoter in Jail, Oil Wells Are Idle

GADSDEN, Aug. 18.—The conviction of E. C. Drew, the Fort Payne oil well promoter, will, it is believed, bring to a close the drilling for oil in DeKalb County.

Nobody appeared to have much faith in oil being found there except Drew. With five years in the penitentiary confronting him, Drew still contends that he will continue his drilling and that eventually he will find oil. But, no matter whether oil is found or not, Drew is held guilty of using the mails to defraud, first because the company in which he sought to sell stock was not regularly organized and second because he applied the money to other purposes than that for which it was intended.

Patten, Again in Pit, Cleans Up $500,000

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—James A. Patten, whose deals in grain and cotton in the last decade have attracted world-wide attention, is once more the central figure in a speculation that is causing the corn pit on the Board of Trade to boil with excitement.

Mr. Patten started to buy corn three weeks ago, when the first reports that hot weather and drought were damaging the crop began to come in. His paper profits at the present time are said to be at least $500,000.

'Cattle Queen' Freed Leases All 'Movies'

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS, COLO., Aug. 18.—In celebration of her acquittal on the charge of "rustling" cattle Anna Bernard, known as the "Cattle Queen," leased all the moving picture houses in the town for the night and treated her friends to screened thrills.

FAMOUS STARS NEW TO SOUTH BOOKED HERE

Manager George of the Atlanta Announces List—Season Opens With Musical Show Sept. 3.

The first harbinger of the new theatrical season has reached Atlanta in the person of Homer C. George, manager of the Atlanta Theater. Returning from his vacation, he stopped by the New York office of Klaw & Erlanger and crowded his grip with news of coming shows. The Shuberts and the Frohmans will be well represented.

The attractive playhouse will open with a predominance of musical shows as usual. According to Mr. George, the first breaths of fall that come with September nights are not sufficiently bracing for anything "heavy," and the first productions will be bright and breezy.

"Mary's Lamb" will be the opener, September 3. "Little Miss Fix-it," "who" caused much talk in New York, will be the second, and "The Merry Countess," one of the big hits of the Shuberts, will come third. An early big attraction will be Otis Harlan in a Savage production of "Little Boy Blue."

Favorites Are Coming.

In the galaxy of stars who are to perform to Atlanta audiences Mr. George points out a number of new ones to the South. Of course many favorites will return. To the trained theatergoer no announcement could produce a keener thrill than the statement that Rose Stahl, who delighted so many in the "Chorus Lady," will come early in her new play, "Maggie Pepper," and that William Faversham will appear in an all-star cast of "Julius Caesar."

But to take them as they come—Mr. George announces the tentative program in this wise:

Miss Annie Russell, three nights, the minstrels of Al G. Field, followed a month later by a reunion of the Dockstader and Primrose shows. In [illegible] come "Home" [illegible] George Evans and then Nell O'Brien.

Big Scenic Plays.

May Irwin is coming in November with her big Cohan Theater success of last season. Robert Hilliard will appear as Detective William J. Burns in a thrilling drama. Early in December Klaw & Erlanger will present that wonderful scenic play, "Ben Hur," for a week.

"Fine Feathers," a new Eugene Walters success, will be here in December, as well as the memorial players from Stratford-on-Avon, producing the drama as it was in Shakespeare's time.

And fascinating Mme. Nazimova is coming in "Bella Donna," and the wonderful Mme. Pavlowa, the Russian dancer, with "her special permit from the Czar" to leave that country.

Henry Miller is coming in "The Rainbow" and Otis Skinner in "Kismet," said to be his greatest success.

And one of the most important of all the announcements is that the unusual play, "Damaged Goods," by the famous French dramatist, Brieux, will be shown. It probably created more comment than any play presented in New York last season, its first production being semi-private, under the auspices of a medical organization.

Other popular plays booked are: "Within the Law," "Ready Money," "Romance," "Peg o' My Heart," "The Conspiracy," "Little Women," "Blue Bird," "The Girl of My Dreams," "Broadway Jones," "The Governor's Lady," "Stop Thief," and others.

Adrianople Guarded By 400,000 Moslems

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 18.—War Minister Enver Bey is hurling an army of 400,000 men into Thrace to defend Adrianople against the Bulgarians. Representatives of the Porte to-day declared that Europe's demand that Turkey give up Adrianople to the Bulgarians will be rejected.

Turkish soldiers have obtained the port of Dedeaghatch.

PLAN ALL-DAY SINGING.

VIDALIA, Aug. 18.—The Toombs County singing convention leaders are making plans for a big all-day singing scheduled for the fifth Sunday in August.

In your hand you hold a five-cent piece.

Right at the grocer's hand is a moisture-proof package of Uneeda Biscuit. He hands you the package—you hand him the coin. A trifling transaction?

No! A remarkable one—for you have spent the smallest sum that will buy a package of good food; and the grocer has sold you the most nutritious food made from flour—as clean and crisp and delicious as it was when it came from the oven.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

Drawing for Last 2,000,000 Acres U.S. Lands Is Announced

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Two million acres, the best wheat land on earth, according to James J. Hill, will be distributed to settlers by the United States September 23 at a public drawing by number at Glasgow, Mont. The land consists of a tract 80 by 40 miles and is known as the Fort Peck Reservation. It is the last Government reservation to be divided by Uncle Sam.

The tract borders on the Missouri River and formerly was the property of the Sioux Indians. Of the acreage to be allotted 487,000 acres are agricultural land for which applicants will be charged a nominal price of from $5 to $7 an acre, and 738,000 acres is in grazing land, for which $2.50 to $3 will be charged. Applications for the land will be received from September 1 to 20.

Fear Kept Man Off Cars All His 83 Years

LIZTON, IND., Aug. 18.—William Northcutt, aged 85, is dead, after spending his whole life without ever once riding in a railroad train, automobile or street car.

He claimed they were too fast and too dangerous.

3 NEGROES SLAIN; 20 OTHERS JAILED

With three negroes killed and a fourth seriously wounded in free-for-all cutting scrapes Sunday, twenty negroes are under arrest at police headquarters, two charged with murder and the remainder charged with fighting, frequenting blind tigers, and a host of misdemeanors.

The two against whom the charge of murder has been placed are B. C. Smith and Ed Smith, alias Ed Campbell. The third murderer, who is still at large, is said by the police to be Phoney Johnson, a negro desperado with a long police record.

Ed Smith, while resisting arrest after shooting Peter Jackson at 72 James street, was shot in the hand by Officer Palmer. B. C. Smith was captured after a hard chase by Officers Davis and Fielder and Louis Castro.

Most of the trouble started in blind tigers throughout the city. Johnson, after getting drunk, went to the home of Munch Harris, 282 Butler street, and stabbed him to death. B. C. Smith killed John Henry Wilkerson at 80 Decatur street about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and half an hour later Peter Jackson was shot by Ed Smith.

SLIT SKIRT HEALTH AID, SAYS EXPERT

DENVER, Aug. 18.—Wilbur F. Cannon, former pure food commissioner, has rushed to the defense of the X-ray and slit skirts with these five reasons:

The X-ray and slit skirts permit circulation of air about the body.

The absence of many underskirts relieves the strain on the hips and prevents kidney trouble.

Absence of the usual amount of clothes makes frequent bathing necessary and frequent bathing opens the pores and makes the bath quite healthy.

Absence of many clothes makes the body movement freer, thus saving energy.

There is less labor required in the care of clothes, such as washing, ironing and mending.

VOTE ON COURT CHANGE.

JACKSON, Aug. 18.—The City Court of Jackson was amended by the last session of the general assembly, subject to a ratification of the people. The matter will be voted on September 3. As amended, the Solicitor will receive a salary instead of fees.

BIG CAMP MEETING CLOSES.

JACKSON, Aug. 18.—Sunday night marked the closing session of the Indian Springs Holiness camp meeting, and what was generally declared to have been the most successful meeting in the history of the association.

Lungs Were Affected; Now in Good Health

The makers of Eckman's Alterative, a remedy for Throat and Lung Troubles, do not claim that it will restore every one to perfect health, but so many have voluntarily testified it saved their lives that all who have this dread disease should investigate and try it. It should stop the night sweats, reduce fever, promote appetite and in very many cases prolong life. Read what it accomplished in this case:

Catherine Ave. and Ascot Place,
Queen's Court, L. I.

"Gentlemen: In the year 1908 I was taken with a heavy cold and a nasty cough and went to several doctors, including a specialist. Their medicines failed. My brother then recommended Eckman's Alterative to me very highly. It is now nearly two years since I first took it. I am now well and I dare say that I would have been buried long ago if it had not been for Eckman's Alterative. I wish to thank you for the Godsend to me. Wherever I go I highly recommend the Alterative, as I owe my life to it."

(Affidavit) JOS. J. TROESCHER.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all of Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

MAKE MONEY WITH POULTRY.

AMERICAN POULTRY is a magazine devoted entirely to helping earnest men and women make a financial success of poultry raising. Its staff of writers is composed entirely of those who have made a practical, instead of theoretical, success of poultry farming, and who are glad to pass on the results of their hard-earned experience to AMERICAN POULTRY readers. There are many pitfalls in the path of the novice which may be entirely avoided by those who will follow the teachings set forth in this magazine. It fully explains how to make a start, how to construct houses, coops, and other devices, how to get a large egg yield, how to cure and prevent disease, how to exhibit, how to get the top price for eggs, how to use incubators and hundreds of other points which every one wishes to know. It explains the famous secret system through which poultrymen have become rich and afterwards solid for hundreds of dollars. AMERICAN POULTRY is a large, handsomely illustrated, monthly journal, well printed on fine paper, and should be found on file in the home of every poultry lover. No beginner in the poultry business should think of being without it. It will save him many times the small subscription price. The advanced poultryman will also find it of great value; the articles being varied in their scope.

SPECIAL OFFER. The regular price of AMERICAN POULTRY is 50c per year, but in order to introduce it to several thousand new readers, we will, for a short time, give a large 200-page poultry book, which is a complete guide in the poultry business, absolutely free to every one sending 50c for a yearly subscription or $1.00 for a three-year-subscription to AMERICAN POULTRY. A trial six months' subscription (without book) will be sent for 25c. Never has so much been offered for so small a sum. Advantage of this offer should be taken at once.

BOTH PHONES 2568.

IF OUR CUSTOMERS living on the North and South Sides place their orders before 9 o'clock and the ones in Inman Park and West End before 2 o'clock, they will be delivered the same day the orders are given. We are trying to give the very best service possible, and if our customers will bear in mind the hours that our deliveries leave the store it will insure prompt service.

IT IS ABSOLUTELY necessary for chickens to have green food during the winter. This can easily be supplied if you will plant out a small patch of rye and rape. They both grow very rapidly and will furnish an abundance of green food all the winter. Now is the time to plant.

THIS IS THE MOULTING SEASON, and that means that the hens should be fed a good tonic. Pratt's Poultry Regulator and Conkey's Laying Tonic insure a quick and complete moult, and that means plenty of eggs during the fall and winter, when they bring the high prices; 25c, 50c and $1 package.

Medium-Sized Acreage Tracts

ALL of us know the profit that is usually made from acreage.

It is almost a conceded fact that if a person owns good acreage, he has a sure profit in it sooner or later. When we think of acreage propositions, we think of lots of land, and naturally lots of money, because the usual acreage transaction involves a great deal of money. The demand for good, close-in acreage for subdivision purposes is increasing every day. A trip to the outskirts of the city in any direction you choose to take will convince you of this fact. We are going to offer a tract of about 100 acres, between Decatur and East Lake, which we have cut up into five, ten and fifteen-acre tracts. The price and terms on these tracts make it possible for almost anybody to handle them.

TEXAS WEATHER PUZZLES TRADE

Ring Unloads Cotton Freely on Lone Star State Rains—Big Interests Buy on Hot Weather.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Trading was extremely active at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 14 to 17 points lower than the closing quotations of Saturday. Reports were coming from private houses that light rains had occurred throughout Oklahoma and Texas late Saturday. This, coupled with extremely weak cables, was responsible for the lower opening. The market was without suport at the decline. The ring was apparently long and were throwing cotton over from the general selling that was going on. Wall Street and many of the large spot houses were also noticeable sellers. Liverpool was also on the bear side on the rains reported from Texas and was sold from this side. After half an hour of trading prices showed further recessions of 3 to 5 points from the initial range.

During the forenoon the market developed a better tone through rather free buying from certain strong interests, based on special telegraphic reports on Texas rainfall and weather conditions, which was considered rather bullish. Price movement ranged a few points better than the opening range.

Strong sources fought the market on the high temperatures in Oklahoma and Texas and wires received reporting considerable damage by the continued drouth and extremely hot weather. The feeling altogether is far more bullish than it hasbe en for sometime past. Memphis is said to have been a good buyer in the market to-day also a good many other Southern points. Those inclined to the bear side are of the opinion that should good value come over the west that we may expect a considerable decline. Prices, however, were held within a narrow range during the afternoon session.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 10 to 19 points from the final quotations of Saturday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 18.—Werther developments over Sunday were favorable, as there was precipitation in combination with cooler weather over the greater part of the western States, while rainfall was light in the eastern half of the belt. Indications are for further precipitation, particularly in the southern and western half of Texas. It will get cooler generally over the northern half of the belt. Weekly crop reports from Alabama are very good; all say complaints are very few; plant has maintained its vigor, is well fruited, no unusual shedding, free movement expected about the first week in September.

Liverpool came in about 5 points lower this morning due. Spots 6 points lower; sales 7,000 bales. Cables continue to report slack business. First trades here were at a decline of about 16 points, encountering very good demand near 11c, which steadied prices. A disposition seems to prevail to reduce short lines on the opinion that relief in the west comes too late to affect Bureau returns, and that it might be safer to wait around 11c for that publication and the storm period.

RECENT SELLERS BUYING STOCKS

Westinghouse Electric Early Feature—Market Shows Considerable Strength.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Westinghouse showed the best gain at the opening of the stock market to-day, with an advance of 1¾. After opening at 72½, this issue climbed to 74½. The tone was strong at the beginning and most stocks made gains. Among them were Amalgamated Copper ⅞, United States Steel common ½, Union Pacific ⅝, Southern Pacific ½, Missouri Pacific ⅜, Canadian Pacific ⅜, Erie ½, St. Paul ½, Chino Copper ½, American Telegraph and Telephone ⅛, American Can ⅛.

Reading began at 198⅞ for a slight gain, but later receded. New York, New Haven and Hartford, which closed Saturday at par, opened at 99¾.

The curb market was steady.

Americans in London held above New York parity. Canadian Pacific in London gained on strength of reports that storms in the Northwest had not done so much damage to railroad property as first reported.

What Do You Suppose Interests Them on Board the Train?

National Affairs, Great Discoveries, News of Historical Inportance? Not at All—Something Simpler.

"It hath not yet been shown what we shall be" is a fine sounding sentence, descriptive of our future greatness. "It hath not yet been shown what petty, little human mice we are" is a sentence that would describe pretty well the human race of to-day.

You have only to observe the mental occupations of your fellow passengers on Pullman coaches running between Atlanta and New York to be convinced of the vacuity of human minds, their absence of thought, their aversion to study.

Here are men traveling nearly a thousand miles, propelled by force buried in the coal several million years ago.

They travel in rooms lighted with the electric power that flashes in the clouds, on rails and wheels of steel.

Their journey is the result of millions of years of the earth's development, and hundreds of thousands of years in the development of human intelligence, AND THEIR MINDS ARE ON GAMES OR AMUSEMENT OR FOLLIES OF ONE KIND OR ANOTHER.

You see solemn old men and distressed old women reading—novels usually vapid or vulgar—when they are not playing bridge or solitaire.

If you see someone interested in a newspaper, what do you suppose most attracts his attention? Let us look over his shoulder and see.

No, gentle or fierce reader, he has not been reading important news of the Balkan war.

He hasn't wondered whether the United States would spread as it should all the way down this continent and stop just south of the Panama canal—for the present.

He hasn't been reading bulletins of scientific discovery, or news of importance in the world and its history.

He has been reading the important fact that Sommers "pitched" and Graham "caught" for Chattanooga, while Dent "pitched" and Dunn "caught" for Atlanta.

He has been reading the numbers of runs, hits and errors—if you know what they are—and finding out who won in various games of baseball throughout the country.

The human race has not grown up to its possibilities.

It is a race of children, easily tired, incapable of concentrated, earnest thought.

It is a race of men who work like beavers, or ants, or prairie dogs through the day, each in his own little direction, indifferent to the others, and who unite in intellect in the evening, not upon any subject worthy of the brain of a man, but in intense interest in some poor little make-believe game.

These men, "heirs of all the ages," have their magnificent minds concentrated on a childish game that could have been played and was played in another form by the savages that lived here before language was perfected.

Many a weary century must pass before the human mice of the present day will be really MEN.

Woes of "Affinity" Earle's Soul-Mates.

The folly of certain "advanced ideas" on marriage, that rise, phoenix-like, from the ashes of dead loves, comes with fresh proof in a London cable telling of a suit for divorce by the third wife of Ferdinand Pinney Earle, the New York artist, who has been in the limelight for years because of his love affairs.

The unsophisticated daughter of an English architect, Mrs. Earle No. 3—"the loveliest, sweetest, dearest of them all"—said she knew nothing of the American "affinity" advocate when she married him, two months after their first meeting. Now the mother of his child, she seeks her freedom on the ground of cruelty. Thus it was with Emilie Fischbacher and Julia Kuttner, both of whom Earle married and later lost.

Advocates of a nondescript affection may conjure up new forms of wedlock as an improvement on the old-fashioned vows, but such theories are like "silly moths that singe their wings and fall into dust." Discord and strife are the invariable accompaniments of defiance of the laws of decency and honor.

It is a fact that monogamic races have made the greatest progress in civilization. It was the monogamic barbarians, the virtuous Saxon vandals, that drove the hardest bargains with the Roman emperors. They preserved their rugged, healthy state from the weakening vices of a decadent age.

Pioneers who have cut the hard granite, hewn the tall trees, conquered the wilderness and forwarded the arts and sciences—who have made America the greatest miracle in the annals of the nations—all have had a wholesome regard for the sanctity of the marriage covenant. They rarely entered lightly into wedlock. Enemies of the free love that feeds on empty promises of a superfine conjugality, they were ever loyal to the lesson of Jana in Galilee.

Artist Earle's marital misfortunes are the common lot of all so-called idealists who set their own opinions against the experiences of the centuries. The religious element of the marriage relation can not be ignored without bringing counter obligations that gall and bind the offenders with worse cords than those that fret the flesh.

PRESBYTERIAN DOCTRINE

Editor Georgian:

Your recent statement, "The Presbyterian teaching of infant damnation seems to us horrible," is a gross misrepresentation, to say the least of it. And it is up to you to quote authorities and prove it, or else retract it. If I knew that you were a Methodist, I would tell you it was Wesley, and not John Calvin, who once held such a belief. I come of Presbyterian ancestry dating back about two centuries, and claim to know something of the denomination at large. But I have never read or heard of one Presbyterian of any note who so believed and taught.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox Writes on Unfit Mothers

Poverty Does Not Make Them So, as Many Are Rich. Criticism Committees Should Be Established Everywhere.

Written for The Atlanta Georgian

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

"THE unfitness of mothers of dependent children, complained of by 'organized charity' is in my opinion all caused by poverty.

"'The Mothers' Pension law recently enacted by the legislatures of eighteen States will, to a great extent, make the unfit mother fit because the pension removes the cause of her unfitness, which is her poverty.

"It is the common observation that the very fine and very fit mother becomes comparatively unfit to take care of her children after a few years of hopeless struggle with poverty.

"The mistake of organized charity is their allowing good mothers of dependent children to be made unfit by the poison of poverty, the poison of hopelessness, the poison of overwork in trying to earn the living for their children at hard work and give proper care to their children at the same time.

"Organized charity contends that a mother should have her children taken away from her because poverty has made her temporarily unfit.

"The real friends of the poor, the advocates of mothers' pensions, believe that the mother should have the cause of her unfitness removed and not her children. HENRY NEIL."

Unfit Mothers Caused by Poverty Open to Doubt.

MOTHERS' pensions now extend from coast to coast.

One can now travel from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean going through mothers' pension States only, starting on the coast of New Jersey and going through Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Utah, Nevada to the coast of California.

Other mothers' pension States are Washington, Oregon, Idaho, South Dakota, Minnesota, Massachusetts, New Hampshire—eighteen in all.

Three cities that have local mothers' pension laws are Kansas City, St. Louis and Milwaukee.

Meantime the statement of Mr. Neil that the unfit mothers are caused by poverty is open to doubt.

Some of the most unfit mothers to be found on earth are women of wealth.

Two little girls on board a large ocean liner were the daughters of a New York banker, and their mother, was an educated woman, and their father was a man of parts; yet there were never seen on earth more insufferably disagreeable children than these. They were ill-mannered, impertinent, unkind and ungracious. The chief steward in the dining salon was obliged to rebuke them for their impertinence and their annoying treatment of other passengers.

The children she had should have been taken away from such parents and placed under wise and worthy instructors.

A woman who has been reared with excellent opportunities for culture is the mother of four children. There is no financial strain upon the family, yet the children have never been taught any of the gracious and lovely traits which help to build a worthy character and a pleasing personality.

Every School and Church Should Have a Criticism Committee.

Loud, harsh voices, flat contradictions, continual quarreling and the most disagreeable qualities distinguish this family.

Such parents are certainly unfit to bring up families.

A fund for the erection of a large scientific institution, such as Dr. Elmer Gates has always longed to see established, would be a benefit to the world, an institution where the brain cells of vulgar and disorderly children, as well as the perverted and viciously inclined, could be developed into constructive qualities.

Every school and church in the land ought to have a "criticism committee," such as existed in the Oneida community years ago.

To this committee every person who had a complaint to make of the manners or conduct of another member of the community went, and the committee called the offending person with the complainant, and the whole subject was calmly and thoroughly investigated. And reproof was administered where it belonged, and if it was proven that any personal or selfish or jealous feelings prompted the complainant, he was the one reproved and publicly placed under ban, and made to see how unworthy was his action.

An Institution for Brain Building Would Also Be Good.

Unselfishness was the religious keynote of the society, and had it let sex problems alone it would have been one of the greatest factors for bettering the world which ever existed in America.

If our schools and colleges and churches could adopt this excellent idea of the Oneida community and established the "Criticism committee" and then carry Dr. Elmer Gates' dream of a brain-building institution into realization, the children of the idle rich might stand as good a chance of becoming agreeable and useful citizens as do the children of the poor to-day.

: A DEAD FIRE :

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

WHERE some lean trapper lingered long ago
To make himself secure against the night,
It stays a scar whereon no blade will grow,
Its old, cold ashes sifting to and fro,
Its charred sticks black where once was leaping light.

All green and lovely lies the forest floor
Around this patch of ever-barren soil;
Nearby the pinks and daisies bloom once more
Abundantly as in the years before,
Watching the queer gray serpents writhe and coil.

In all the world of grim and ghostly sights
There is no sight more like to lasting pain,
Suggesting hopeless days and long, sad nights;
It is the ashen wraith of past delights—
It is the heart of one who loved in vain.

WIFE IN TEARS AS FRANK CONCLUDES HIS REMARKABLE STORY

Leo Frank made the sensational charge Saturday afternoon that some one had made an erasure of the very writing he had placed on the time slip being Newt Lee's punches, of April 26, for the express purpose of identification.

"But they were not so successful that they obliterated it completely," said Frank, holding up the time slip, "although they did partly erase the red lines on the slip. You still can see the words, 'Taken out at 8:26 a. m.' and the two lines I drew under it." Frank said that he had folded the time slip and given it to Chief Lanford.

Frank took a rap at Chief of Detectives Lanford when he told of taking the chief past the very place near the ladies' dressing room where the supposed blood spots later were found. He said the chief, though making a thorough investigation, failed to take any notice of the spots which later were to play an important part in the case.

Frank at 5 o'clock had been talking almost ceaselessly for three hours to the jurors who will pass on his guilt or innocence of the charge of murder.

He presented a wonderful review of each detail of work of the day. He explained the time slips; he told of calling Newt Lee the night of the tragedy; he gave his version of the events on which the Solicitor has thrown a sinister interpretation.

Standing out in startling distinctness from the mass of detail in Frank's statement were a number of declarations in which the prisoner took sharp issue with the charges of Solicitor Dorsey and the testimony of some of the State's witnesses.

Hits Testimony of Girl.

One of his most important denials was that of Miss Helen Ferguson, who said she came to his office Friday night, April 25, for the pay of Mary Phagan and was refused.

"No one came into my office that night to ask me for his or her pay envelope or the pay envelope of any other party," he said, decisively.

Dorsey had contended that Frank refused the pay envelope to the Phagan girl as part of a deliberately pre-arranged plan to get her to the factory on the next day and attack her.

At other times he contradicted flatly the insinuations of the Solicitor that he had not done Saturday afternoon certain portions of the work his lawyers claimed for him.

Discussing the testimony of Monteen Stover that she had entered his office at 12:05 o'clock, and that he was absent, he said that this might easily be so. He declared, however, that he could not remember leaving his office from the time he returned to the factory at 11 o'clock until he went to the fourth floor at 12:50 o'clock. He said there were a number of things which might have called him from the room for a few moments.

Frank finished his remarkable story at 6:05. As he finished his wife burst into tears and swooned away. She was given attention by her mother, Mrs. Selig, and soon recovered.

It is doubtful if a tale so clearly told, so thorough in its detail, so logically presented ever has been related in a Georgia court of justice by a man over whom has hung the accusation of a horrible murder.

His wife smiled affectionately at him when he told of his marriage to her and said with feeling: "My married life has been exceptionally happy; in fact, the happiest period of my life."

Words Grow in Force.

His words, dispassionate at first, grew in force as he proceeded, but he seldom departed from his moderate tone of voice. The only exceptions were when he was referring to some particularly vital point.

At on point he adverted to one of the Solicitor's charges that he had not done all the work on Saturday that his lawyers claimed for him. Frank displayed a sheaf of requisitions to the jurors, and said with a trace of heat:

"Notwithstanding any insinuations that may have been made, I—wrote—these—requisitions!"

He brought out the closing words with a startling force he had not displayed before, emphasizing each word with a blow of his hand on the railing in front of the jury box.

At another time he held up a long sample case of vari-colored pencils t othe view of the jury.

Solicitor Dorsey objected to the display of the pencils on the ground that they had not been introduced as evidence.

Frank smiled and said to the jurors:

"I guess you have seen enough of the pencils to perceive there are a great many kinds."

The spectators smiled with him as they saw he had accomplished all he desired.

Here is Frank's story as it was told with its various interruptions:

Mr. Arnold: "Now Mr. Frank, such papers as you want to use you can come down here at any time or from time to time and get them on this table right here.

The Court: "Before you commence your statement I want to read the law. In criminal procedure, the prisoner will have the right to make to the Court and jury such statement in the case as he may deem proper in his defense. It shall not be under oath and shall have such force as the jury shall think right to give it. They may believe it in preference to the sworn testimony in the case. The prisoner shall not be compelled to answer any questions on cross-examination. He should feel free to decline to answer them. Now you can make such statement as you see fit."

The defendant said: "Gentlemen of the jury, in 1884, the 17th day of April, I was born in Terrell, Tex. At the age of three months my parents took me to Brooklyn, N. Y., which became my home until I came South, to Atlanta, to make my home here. I attended the public schools of Brooklyn and prepared for college in Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"In the fall of 1902 I entered Cornell University, where I took the course of mechanical engineering, graduating after four years, in June, 1906. I then accepted a position as draughtsman with the B. F. Sturdevant Company, of Hyde Park, Mass. After remaining with this firm for about six months I returned once more to my home in Brooklyn, where I accepted a position as testing engineer and draughtsman with the National Meter Company of Brooklyn, N. Y.

"I remained with these parties until about the middle of October, 1907, when at the invitation of some citizens of Atlanta, I came South to confer with them with reference to the starting and operation of a pencil factory to be located in Atlanta. After remaining here for about two weeks I returned once more to New York, where I engaged passage and went to Europe. I remained in Europe nine months. During my sojourn abroad I studied the pencil business and looked after the erection and testing of machinery which had been previously traded for.

Looked After the Purchase of Mateials.

"In the first part of August, 1908, I returned once more to America, and immediately came South, to Atlanta, which has remained my home ever since. I married in Atlanta an Atlanta girl, Miss Lucille Selig. The major portion of my married life has been spent in the home of my parents-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. E. Selig, at No. 68 East Georgia avenue. My married life has been exceptionally happy, indeed—it has been the happiest days of my life.

"My duties as superintendent of the National Pencil Company were in general as follows: I took charge of the technical and mechanical end of the factory, looking after the processes and seeing that the product was turned out in quality equal to the standard which was set by our competitors. I looked after the installation of new machinery, and the purchasing of any machinery, and in addition I had charge of the office work at the Forsyth street plant, and the lead plant on Bell street.

"I looked after the purchasing of the raw material.' I saw after the manufacture of pencils and kept up with the market of these materials and when the prices fluctuated so that the purchases could be made to the best possible advantage.

"On Friday, April 25, I arrived at the pencil factory on Forsyth street at about 7 o'clock, my usual time. I immediately started in on my regular routine work, looking over the papers I had laid out the evening before, and attending to any work that needed my special attention that morning.

"At about 9:30 I went over to the office of the general manager and treasurer, Mr. Sigmund Montag, whose office is at Montag Brothers on Nelson street. I stayed over there a short time, and got what papers had arrived in the mail—all the mail of the pencil factory comes over to their office. I got that mail and brought it back to the Forsyth street office. I then separated the mail and continued in my usual routine duties in the office on Forsyth street.

"At about 11 o'clock Mr. Schiff handed me the payrool book, covering the plants at Forsyth street and Bell street, for me to check over and see if the amounts and extensions were correct. Of course, this work has to be very carefully done, so that the proper amount of money is drawn from the bank. This checking took me until about 12:20 p. m.

Went to Bank To Get Pay Money.

"I then went over to Montag Brothers, took the checks drawn and had them signed by Mr. Sig-Montag, after which I returned to Forsyth street and got the leather bag in which I usually carried the money and the coin from the bank, and got the payroll slip, on which the various demoniations which I desired to have on the payroll were made out, and went, accompanied by Mr. Herbert Schiff, my assistant, to the Atlanta National Bank, where I had the checks cashed.

"Returning to the factory in company with Mr. Schiff, I placed this bag containing the money for the payroll, in the safe and locked it. At this time my wife called for me and in her company and that of Mr. Schiff I went over to the car, and went with my wife home to lunch. After lunch I returned to the factory and took a tour for about an hour through the factory, after which I then assisted Mr. Schiff in checking over the amounts on the pay envelopes, checking the money against the duplicate slips that we had got from the bank to see that the correct amount had been given us, and helped Mr. Schiff in checking over the money and in filling the envelopes.

"This took us approximately until a quarter to six to fill the envelopes and seal them, and place them in a box we have there with two hundred pigeon holes in it, that we call our payoff box.

Paid One Man Check in Cash.

"While I was so occupied with Mr. Schiff in filling the envelopes, a young man named Wright who had helped us out in the office as clerk during the past week came in and I paid him in cash, as Mr. Schiff had neglected to put his name on the payroll. I just made out a ticket and put it in the payroll box, not the cash box, and continued in the office with Mr. Schiff, taking all the envelopes that were due the help that had worked from April 18 to April 24, inclusive, to pay them through the window in one side of the office. There is a little window built in the hall. I had stayed in my office, checking over the amount of money which had been left there.

"This amount should have been equal to the amount loaned out in advance to the help. I took a ticket out when we were filling the envelopes in checking this amount there. As near as I recollect it, it was about $15.

"I noticed a shortage of about $1.20, or something over a dollar, at any rate, and I kept checking to see if I could find the shortage shortage in the various deductions which had been made. I could not locate it that evening, after the help had been paid off, during which time I stayed in my office. No one came into my office and asked me for the envelope or for an envelope of any other party.

"After the paying off of the help had taken place, Mr. Schiff returned and handed me the envelopes which were left over, bound with an elastic band, and I put them in the cash compartment, which is different from the the cash box, the key to which is kept in my cash box, and placed them in the safe, and Mr. Schiff placed the amounts in the box, and placed the box in the safe and left them."

Tells of Puting Slips in Time Clock.

"I placed the time clock slips which were to be used the next day. I took the two time slips dated April 25, which had been used by the help on Friday, April 25—these are the two that I put in the slot" exhibiting the same to the jury.)

Mr. Dors thereupon vigorously protested that Mr. Frank should be allowed to exhibit these slips to the jury, because they had not been offered in evidence, on the grounds that they were immaterial and irrelevant, and on the second ground that he could not put them in evidence on his own statement.

Consel for the defendant insisted, however, that they should be allowed to offer these slips in evidence, as they had been testified to by Mr. Darley and others. The testimony, however, was not produced, and Judge Roan ruled that Mr. Frank might make any statement concerning the same, but that he would withhold his ruling until fur er investigation. Mr. Frank thereupon proceeded to explain to the jury.

"Gentlemen, as I was saying, these two slips that have April 26, 1913, written at the bottom are the two slips I put in the clock on the evening of Friday, April 25, to be used on the day following, which, of course, was April 26.

Darley's Duty to Employ All Help.

"I neglected to mention also, in going over my duties at the factory, that Mr. Darley was superintendent of labor and manufacture, and it fell to his duty to engage the help and distribute the help throughout the plant, and to discharge the help in case it was necessary. It was also due to him whether the wages were raised or not. In other words, he was the man that came directly in contact with the help. Moreover, he saw that the goods progressed through the plant without stopping, speedily and economically for their manufacture.

'On Friday evening I got home at about 6:30, had my supper, washed up, and with my wife played a game of auction bridge at a friend's home in the evening. My wife and I returned home and retired about 11 o'clock.

"On Saturday, April 26, I rose between 7 and 7:30 and leisurely washed and dressed and ate my

FRANK LOOKS STRAIGHT INTO EYES OF JURYMEN

During his statement, Frank looked straight into the faces of the jurymen and talked very distinctly and deliberately. His voice was not very strong and the deputies had to rap frequently to keep down the noise.

MOTORCYCLE RACER McNEIL BADLY HURT

Jock McNeil, one of the most popular and speediest of the racers at the Atlanta Motordrome, was dangerously hurt late Monday afternoon when a tire burst as his machine was making more than 80 miles an hour, hurling him through the air for a hundred feet.

McNeil was practicing for the motorcycle races and was making terrific speed when the accident occurred. Attendants at the track were horrified to see his body hurling through the air and rushed to his aid expecting to find him dead.

A Grady Hospital ambulance was summoned and responded in record time. The physicians said he had a chance for life.

Bases on balls—off Price 4; off Hardgrove 7. Sacrifice hits—Calvo. Stolen bases—Agler, Smith, Marcan. Passed balls—Mayer, Chapman. Wild pitch—Price. Umpires, Fifield and Rudderham.

PONCE DE LEON BALL PARK, Aug 18.—Gilbert Price was in great form this afternoon and as a result the Crackers copped the first game of their series with the Barons, 7 to 2.

FIRST INNING.

Marcan hoisted a high fly to Manush. Messenger ballooned to Welchonce. McBride waited for four wide ones and trotted to the initial sack. Kniseley was also awarded free transportation to Station One. Kniseley was caught off first. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Agler popped up an easy fly to Marcan. Manush slammed a one-timer to right. Marcan and Carroll disposed of Welchonce. Manush ambled to second on the out. Smith drew four wide ones. Bisland smashed a screaming single to left and Manush raced over the counting station. Holland lined to McBride. TWO HITS, ONE RUN.

SECOND INNING.

Mayer found one to his liking and pounded a single to left. Mayer was caught asleep off first, Chapman to Agler. Holland scooped up McDonald's grounder and threw him out at first. Ellam was disposed of over the strike-out route. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

Calvo filed to McBride. Chapman walked. Price filed to Kniseley. Agler singled to left. Manush popped to Ellam. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

THIRD INNING.

Carroll filed to Calvo. Hardgrove walked. Marcan walked. Messenger hit into a double play, Smith to Bisland to Agler. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Welchonce out, Marcan to Carroll. Smith singled to left. Bisland out, Ellam to Carroll. Holland filed to McBride. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

FOURTH INNING.

McBride out, Bisland to Agler. Kniseley popped to Agler. Mayer out, Bisland to Agler. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Calvo out, Marcan to Carroll. Chapman out, Ellam to Carroll. Price out, Marcan to Carroll. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

FIFTH INNING.

McDonald walked. Ellam grounded to Smith and on his error was safe. Carroll bunted to Price, who threw wild to first and all hands were safe. Hardgrove fanned. Marcan lined to Calvo. Smith made a dandy running catch of Messenger's short fly in centerfield. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Agler doubled to left. Agler pilfered third. Manush singled to right and Agler tallied. Welchonce in an attempt to sacrifice popped to McDonald and Manush was doubled off first. Smith walked and stole second. On a passed ball Smith took third. Bisland fanned. TWO HITS, ONE RUN.

SIXTH INNING.

McBride lined to Smith. Kniseley singled to left. Mayer forced Kniseley at second, Price to Smith. McDonald walked. On a wild pitch both runners advanced. Ellam grounded out to Price unassisted. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

Holland walked. Calvo sacrificed, Mayer to Carroll. Chapman lined to Marcan and Holland was doubled off second. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

SEVENTH INNING.

Carroll beat out a grounder to Price. Hardgrove forced Carroll at second, Chapman to Bisland. On a short passed ball Hardgrove went to second. Agler made a fine running catch of Marcan's foul. Messenger out, Bisland to Agler. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

Price fanned. Agler singled to left. Manush beat out a hit to Ellam. When Ellam threw wild to second to catch Agler, Joe raced to third. Welchonce laced a triple to right scoring Agler and Manush. Smith singled to center and Welchonce registered. Bisland singled to left and Smith took second. Holland filed to McBride. Calvo filed to Kinseley. FIVE HITS, THREE RUNS.

EIGHTH INNING.

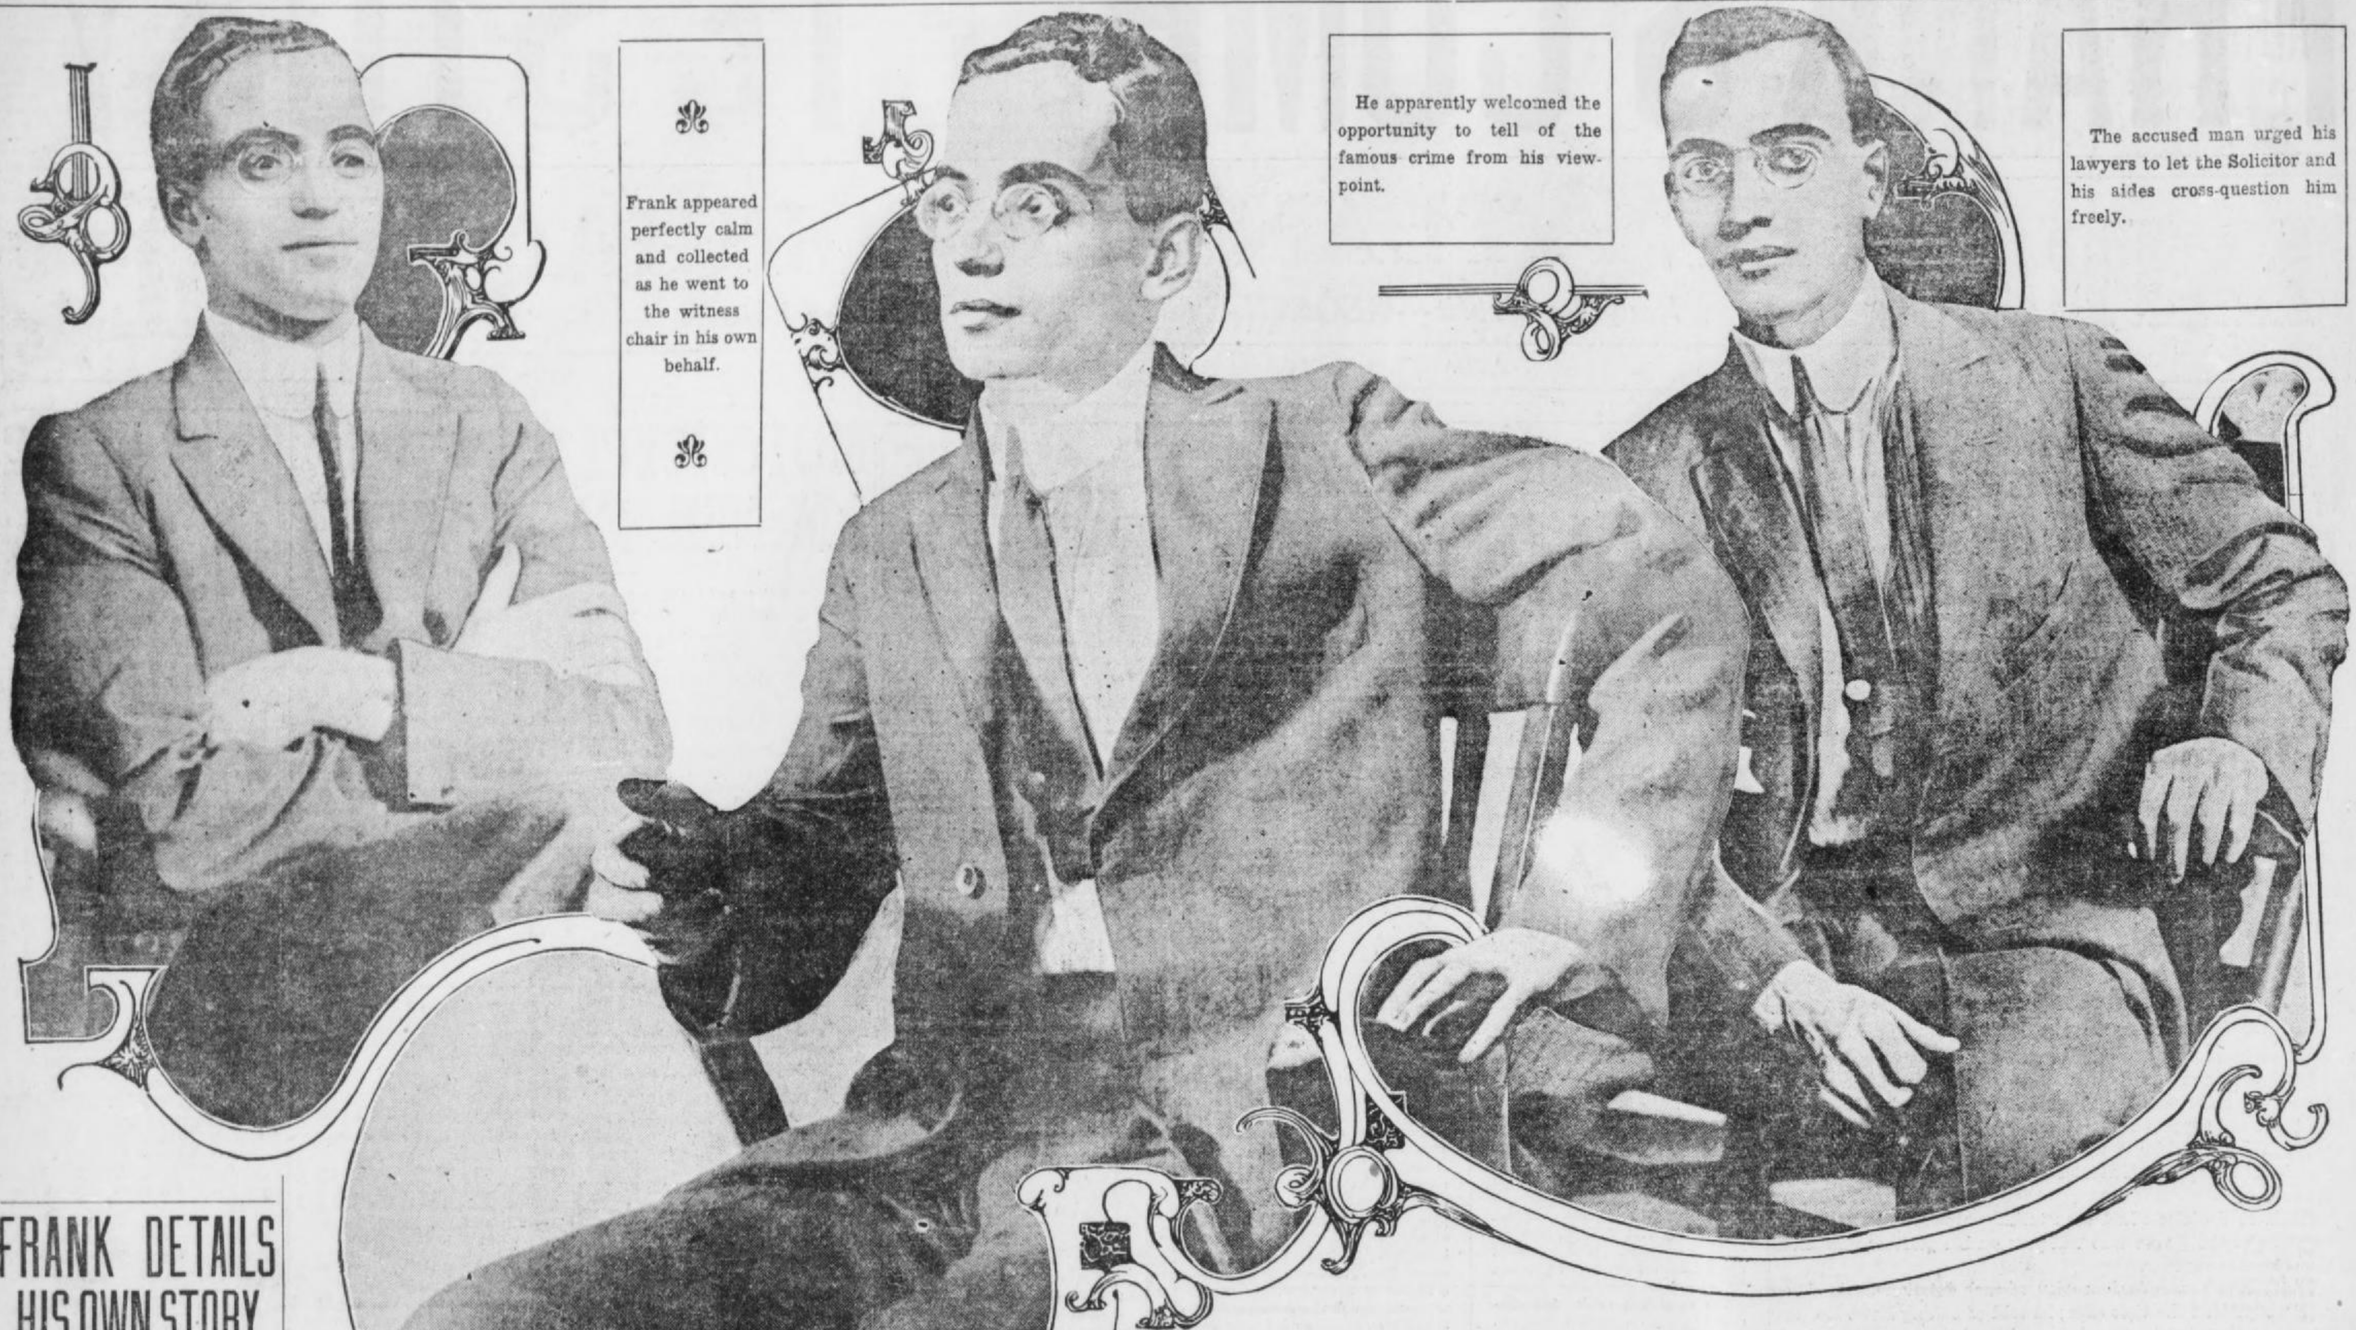

McBride fanned. Kniseley singled to left and went to second when Manush let the ball get throgh him. Mayer out, Price to Agler. McDonald fanned. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

Chapman singled over Ellam's head. Price filed to Messenger. Agler walked. Manush out, Hardgrove t Carroll. Welchonce doubled t left scoring Agler and Chapman. When McBride let the ball through him Welchonce took third. Smith penned to Ellam. TWO HITS, TWO RUNS.

NINTH INNING.

LEO M. FRANK AS HE TOLD HIS STORY ON WITNESS STAND

Frank appeared perfectly calm and collected as he went to the witness chair in his own behalf.

He apparently welcomed the opportunity to tell of the famous crime from his viewpoint.

The accused man urged his lawyers to let the Solicitor and his aides cross-question him freely.

breakfast, and caught a Washington Street or Georgia Avenue car. I don't really remember which, at the corner of Washington and Georgia avenue, and arrived at the factory, Forsyth street plant, at about 8:20.

"Upon my arrival at the factory I found Mr. Holloway, the day watchman, at his usual place, and I greeted him in my usual way, and found Alonzo Mann, the office boy, in the office.

Opened Desk and Went Went to Work.

"I took off my coat and hat and opened my desk and opened the safe, and removed the various books and files and wire trays containing the various imporant papers which were placed there the evening before and distributing them in their proper places about the office. I then went out to the shipping room and conversed a few minutes with Mr. Irby, who was at that time shipping clerk, about the work he was going to do that morning.

"According to my recollection, we did no shipping that day, owing to the fact that the freight offices were not receiving any shipments, due to the fact that it was a holiday.

"I returned to my office and looked through the papers and sorted out those which I was going to take over on my usual trip to the general manager's office that morning.

"I then turned to the invoice covering shipments which were made by the pencil factory on Thursday, April 24, and which were typewritten on Friday, April 25, by Miss Eubanks, who was the stenographer who stayed at my office. She had hurried through with the office work on the day previous, so that she could go home and spend the holiday in the country where she lived. But I didn't get to check over the invoices on the shipments on Friday, due to the fact that Mr. Schiff and myself were completely occupied the entire day. So we left the factory with the payroll. So that naturally, these invoices covering shipments which were made on April 24, ought to have been sent to the customers, and I got right to work checking them.

"Now I have these invoices here (taking up the papers and exhibiting them to the jury). These papers have not been exhibited to you before, but I will explain them. You have seen some similar to these.

"Of all the mathematical work in the office of a pencil factory, this very operation, this very piece of work that I have now before me is the most important. It is the invoices covering shipments and is sent to the customer, and it is very important that the prices are correct, that the amount of goods shipped agrees with the amount which is on the invoices, that the terms are correct, and that the price is correct. Also, in some cases, ther were freight deductions, all of which has to be very carefully checked over and looked into, because I know of nothing else that exasperates a customer more than to receive invoices which are incorrect.

"Now, with reference to the work I did on these orders—that is not such an easy job as you might be led to believe. Here are initials. They represent the salesman who took the order. Sometimes I have to go through a world of papers to find out to whom to credit these orders.

"I notice that one of the orders to R. B. Kindele calls for a specialty. That has to be carefully noted and recorded. One column represents the shipping point, another the date, etc.

"The next step is to fill in the orders on this sheet. On this sheet I must separate the orders into price groups. Evidently no work has been done on this sheet since he went away. The reason this is done —in the pencil business as in all manufacturing businesses—it is advantageous to sell as much of the high-proiced goods as possible.

"This sheet is the only means of telling how much of the various goods we are selling. It is the barometer of our business and requires most careful work.

Declares He Wrote Financial Sheet.

"After I have finished that work I have had to do this, and notwithstanding any insinuations that have been made, I wrote these requisitions."

Frank read the name on each requisition, which were the same as the names on the orders.

"Now that is all my handwriting, except what as written at a subsequent date to April 26."

"Well, moreover, this operation this morning took me longer than it usually takes the ordinary person to check invoices because usually one calls out and the other checks, but I had this work all myself that morning. As I did this work this morning I saw that Miss Eubanks had evidently sacrificed accuracy to speed, and everyone of them was wrong. I went over the invoices to make the corrections, figure them out, correct them, and make deductions, if any were to be made, and then get the total shipments, because since these shipments were made on April 24, which was Thursday and the last day of our fiscal week, and it was on this week which the financial report which I make out every Saturday afternoon, which has been my custom, so that the total shipments could be figured out, and therefore I could not let it go out at that, so I had to figure every invoice in its entirety, so I could get a figure I would be able to use.

"The first order here is to Hilton, Hart & Kern Co., Detroit, Mich. Here is the original order, which exists in our files in our office. Here is the original transaction which was made March 18, but it was not to be shipped until April 24. This is a small order, 100 gross of Number 2; and here is an order of the Packard Motor Car Company for 125 gross of No. 3, and 150 gross of No. 4. Those figures represent the grade of hardness of the lead in the pencil."

Explains How Orders are Filled.

Frank thereupon explained how such orders were usually filled, whether in part or in whole, and how the shipments were made, and continuing, said:

"In investigating shipments made by the pencil company our method is as follows: We make them in triplicate. Our first original is a white sheet that goes to the customer; the second is a pink sheet that goes over to the general manager's office and is filed serially, that is chronologically, that is, one date after the other, and from that the charges are made on the ledger, and the last sheet, the third sheet, or yellow sheet, which is here (exhibiting it) and those are placed in the files in my office, and are filed alphabetically. These yellow sheets that I have here are not the yellow sheets I had that day, because they have since been corrected, and I am just taking the corrected sheets I made the corrections and Miss Eubanks corrected them on Monday by the corrections I had on the white sheet from the corrections I made and I presume at that time made that correct."

Mr. Frank exhibited to the jury various orders similarly written, to H. W. Williams and Company, of Fort Worth, Tex.; The Fort Smith Paper Company, of Fort Smith, Ark.; S. O. Barnum & Sons, of Buffalo, N. Y.; F. L. Schmidt and Company, of Chicago, and H. S. Kress and Company, of New York.

"Now, there is an order that takes a great deal of study (referring t othe Kress order) because in common with these five and ten cent syndicates, there is a great deal of red tape. These are invoices that were typed on April 25, Friday, and were shipped on April 24. It was the date on which the shipment was made irrespective of the date there, (referring to the date on the letter) and these were typewritten. In other words, shipments took place April 24, and that date was at the top, typewritten and stamped by the office at the bottom, April 24. Among other things that the S. H. Kress Company demand on their orders, we must state whether or not it is complete, must give the case number, and must tell by which railroad the shipment goes.

Checking Made Hard By Much Red Tape.

"Here is one for F. W. Woolworth and Company, Fort Wayne, Ind., which shows 35 pounds, less 86 certs per 100 pounds credit. In other words, we had to find out what was the weight of that was on a basis of 86 cents for every 100 pounds shipped. Then here is another one of our large distributors in New York. They have a freight allowance of 86 cents a 100 pounds also, and their shipments amounted to 618 pounds on Thursday, April 24.

"I started on this work. As I said, I have gone into it in some detail, to show you the carefulness with which the work must be carried out, and I was at work on this until about 9 o'clock, as near as I remember.

"Mr. Darley and Wade Campbell, the inspector of the factory, came into the outer office and I stopped what work I was doing, which was this work, and went to the outer office and chatted with Mr. Campbell for ten or fifteen minutes, conversed with them, joked with them and while I was talking with them, I think about 9:15, or a quarter after 9, Miss Mattie Smith came in and asked me for her pay envelope, and the envelope of her sister-in-law. I went to the safe and got out the package of envelopes that Mr. Schiff had given me the evening before, and placed the two remaining envelopes in my cash bax, as I considered they might come in and I wanted to have them near at hand so that I could pay them off when they came in. I keep my cash box on the lower side of my desk. After Miss Smith had gone away with the envelopes, in a few minutes Mr. Darley came back with one of the envelopes, and pointed out an error in one of them, the one of the sister-in-law of Miss Mattie Smith, who had gotten too much money.

"When I took the amount which was too much, that amount balanced the error in the payroll that I had noticed the night before, and left about five or ten cents. Those things generally right themselves, anyhow. I continued to work on these invoices when I was interrupted by Mr. Lyon, the superintendent of Montag Brothers, and he brought me a pencil display box. He seemed to be in a hurry, and I told him if he would wait a minute I would go over with him, but he passed out of the office, and then I found a stopping place in the work I was working on, and I put on my coat and when I got to the outer office I found that Mr. Lyon had already left.

"Mr. Darley and I left about 9:35 or 9:40, and we got out of the factory and stopped at the corner of Hunter and Forsyth streets, where we each had a drink at Cruickshank's soda fountain, and I bought a package of my favorite cigarettes.

"After that conversation there I left him and went alone to Montag Brothers, where I arrived about 10 o'clock or maybe a little after. I entered Montag Brothers and spoke to Mr. Sig Montag, general manager, on business, and he brought the papers which I collect and laid them on his desk, and I then took the papers out, thrust them in the folder and took the other papers which I had in my folder, and

The eyes of Leo M. Frank's wife and his mother-in-law, Mrs. Emil Selig, were constantly upon him as he sat in the witness chair talking conversationally with the jurors. His mother seldom looked at him, maintaining her usual attitude, looking slightly downward and toward the judge's bench.

Frank had been talking only 10 minutes when he unexpectedly was interrupted by a heated argument between the opposing attorneys over Frank's explaining the time slips, including the one which the defense claims was taken from the time clock Sunday morning following the finding of Mary Phagan's body.

Frank had mentioned the time slips and was undertaking to make an explanation of the manner they are used when Attorney Rosser called for the slips for Frank to explain before the jury.

Solicitor Dorsey made an instant objection, arguing that the slips had not yet been placed in evidence. All four of the principal attorneys interested in the case were on their feet at once, two and sometimes three of them, were talking at the same time.

Papers Withheld.

Judge Roan was compelled to caution them to proceed parliamentarily. His ruling was that Frank might refer to them as much as he pleased, but that he must not go before the jury with them until they had been properly identified and offered for evidence. The same situation developed when Frank sought to explain the details of his work by means of papers and records of his office. He was allowed to sit in his chair and refer to them but not to exhibit them to the jurors.

Fearless and Direct.

Frank taked to the jurors directly and fearlessly. There was no trace of uncertainty in his voice or in his manner. He appeared exactly as though he were in an informal conference with some persons interested in the factory and was outlining his duties and leading up to some particular incident that had engaged their attention and interest.

He was entirely at ease. He assumed an easy pose in his chair, gestured frequently as he proceeded with his narrative, and occasionally changed his position. His hands most of the time were clasped in front of him, except when he illustrated a point with an unconscious gesture. He found it necessary often to adjust his glasses which seemed not to fit him perfectly.

Tells Complete Story.

He touched only briefly on his early history, telling merely of his place of birth, his career in school and college, his short business experience after his graduation and finally his coming to Atlanta in 1908 to take charge of the National Pencil Factory.

He began with Friday, August 25, the day before the crime and recounted his movements almost minute by minute. Coming to the fatal Saturday, he told of leaving his home, reaching his office, talking with his employees and taking up the work of the day.

He was given orders, records, acknowledgment of orders, record sheets, financial sheets and all the other minute details that are involved in the work of the office. Those that had been submitted in evidence he took before the jury and explained at length and in detail the amount of work required in getting these out.

His Own Best Witness.

Notebook in hand, Solicitor Dorsey took a seat almost directly in front of Frank, but this appeared to disturb the prisoner not in the least.

Through the major share of the remarkable address, with its clear-cut statements and explanations, there was little or no attempt at oratory, but the speech was unquestionably a most eloquent argument. As had been prophesied, Frank was his own best witness.

then distributed them at the proper places in the Montag plant. I don't know just which ones they were.

Conversation With Miss Hall Recalled.

"In chatting with Mr. Montag I spoke to Mr. Montag and Mr. Korse, after that I spoke to Miss Hattie Hall, the pencil company's stenographer, who stays at Montag Brothers, and asked her to come over and help me that morning, as I have already told you, that these invoices were wrong, and I wanted her to help me on that work, and could not take it up to-morrow. In fact, I told her I had enough work to keep her busy that whole afternoon if she would stay. She said she didn't want to do that; she wanted to have at least a half holiday.

"I then spoke to members of the Montag Brothers force, on business matters, and then other matters. Alsuo I then spoke to Mr. Guttenheim, who was sales manager of the Montag Brothers and of the pencil factory, and then spoke to him about several of his orders that were in the factory. There were two of his orders that he paid special stress on that were desired to be shipped right away. I said, 'I don't know how una far along in the process of manufacture the orders have proceeded, but if you can come back I can look it up and tell you when they can be shipped.' He said he could not come then, but he would come a little later. I told him I would be glad if he would come up a little later on in the afternoon; that I would be there until about 1 o'clock in the morning, and then about half past three. I then took the folder and returned.

Arrived at Factory At About 11 o'Clock.

"Upon arrival at the pencil factory I went up to the second or office floor, and then I noticed that the clock was perhaps five minutes after 11 o'clock, and I saw Mr. Holloway there, and I told him he could go as soon as he got ready. He told me he had some work to do for Harry Denham and Arthur White, who wanted to do some repairing on the top floor, and that he would do the work first.

"I then went to the office, and found Miss Hattie Hall, who had preceded me from Montag Brothers, and another young lady, who introduced herself to me as Mrs. Arthur White. Mrs. White wanted to see her husband. I went into the inner office, and took off my hat and coat and removed the papers which I had brought back from Montag Brothers and put the folder away.

Week's Sheet Left In Incomplete Form.

"It was about this time that I first heard the elevator motor start up, and the circular saw in the carpenter shop which was near to it, and I heard it sawing through some boards and thought it was evidently the work that Mr. Holloway had referred to.

"I seperated the orders from the letters which required answers, and took from them the letters that did not need immediate attention and laid them in the various places, and it was about this time I had an idea I would like to see how far along the report sheets were which I used in getting up the financial report every Saturday afternoon. To my surprise I found that the sheet contains the records of the pencils packed for the week had been entered for Thursday. The last day of the fiscal week was omitted, and Mr. Schiff, evidently in the stress of figuring out and filling the envelopes for the ayroll for Friday instead of Saturday, had evidently not had enough time. I told Alonzo Mann, the office boy, to call up Mr. Schiff and find out when he was coming down, and Alonzo said that the answer came back over the telephone that Mr. Schiff would be right down, so I didn't pay any more attention to that part of the work, because I expected Mr. Schiff to come down any minute.

Mrs. Freeman and Corinthia Hall Came In.

"It was about this time that Mrs. Emma Clark Freeman and Miss Corinthia Hall, two of the girls that worked on the fourth floor, came upstairs and asked to go upstairs and get Mrs. Freeman's coat, which permission I gave them. I told them at the same time to tell Arthur White that his wife was downstairs. A few minutes after they left my office two gentlemen came in, one of them Mr. Graham, and another gentleman, fathers of two boys who had gotten into some trouble during the noon recess and were taken down to police headquarters, and, of course, could not get their pay envelopes the night before. I gave the required envelopes to the two fathers, and chatted with them at some length in reference to the trouble that their boys had gotten into on the day previous.

"Just before they left the office Mrs. Emma Clark Freeman and Mrs. Corinthia Hall came into my office and asked my permission to use the telephone, and started using the telephone during the time these two gentlemen left my office. Previous to the time these two gentlemen came in I had called Miss Mattie Hall in and dictated what mail I had to give her, and she went out and was typewriting the mail.

Frank went back to the stand. He was handed a glass of water as he resumed his seat, but declined it.

"Miss Hall left my office" he continued, "on her way home at this time. There were then in the building Arthur White, Harry Denham and Mrs. White. It must have been from ten to fifteen minutes after that this little girl whom I afterwards found to be Mary Phagan came in. She asked asked for her pay. I got my cash box, referred to the number and gave her the envelope.

"As she went out, she stopped near my outer office door and said:

"'Has the metal come?'

Sound of Voice Made Little Impression.

"The safe door was open and I could not see her, but I answered 'No.' The last I heard was the sound of her footsteps going down the hall. But a few moments after she asked me, I had the impression of a voice saying something, but it made no impression on me.

"The little girl had hardly left the office when Lemmie Quinn came in. He said something to me about working on a holiday and went out. A few minutes before 1 o'clock, I called up my wife and told her I was coming to lunch at 1:15. I then went upstairs to where Denham and White were working and found they had a bit of the floor taken up and were sawing.

"I explained to them that I was going to lunch and would lock the door when I left. Mrs. White left at this time. Some lady said that at 12:35 o'clock she found me in front of the safe. It is barely possible that she did. I don't recall her being there. Her memory probably is fresher than mine on this point.

'When I went up stairs I asked Mr. White if his wife was going to stay there with him. She said no, that she would go. She left and then I got my hat and coat and left, locking the outer door.

"Now, gentlemen, to the best of my recollection from the time the whistle blew until I went upstairs to see Mr. White, I did not stir out of my office. I went on home.

"I called up my brother-in-law, Mr. Ursenbach, to tell him I was unable to keep the engagement to go to the ball game. The cook answered the phone.

"My wife and mother-in-law were going to the opera. My father-in-law and I ate lunch. He went into the backyard while I lit a cigarette and lay down for a moment.

"I left and while passing the home of Mrs. Wolfsheimer, saw Mrs. Michael on the porch. I went in to see her and saw Mrs. Wolfsheimer, Mr. Loeb and others.

Watched Parade When Street Cars Stopped.

"To catch the next car I ran down to Glenn street. On the car I met my wife's cousin, Mr. Loeb. The car was blocked at the corner of Washington and Hunter streets. I walked up to Whitehall street and stood there possibly for fifteen minutes watching the Memorial Day parade.

"As I walked down Whitehall street I met Miss Robecca Carson. This was probably 3:10 or 3:15 o'clock. I greeted her and walked on. I stopped at Jacobs' Pharmacy and walked on. I went from there to the factory.

"When I reached there I went upstairs and let the boys know I had returned. A minute later, I returned to my office and started to work on the financial sheet.

"In a few minutes the clock bell rang and Arthur White came into the office to borrow two dollars. It was while I was at work on the sheet at probably 4 o'clock that I went to the toilet.

"As I returned toward the office, Inoticed Newt Lee coming toward me from the head of the stairs. I told him he could go on off but to be sure and be back at 6 o'clock. I told him I was very sorry I could not let him know about the half holiday but that he was at liberty to enjoy himself as he saw fit, but that he must not fail to return at 6 o'clock.

"The first night that Newt Lee came to work at the factory, I took him over the building, and stressed the fact that he must go into the basement, especially the dust bin, every half hour.

"I told him it would be part of his duties to watch the back door. He was to make a complete tour every half hour and punch the clock.

"Now, I will return to the work of the financial sheet. This sheet contains the cost of all the pencils made that week. There are no names but this sample case will show you."

Evidence Excluded But Jury Sees It.

Frank unfolded a sample case.

Dorsey: "We object to this being used as evidence."

Judge Roan: "I sustain you."

Frank placed the sample case to one side.

"Well," he said, "you got a sufficient glance at those pencils to see there were a great many."

"In making up this sheet it was necessary to go through the list of all that were packed. Specials, of course, have to be figured separately.

"For instance, there is a special 60-60-x pencil known as 'Crackerjack.' Now I notice that the two expert accountants reported two errors. While they were unimportant, I wish to explain that those errors were not mine. They were made by Mr. Schiff. I never checked his figures. I checked over mine, but not his.

"Now the next is 'jobs.' The accountant found the only error in my financial sheet there in the item 'jobs. It was not an error, as I will show you. He did not know my method of figuring.

"Two items here are totals. The total gross amount is 791 gross, the total value amount $396.75. In figuring the average I obtained $50.01. In that average he discovered an error. It was not an error. I simply did not go as far into the decimals as he did. One-tenth of a cent was close enough for my purpose.

"Now some of the items in here are taken from the reports of the foremen of the different departments."

Frank then exhibited a report from the foreman or forewoman of each department and explained it.

"Then there is the report of Mr. Schiff, showing the gross of pencils shipped each day of that week—that week was an exceptionally heavy one.

"Now there is a little report here that constitutes one of the most difficult calculations. It is from the packing room. We have a trick of the trade to put the pencils that do not sell very fast into fancy packages to make them go.

"Now, very often these pencils are taken from the shelf, where they have laid for more than a year, and repacked in the fancy cases. I made all the calculations on this that afternoon, despite everything that has been said here to the contrary.

"Now here is a little sheet that deals with the grades of the pencils. It shows the totals for each class of pencils shipped that week. This data sheet—we have had very few clerks at the Forsyth street office capable of keeping it, because it requires rather advanced mathematics to make the totals."

"Now I will have to get all my thoughts on this sheet. I isn't a hard job but it is a very tedious one and requires much care and accuracy. Here is rubber—cheap rubber and good rubber. Now it has been intimated that some of these items—this one in particular, if I am not mistaken—that I could take two that were already figured and subtract them from the total and get the cost of the third.

"That is not so. Some of the pencils haven't any rubber in them at all. I have to go through the same tedious operation on each item. There are various sorts of packing boxes used. Then there are the skeletons in the boxes. Some pencils don't have skeletons at all.

"All these items must be gone through accurately to get correct results of this sheet. Then there is no section on this data sheet showing the cost of tips. You can5t use rubbers without tips, so, after figuring them, I just added them to the rubbers.

"Some pencils take wrappers and some don't. The very cheap pencils are tied with a cord, so we have the same tedious figuring again.

"The slat item is not worked out because I could not find the data. I just put it off until Monday.

"Here are the jobs—the payroll at Forsyth street and the payroll at Bell street.

"Now the shipments were figured for the week. I did part of that work in the morning and I explained to you about the invoices being wrong. Well, here are the items on this financial sheet. Then, as to the orders received. Entering the orders received that day involved no more work than transferring.

Has Own Method of Figuring Cost Data.

"Here they are in comparison to the amount shipped.

"One of the most intricate things in making out this financial sheet is figuring the cost data. This sheet I may say is a child of my own brain. The first one gotten out was gotten out by myself.

"This item here gives us the net value and the net amount of money the pencil factory received for its pencils. The burden that a business has to carry is its fixed charges—rent, insurance, certain salaries, etc.—the charges that are the same whether great or few pencils are made.

"The machine shop is variable. We did make many machines at first, but later the machine shop was used solely for upkeep. The slats are figured at 22 a gross. That cost was simple multiplication.

"The figuring of that price is not done in making out the financial sheet Saturday afternoon. Mr. Montag and myself figure that in advance, making allowance for profit, breakage, etc.

"I have here on the report of April 26 'Slats, not complete;' that was because Schiff had not made out the slat report, and I planned to complete it Monday morning before taking it to Montag.

"Now, beside the making this large sheet here and the financial sheet, there aer three other sheets that I made out. Now, I want to call your attention to this. I did not typewrite it. I merely filled in the blanks. I have several of them typewritten and keep them in my desk.

"In addition to that I make out two condensed financial sheets, showing the principal figures. They are sufficient for a director or stockholder to see what the factory is doing.

Mailed Statements To Stockholders.

"One of these statements I mailed to my uncle, Mr. M. Frank, who is president of the company, and the other to Oscar Papenheimer, who was a director.

"I put one in an envelope and addressed i tto Mr. Oscar Papenheimer; the other I sent to my uncle along with a price list, and I wrote him this letter.

"This price list is too long for an ordinary envelope, hence the large envelope.

"After finishing the financial sheet, I folded the large sheet and addressed it to Mr. Selig Montag. I then took up the checking up of the cash and balancing of the cash book. I did that work as near as I remember, between 5:30 and 5 minutes to 6 o'clock. It did not take me an hour and a half. I did it in about 25 minutes. There was $30.54. There couldn't have been any more. It was mostly in small change. There was one loan to Mr. White, making the total amount of cash $28.50.

"Beginning that week, we had $39.25 as a balance. We drew two checks of $15 each—I mean by that that we went to Mr. Montag's office and had him draw the checks. The total amount of money we had to account for was 69.25. What it was spent for, of course, is shown on the debit side."

Frank explained each of those items, including drayage, parcel post, etc.

"I found at the end a shortage of $4.34 coming about in payrolls within the last three months."

Drinks Water After Talking Two Hours.

At this point Frank paused to take a drink of water having been talking for 2 hours and 30 minutes.

"I finished this work I have just outlined," he continued, "at 5 minutes to 6 o'clock. I took those slips—I won't show them to you—stamped April 28. They were put into the clock because no one was coming into the office until Monday.

"Newt Lee's punches on Monday night would appear on the strip placed on the clock Monday night. Just before I left I put a new tape in the clock and made Newt Lee punch it. Then he went on down stairs to wait and let me out.

"As I started out of the factory, I saw Newt Lee talking to a man named Gantt, who had been released about two weeks before. I gave them permission to go into the factory and get Gant's shoes which he said were left there and I told Newt Lee to go with him.

"I reached home at about 6:25 o'clock and at 6:30, thinking Newt Lee would be near the clock, I called him over the phone to see if everything was all right. I could not get him. I called again at 7 o'clock and again at 7:30. At that time I got him and he told me everything was all right.

"That night my parents-in-law had company at the home. Those present were Mr .and Mrs. Marcus, Mrs. Goldstein, Mrs. M. Marx, Mrs. A. B. Marx, Mr. Ike Strauss—who came in at about 10 o'clock. I read a magazine until about 10:30 and then retired."

Told Officer He Did Not Know Girl.

At this juncture the jury retired for five minutes.

Frank conferred with his attorneys while the jury was out. Upon its return he resumed:

"I believe I have taken in every move Saturday night. I retired Saturday night. Sunday morning about 7 o'clock I was awakened by the telephone ringing and a man's voice which I afterwards found out to be Detective Starnes, said: 'I want you to come down to the factory.' 'What is the trouble?' I asked. 'Has there been a fire?' 'No,' he said. 'A tragedy has occurred.' I said, 'All right,' and he said he would send an auto.

"They came before I finished dressing. At this point I differ with the detectives, Black and Starnes, about where the conversation took place. They say it was after we were in the machine. I say it was before we left the house, before my wife. At any rate, here is what was said: "They asked me if I knew Mary Phagan. I answered that I did not. They asked me if I did not pay off a little girl with long hair down her back the afternoon before. I said I did. They said they wanted me to go to the undertaking establishment to see if I could identify the boyd. They made the trip to the undertaking establishment very quickly. I went in and stood in the doorway. The attendant removed the sheet from the little girl's face and turned the head toward me. His finger was right by the cut on the head. I noticed her nostrils were filled with dirt and cinders and there were several discolorations. I noticed a piece of cord around her neck, the kind we used in the pencil factory. I said it looked like a little girl that came to the factory the day before. They had already told me it was Mary Phagan. We went to the factory and by examining the payroll I found that Mary Phagan had drawn her pay the day before and that the amount was $1.20.

"As we went into the factory I noticed Mr. Darley going in. We went to the office and I found Newt Lee in the custody of the officers. They told me they wanted to go down into the basement. I got the elevator key, but when I tried to start the elevator machinery I found I could not and I told Mr. Darley to see if he could start it.

Admits Nervousness And Defends Himself.

"He started the car, and when we got further down I found that one of the chains had slipped. They showed me where the body was found, where the shoe was found and pointed out every thing that was at that time known. After looking about the basement we got some nails and a hammer, and Mr. Darley nailed up the back door. Back upstairs Mr. Darley, Chief Lanford and myself went on a tour of inspection of the three upper floors. We went through the metal room, the same metal room that has figured so prominently in this trial, and neither Mr. Darley nor myself noticed anything particular on that floor. Nor did Sergeant Lanford, chief of the Atlanta detective force.

"We went to the time clock. I took out the sli- and a casual note of this ship would indicate nothing was on it. There was something on it. It had been partially rubbed out. It could not be rubbed out altorether without rubbing out the printed lines. I did write with a pencil across the face of it, '8:26 a. m.' We noticed a slip but overlooked any skips. I folded the time slip as it is now and handed it to Chief Lanford. Now, gentlemen, I have heard a great deal during this trial about nervousness.

"I was nervous. I was completely unstrung. Imagine yourself called from sound slumber in the early hours of the morning, whisked through the chill morning air without breakfast, to go into that undertaking establishment and ave the light suddenly flashed on a scene like that. To see that little girl on the dawn of womanhood so cruelly murdered—it was a scene that would have melted stone. Is it any wonder I was nervous?"

Notes Found by Dead Girl's Body Described.

'I got in an automobile and sat on Mr. Darley's knee. I was trembling, perhaps. Later Sunday morning, I went to the home of Mr. Sig Montag and told him what had occurred. I got home about 11 o'clock. My wife and I went over to my sister-in-law's, Mrs. Ursenbach's, and with a number of friends we discussed the tragedy.

"We went back home to dinner and mentioned there the terrible crime. After dinner I read a short time and about 10 minutes to 3o'clock caught a car downtown.

"The conversation on the car was about the little girl that had been found dead in the factory.

At 3:10 o'clock I went back to the undertaking establishment and found Joe Stelka there.

"On Monday I went to the police station with Darley and he said he would like to talk to Newt Lee alone. We were shown the two notes found by the side of the slain girl."

Frank then described the notes.

"Now, on one of the notes there was an erasure, but the tracing was still discernable. It was January 11, 1912. The order number was very indistinct, but it was evidently an old serial number.

"Returning to my home at 4:15 I met Mr. Haas and he asked me about the murder. Seveay people on the street also asked me.

"I remained at home until 5 o'clock, then I went to Mr. Montag's home and made a report of the tragedy to him. From there I went to the home of Mr. Marcus where I had reecived a telephone message from my wife, and I went by there to get her.

"At supper that night the conversation was again about the murder. After supper I read the paper. I called up Mr. Marcus and asked him if he would come down. He said he could not.

"Mr. and Mrs. Selig had a party that night. About 10 o'clock, my wife and I went up to bed. Next morning before I had finished dressing, the door bell rang. It was Detectives Black and Hazelett. They said they wanted me to go to the police station with them.

Kept in Ignorance of Charge Against Hmi.

"I went and on the way I asked them what was the trouble. They said Chief Lanford would tell me.

"I arrived at the police station and sat in an outer office for probably an hour without seeing Chief Lanford. Near 9 o'clock, Mr. Sel Montag and Mr. Herbert Haas came down. Near 10 o'clock I saw Mr. Rosser. He came in and said, "Hello boys, what's the trouble.'

"Mr. Haas took him off to one side. Chief Lanford came out and said to me: 'Come in here.'

"I went into his office. He handed me the time slips and if I am not mistaken this same time slip had the figures still unerased: '8:26 a. m.'

"I took the slip and examined it closely, discovering the slips. There seemed to be some altercation about Mr. Rosser getting into the room with me. I heard him say: 'I am going into that room. That man is my client.' Chief Beavers asked me if I would give him a statement.

"I heard Mr. Rosser say: "Why, it's preposterous. The man who did that would have signs on his

THAW'S ESCAPE FROM MATTEAWAN ASYLUM COMPLETE

Legal Experts Declare He Can Not Be Brought Back From Another State

HARRY THAW NOT CAUGHT; SENDS MOTHER NOTE

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Aug. 18.—A warrant charging Harry K. Thaw with conspiracy in connection with his escape from Matteawan was issued this afternoon to District Attorney Conger, of Dutchess County, who will attempt to use it as the basis of an indictment. If Thaw is captured in another State, said the District Attorney, an effort will be made to extradite him on the conspiracy charge. It was said that another warrant charging bribery would be demanded.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Harry K. Thaw, who escaped Sunday from the Matteawan Asylum for the criminal insane, to-day wrote to his mother, Mrs. William Copley Thaw, at the Hotel Gotham, in this city, saying he was well and that he would meet her at Elmhurst, the Thaw summer home at Cresson, Pa.

Mrs. Thaw said she would leave at 9:25 to-morrow morning for Elmhurst. Thaw's note was in an envelope apparently addressed by one of the men who had aided him to escape. It had been mailed from Station O in this city at midnight Sunday.

Over the top Thaw had written: "Night letter. Fifty words. Twenty-five cents." He had evidently intended to send it by telegraph. The note was addressed to Mrs. William Thaw, Hotel Gotham, New York City, and read as follows:

All well; will take a rest before going to Elmhurst, as I might be asked for interviews and do not wish to refuse, yet do not care to make any statement. Hope H. and G. arrived safe and that you will go home together. Have sent short note to New York Evening Journal. H. T. K.

Thaw, together with a man believed to be Dr. W. B. Holden, of No. 220 West Ninety-eighth street, spent the night at the Lennox Hotel in Lennox, Mass., according to Richard A. Stanley, proprietor of a hotel there. About 8 o'clock a dust covered Palmer-Singer touring car containing two men drove up to the Lennox Hotel, which is a favorite stopping place for tourists in that section of New England. One man registered as W. B. Holden, of New York and the other as P. H. Sims.

They spent the night there, leaving about 6:30 o'clock this morning in the direction of Pittsfield. Their car had the appearance of hard usage and both men were stained and travel weary. Sims avoided other guests and refused to enter the dining room.

This morning when newspapers bearing the picture of Thaw were received at the hotel, Stanley at once identified "Sims" as Thaw. Over the long distance telephone it was said by the clerk of the hotel both men left without eating any breakfast, Sims driving the car.

At Dr. Holden's office it was said that he is out of town making an automobile tour. He was last heard from near Saratoga, it was said, when his automobile had broken down.

Dr. Holden's asisstant denied that the doctor knew Harry Thaw.

The news from Lennox effectually stopped a search of the seas by wireless, as it was evident that the clews to the effect that Thaw sailed from South Norwalk, Conn., in a yacht with a yellow funnel were false.

He had also been reported from Danbury, Conn., and Newport, R. I. but the authorities threw aside all clews and theories save the Lennox trail.

The District Attorneys have begun plans for the detention of Thaw if he is found in another State. An effort will be made to hold Thaw on the charge that he bribed officials at Matteawan.

Evelyn Nesbit Fears Thaw.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, estranged wife of the fugitive, has hired private detectives to guard her.

"Harry Thaw is just as likely to appear at the corner of Broadway and Forty-second street and demand admittance to the theater where I am playing as he is to go anywhere else," said Mrs. Thaw. "He is dangerous and desperate and I fear him. So do his relatives fear him. When I woke up this morning the first thing I did was to thank God that I had been spared my life the night Harry was free. Harry can not be quieted over 24 hours. If he is on a yacht I will feel safer, but he has all the cunning of a maniac and it would be just like him to throw off his pursuers by pretending to sail for some foreign country. Thaw's escape proves that if one has money he can do anything."

Charging conspiracy in helping Thaw to escape, warrants were issued at Poughkeepsie to-day by Justice Morschauser for Richard Butler, Thomas Flood, Eugene Duffy, Michael O'Keefe and Roger Thompson.

On complaint of District Attorney Conger, Asylum Guard Howard H. Barnum, who saw Thaw escape, was held on charges of bribery and neglect as a public officer. It was Barnum who was at the asylum gates as Thaw fled.

Thaw's Escape Dramatic.

Thaws escape by plot after five years of futile fighting in the New York courts combine all the romantic and sensational elements of fiction. From the moment that he dashed through the gates, eluding Keeper H. H. Barnum, while milk was being delivered at the institution, Thaw disappeared as completely as though the earth had swallowed him up.

District Attorney Whitman says Thaw can not be extradited if located.

"There is no indictment pending against Thaw in New York and he can not be brought back because he was legally adjudged insane after being acquitted of murder," said Mr. Whitman.

A rigid investigation is going on at the Matteawan Institution following ugly hints that Thaw had collusion inside the institition to aid his escape. Barnum was grilled so unmercifully that he nearly broke down. Time after time he declared that he used every means in his power to keep the prisoners safely. It was said that application would be made both to Governor Sulzer and Lieutenant Governor Glynn at Albany for a State investigation.

The only satisfactory method of finding Thaw, according to the police, is to fix the identity of the men who were waiting for him outside the institution with two automobiles. Something is known of these men. Ten days ago two men, calling themselves Richard J. Butler and Michael O'Keefe, appeared at the Holland Hotel in Beacon, or Fishkill Landing as it was formerly known. They spent money freely and devoted considerable time to scouting about the country.

In answer to queries they said they were preparing to locate for the summer and wanted to find a quiet, restful spot. Friday evening they returned in an eighty-horsepower automobile. The size and strength of the car also caused much curiosity. They had with them men who registered as Roger Thompson and Eugene Duffy. A little later the party was joined by a fifth man, who registered as Thomas Flood. It was he who took the launch to Beacon. Flood was afterward identified as the reckless driver of the touring car who took Thaw across the Connecticutt State line at 70 miles an hour. He was the most reckless of the party.

Saturday morning the men left the Holland early and were not seen about the hotel again. From the talk of the men an impression arose that they were professional gun-fighters recruited from gangs in this city and were paid liberally to risk getting Thaw to safety. One of them, after drinking considerably in the barroom at the Holland Hotel, said: "It was his business to help good fellows."

Reward of $500 Offered.

Following the escape, Superintendent Raymond F. C. Kieb, of Matteawan Asylum, offered a reward of $500 for Thaw's arrest as a "dangerous fugivtive."

Dr. Kieb's belief is that Thaw made his way around Long Island and is now bound for Europe. Dr. Kieb feels that his personal reputation and integrity as a public official are at stake, and has personally hired a private detective agency to trail Thaw.

So closely has Roger O'Mara, the Pittsburg private detective, been connected with Thaw since the shooting of White that some persons jumped to th conclusion that O'Mara was concrnd in some way with Thaw's escape. This was heightened by the fact that one of the men at the Holland Hotel slightly resembled him. Another posed as "Roger" Thompson. A Pittsburg telegram states, however, that O'Mara was in Pittsburg yesterday.

Mrs. Mary Thaw, mother of Harry K. Thaw, who has spent nearly a milli nodollars in trying to restore his liberty, was surprised to learn of her son's escape. She said she had come here in response to a requst from Harry that she pay him a visit.

The New York police department is keenly interested in the search for Thaw and have sento ut a general alarm with a description of the fugitive. The detective bureau will flood the country with circulars bearing Thaw's picture.

Escape Made Without Hitch.

The escape of Thaw was planned with the utmost precision and went through without a hitch. Thaw arose at his usual hour Sunday. After he had taken his breakfast he went into the storeroom, where he has been employed to do odd jobs. After spending a few minutes there, he went into the exercising yard. He wore a straw hat, which was usual for him, and he was otherwise attired for the outside. Keeper Barnum was in the yard at the time.

In a listless voice Thaw bid the keeper good-morning and remarked about the heat.

Then he took several turns up and down the inclosure and leaned against the gate. For many months Thaw had assumed the same attitude at the same spot and Barnum paid no particular attention to him. At 7:45 the milkman who supplied the institution with milk drove up and rang the gong. Barnum looked through the peephole, saw who it was and opened the gate. No sooner had the milkman entered than Thaw galvanized into activity. With the spring of a panther he was through the gate.

Just a short time before a roadster apparently had broken down outside the asylum's gate. The driver got down beneath the machine and was tinkering with it when the milk wagon drove up.

As soon as the institution's gate opened the repairs apparently were made, for the driver climbed into the machine and was just about to start when Thaw bounded through the gate.

Wild Race for Liberty.

The fugitive leaped into the machine, instantly the power was turned on and the machine sprang forward, about a mile farther on the roadster overtook the 80-horsepower touring car which had been seen at the hotel and Thaw was transferred.

Then began one of the wildest and most spectacular automobile rides in history. At Stormville, ten miles east of Matteawan, persons declared that five men surrounded Thaw in the touring car and that each clasped a revolver in his hand, evidently prepared to shoot down anyone who interfered with the car's progress. Pedestrians and carriage drivers east of Stormville said the touring car was going nearly 80 miles an hour. Many persons were nearly run down and killed.

Patrick Buckley, who was in charge of the storeroom yesterday at Matteawan, said that Thaw gave no indication of excitement.

"He came into the storeroom about 9 o'clock," said Buckley. "He said good morning, Mr. Buckley." I replied, 'Good morning, Mr. Thaw; how do you feel this morning?' He walked among the tables for a few minutes. His manner was just the same as it had always been. He was perfectly calm."

In fact, but two employees of the institution did see Thaw gain his liberty. They were Keeper Barnum and Mrs. James Maher, a laundress who was in a high tower overlooking the exercise grounds and the roadway.

According to Mrs. Maher's story, two automobiles, one a touring car, and another a roadster, passed the hospital shortly after 7 o'clock. The roadster stopped in front of the gate while the big six-cylinder car sped on to the foot of Lowery's Hill, almost a mile beyond the hospital.

There it stopped and the doors on both sides were opened for quick action. Mrs. Maher kept her eyes on the machine outside the gates. Although the driver got out and began to tinker with the mechanism, the motor kept humming and there were many loud explosions from the exhaust.

William Hickey's milk cart rumbled up to the gate while the roadster's motor was humming and thumping. Mrs. Maher said that as Thaw dashed through the gate he waved his arms and cried, "Go, go! For God's sake, go!"

Keeper Barnum was stunned for a moment by the quickness of the escape. Then he notified Superintendent Keb, who called up the Sheriff and notified police headquarters in this city.

Thaw got fully ten minutes start on his pursuers, being headed straight for Connecticut.

HARRY THAW AND HIS NOTED WIFE

Harry Thaw Joins John A. Chaloner's 'Who's Looney' Club

Harry Kendall Thaw now is eligible for membership in the "Who's Looney Now?" Club of which John Armstrong Chaloner is charter and only member up to date.

The cases of Thaw and Chaloner are remarkable in their similarity. Each of them is officially insane in New York. Neither of them are insane, officially, anywhere else.

Chaloner escaped from Bloomingdale Asylum, where he had been imprisoned by relatives, in a gasoline launch.

Thaw escaped from Matteawan Asylum, where he had been imprisoned by the State, in an automobile and yacht.

Both men are of immensely women who had attained promiwealthy families. Both married nence before their marriage. Amelie Rives, Chaloner's wife, was noted as a novelist. Evelyn Nesbit, Thaw's wife, had achieved fame as a stage beauty and artist's model.

BIG SENDOFF IS GIVEN PATHFINDERS AS THEY START ON WAY TO PACIFIC

Cheered by hundreds of lusty-voiced good roads rooters and with the martial strains of the Fifth Regiment band and the hearty good wishes and godspeeds of scores of Atlanta's most prominent citizens and officials ringing in his ears, E. L. Ferguson, official "pathfinder" for the all-Southern open-the-year-round transcontinental highway, Monday morning glided up Alabama street to Peachtree for the start of the long auto-hike to San Francisco.

Mr. Ferguson's "official" family consisted of Mrs. Ferguson, two little Fergusons and Hugh Grant, representing The Sunday American, inaugurator of the monster campaign, who will accompany the party as far as Birmingham.

There seldom has been a warmer "sendoff" than that prepared for "Pathfinder" Ferguson and party on Monday morning. All were in readiness—those entered in the last week, including the Mayor, the chief of police and the fire chief—and scores of other prominent citizens and autoists besides.

Makeup of the Parade.

First came the Fifth Regiment band, followed by the trans-continental car occupied by Mr. Ferguson and party and in the order named, Mayor Woodward, in his private car; Chief Beavers, Fire Chief Cummings and other city officials, in addition to scores of cars piloted by the drivers who compete from time to time at the 'Drome. A number of motorcyclists were also in the line of march.

Stretched out on long, snaky Peachtree, after the departure from The Georgian-American office on East Alabama street, the parade assumed an imposing appearance, much to the delight and admiration of enthusiastic citizens.

The crowd caught the "drift" of the affair. This was no mere parade. Here was a man, without a peer in the art of "trail blazing," starting out for far-away San Francisco, from Atlanta—obviously a monster project in which Atlantans should take particular pride and one filled with all sorts of possibilities, not only for the Gate City of the South, but the entire Southland, including the great Southwest, and the Pacific Coast country.

Big Papers Behind Project.

With these things in mind they gave this man Ferguson a send-off which will be heralded all the way to 'Frisco, through the medium of a score of leading Southern newspapers, including The Georgian and American, The Birmingham News, The Montgomery Advertiser, The New Orleans Item, The Dallas Times-Herald and The Houston Daily Post.

Mr. Ferguson left Atlanta with virtually every detail of the first lap to Birmingham complete. Traveling almost due west from Atlanta, the party will reach the Georgia-Alabama line at Tallapoosa late Monday afternoon. Here the party will spend the night, resuming the journey early Tuesday morning in company with President John Craft, of the Alabama Good Roads Association, and State Highway Commissioner Keller, who will make the entire trip through Alabama.

Arriving at Anniston early Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Ferguson and party will be received officially by the Mayor, the president of the Chamber of Commerce and other prominent citizens and officials. The Alabama city, it is understood, has planned a big reception for the tourists following a lively campaign conducted recently in the interest of good roads between Anniston and Birmingham.

Birmingham Plans Greeting.

In line with tentative plans, as a result of a choice of two routes between Anniston and Birmingham, Mr. Ferguson probably will decide to spend Tuesday night in Anniston, leaving there Wednesday morning. Pell City and Riverside will be reached in the order named; Wednesday night will be passed en route, and Birmingham, the end of the first lap of the long journey, will be reached shortly before noon Thursday.

If reports are accurate, the Magic City good roads boosters will give the transcontinental tourists a reception and send-off never before equaled in the Alabama metropolis. Prominent officials of the Alabama Good Roads Association, city and county officials, representatives of The Birmingham News and others, headed by Nappi's Band, will meet the party several miles outside of the city and escort it downtown, where a monster demonstration has been planned.

From Birmingham the tourists will go direct to Montgomery, where Governor O'Neal, a good roads enthusiast, will receive them officially.

The remainder of the route will include Mobile, New Orleans, Dallas, Houston, El Paso, Phoenix, San Diego, Los Angeles and San Francisco. Mr. Ferguson expects to make San Francisco by October 1, perhaps sooner, after which he will return to Atlanta to begin a second trip to check up the results obtained on the first.

Apprehension as to possible blowouts, with resulting delays along the long route, were allayed Monday morning through the generosity of J. H. Kelly, of the Republic Rubber Company, who has offered to furnish Mr. Ferguson any number of Staggard-Tread tires throughout the entire trip.

Pathfinders Get Big Welcome at Austell.

AUSTELL, Aug. 18.—Pathfinder E. L. Ferguson and party arrived in Austell at 12:30 o'clock Monday afternoon on the first stage of The Hearst Sunday American transcontinental tour, and found a royal welcome awaiting them by Austell and Douglasville citizens. A few miles out from Austell they were met by a Douglasville delegation, who escorted them into Austell and on to Douglasville. The party was scheduled to reach Douglasville at 1:30 o'clock, where a reception and a dinner awaited them.

The trip from Atlanta to Austell was made in good shape. Four miles out from Atlanta a halt was made and the group of Atlanta escorts enjoyed a watermelon cutting. Talks were made by Mayor Woodward and Chief of Police Beavers, and everyone wished the pathfinding party good luck.

From Atlanta to the Chattahoochee River the tourists passed over a magnificent road, while the dirt road from the river to Austell was in fairly good shape. Reports here are that a good road will be found all the way to Tallapoosa, where the stop for the night will be made.

The Douglasville delegation was led by Mayor L. C. Upshaw, President J. T. Dake, of the Douglasville Commercial Club; R. E. Edwards, banker; J. F. Long, superintendent of the Douglasville Cotton Mill; J. M. Banks, merchant, and J. T. Lee and A. L. Gresham, County Commissioners.

Sunday American Lauded for Project

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 18.—To the Editor Hearst's Sunday American:

Hearty congratulations to you for enterprise and constructive effort shown by your interest in Southern transcontinental highway project and good roads movement. Glad to be associated with you in this work.

We believe this aids the development of automobile industry, increases communication between the rural districts and cities and insures consequent increases in realty values and prosperity in general.

ACCUSED DID NOT PEER INTO GIRLS' DRESSING ROOM, WORKER SAYS

body." I jumped up and, opening my clothes, let the detectives see for themselves.

"I then gave them a statement, willingly and freely and without any reluctance. Then one of them said something about examining my linen at my home. I knew that none of it had gone to the laundry at that time and invited the detectives to make a search, which they did. Mr. Herbert Schiff went with them. They were very well satisfied with the search, or rather, they found nothing.

Employed Pinkertons To Aid the Police.

"That afternoon I telephoned Mr. Schiff to get Mr. Montag's permission to employ the Pinkertons to aid the police. I told him I would be down about 3 o'clock.

"I went around to Mr. Wolfsheimers, got into his automobile and went down town. I saw Mr. Schiff, Mr. Darley and a number of others, including Mr. Quinn.

"Mr. Quinn said he wanted to take me back to the metal room where it was claimed blood spots had been discovered and where the hair on the lathe was discovered by Mr. Barrett.

"I examined them closely, particularly the spots. I did not examine them standing up. I got down on my knees and examined them with a strong electric flashlight and I arrived at certain conclusions.

"That floor is grease, soap and dirt covered to a thickness varying from a quarter to half an inch.

"To return to that spot. I don't claim it was not blood. The space where these spots were adjoins the ladies' dressing room. There have been accidents which may not have been brought out in this trial. We do not report every time one of the employees cuts his finger.

"There are all sorts of paints around the factory. I have seen girls drop bottles in the hall, not exactly at that point, but near there. But the point about those spots is that when I examined them there was over them an accumulation of dirt not of days or weeks, but of at least three months.

Phoned to Prevent Alarm of Family.

"The white stuff was not fresh. It was dry. And another thing: if that compound had been put on the blood fresh, it would have been pink and not the white that it was.

'Now, when the Atlanta papers containing the statement that I was detained were published, I telegraphed Mr. A. R. Montag to communicate with my uncle that I was no longer; that I had been released. I did this because I knew they would be alarmed if they saw the sensational stories in the papers.

"Harry Scott of the Pinkertons came in and spoke to me in the presence of Mr. Darley. He said he had not read the newspapers. I told him all that had been published and in addition the statement that Mrs. White had seen a negro about 1 o'clock on the first floor.

"After I had told him all I knew, I took him over the factory. On the second floor, I noticed him put several articles in his pocket. One Inoticed was a piece of cord such as I learned had been found around Mary Phagan's neck. I asked him as to the rates of the Pinkertons. He told me and I informed Mr. Montag, who approved them.

"Mr. Scott said that at it was the usual custom of the Pinkertons, he would work hand in hand with the police. I went home and found my family there and sat up until about 10 o'clock, when I went to bed.

Gave Officers All Information Wanted.

"Tuesday a. m. I arose between 7 and 7:30 and caught the 8:10 car. I remember I got to the factory at 8:30. I went right into my routine work and at 9:30 o'clock went on my regular trip to Montag's. I then went back to the factory and to work again.

"After a while Detectives Black and Scott came and told me they wanted me to go to the station house. I went and I have been incarcerated since then.

"I went down in an automobile. They took me to Chief Lanford's office. I answered all the questions they asked. In a few minutes Detectives Scott and Black came in with a bundle.

"They me showed me a piece of material and asked me if I had a shirt like that. I told them I never had. They showed it to Newt Lee and they said he admitted having a shirt like that but declared he had never worn it.

"They then unfolded a bloody shirt.

"About 10 o'clock Mr. Rosser came down and said Chief Beavers thought it best for me to remain at the station, and they thought I might employ a supernumerary to avoid being locked up. I assented, because, of course, I could not do anything else.

"They wanted a sample of my handwriting. I told them I was willing. They dictated it word for word, spelling the unusual words. Detectives Starnes took me down to the desk sergeant and searched me.

"I was locked up in a cell while my father-in-law was providing a supernumerary.

"The detectives came to me and said: 'Mr. Frank, we would like to talk to you a little bit.' We went into a little room and they stressed the possibility of a couple being let in the pencil factory at night. Then they said: 'You talk to Lee. You are his boss. He will talk to you.'

"The detectives told me to go after him strong and tell him we would both go to hell. Detective Black said that.

"I went in and talked to Lee. I tried to get him to talk. I said: 'Newt, you had better tell everything you know or ou will get us both into trouble.' He stuck to his statement that he had told the whole truth.

"Then the detectives came in and I was initiated to the Atlanta police department third degree for the first time. Detective Black went after that poor negro. He called him every vile name he could think of. He fairly streamed with profanity.

"I want to touch upon a few accusations that have been leveled against me, besides this crime. The first is that I would not talk to the detectives. Let us look into that and see if there is any truth in that. I went there Sunday, Monday and Tuesday and discussed the matter freely and openly. I gave them a written statement. I talked to them at midnight. I talked to Newt Lee at their instance. What did they do? They grilled him. They twisted my words. They put words into his mouth he never heard. After that I said I washed my hands of them. They came to me again—Scott and Black. Black said: 'We are suspicious of that man Darley. Now, open up and tell us all you know about him.'

Could Not Trust Even His Own Detectives.

"I said: 'He is the soul of honor.'

"'Come on, Scott; nothing doing,' said Black.

"Then I knew I couldn't trust even our own Pinkerton detectives. After that I treated them with silence. That is why I would not see Conley surrounded by a bevy of city detectives. They would distort; they would falsify. That is the reason I kept my silence.

"Now this second charge that I knew Conley could write. The same day that Conley was arrested I was taken to the Tower. There was nothing in the papers that said he could not write. The first thing I knew about it Harry Gottheimer came to see me on May 12 and told me the Pinkertons had turned suspicion toward Conley, but that he stood them down he could not write.

"I told him that I had received too many notes from Conley not to know that he could write. I told Harry that if they would look into the drawer of the safe in my office they would find a card with a jeweler's name on it, and that if they would go to him he could probably show a contract that Conley had signed.

"Gentlemen, the first man that pointed out the way to prove Conley could write is sitting before you now.

"That other insinuation that is so dastardly that it is beyond the comprehension of a human being—that my wife didn't come to see me—she was down stairs at the police station. Rabbi Marx was with me. I advised with him whether I should let her come up or not. We had to restrain her.

Brands Conley Tale As a Tissue of Lies.

"I know nothing of the murder of Mary Phagan. I never saw Jim Conley on that day.

"This man Dalton I never saw before this trial. He was never around the factory with Daisy Hopkins that I know of.

"Irene Jackson is mistaken. I have no recollection of ever looking in on the girls in the ladies dressing room when the girls were undressed.

'That room on the fourth floor has no bath. It is simply a place in which young ladies can change their outer clothing. I might have have looked in tosee that they were not loafing. I heard complaints about them flirting and I wanted to stop it.

"The statement of Jim Conley is a tissue of lies. He never saw me with any women.

"Conley's statement about seeing me in improper positions with women is so vile that I have no words fit to denounce it.

"My father is notable to work. I have no relative of any means except my uncle in Atlanta.

"There is no fund raised to pay these attorneys. The fees are paid, but they were paid by sacrificing a portion of my family's small estate.

"Gentlemen, some newspaper men have called me the silent man in the Tower. I was silent, but it was advisedly. The time to talk is now. The place is here, and I have told you the whole truth."

Frank bowed slightly to the twelve men to whom he had addressed this remarkable statement and then stepped down from the stand. Court adjourned until 9 o'clock Tuesday morning.

Hapeville Episode Hinted by State.

That Frank rode on a street car to Hapeville with a girl the Saturday previous to the murder of Mary Phagan and repeatedly sought to persuade her to leave the car with him was the sensational testimony Solicitor Dorsey endeavored to get from Mrs. J. G. Wardlow Monday.

Anticipating the nature of the questions the Solicitor was about to ask Mrs. Rae Frank, mother of the defendant, stopped her ears with her fingers and then rushed from the room. Attorneys for Frank at first objected to the questions and the jury was excused. It was at this moment that Mrs. Frank made her dramatic exit. She was evidently fearful of repeating her outburst of a few days ago.

Mrs. Wardlaw denied that she ever knew of such a circumstance. She denied as well that she had been told of it by Harmes Stanton or H. G. Baker, street car men.

Another sensation was created when the defense called to the stand Miss Emmeline Mayfield, the young woman whom the State maintains was in the dressing room when Frank looked in at one time. Miss Mayfield denied this was true.

Paving the way for the eagerly awaited statement of Frank, the lawyers for the defendant devoted Monday morning to the gathering up of the story ends of their case, most of the time being occupied with the testimony of character witnesses.

More than a score of women and girls employed in the National Pencil Company were called to tell what they knew of Frank's character and what they had observed of his conduct about the factory. All asserted that they never had known personally of any misconduct on the part of the superintendent and never had heard of any.

Explains Looking Into Dressing Room.

Mrs. Mattie Thompson proved one of the most important of the character witnesses. After testifying to Frank's good character, Mrs. Thompson declared that the girls on the fourth floor were in the habit at one time of flirting from the windows of the dressing room. She said that the practice became a matter of comment among the elder women on the fourth floor and that she finally took it upon herself to report it. Whereupon orders were issued against it.

The testimony of Mrs. Thompson was produced to provide a basis for the contention of the defense that Frank had opened the dressing room door on several occasions solely for the purpose of determining if his orders were being carried out.

Miss M. E. Fleming, a stenographer, said that she worked in Frank's office from April to December, 1912, and that she never had observed any misconduct on the superintendent's part nor had seen women visiting his office.

Godfrey Winecoff, superintendent of the lead plant of the National Pencil Company, testified that it was his custom to visit the pencil factory office every other Saturday afternoon about 3 o'clock. He said he always found Frank or Schiff, Frank's assistant—frequently both—working in the office. He asserted he never saw any women there.

A large crowd was attracted to the courtroom by the probability that the prisoner would tell his story Monday, and the keenest expectancy prevailed. It was problematical whether there would be any cross-examination. Ordinarily, of course, the accused in a murder case merely makes his statement and the jury can believe it or discard it entirely as it chooses. It is said, however, that Frank has earnestly urged his lawyers to allow the Solicitor to cross-examine him.

When court reopened Monday Solicitor Dorsey took up the cross-examination of Harlee Branch, a reporter for The Atlanta Journal.

Took Conley 15 Minutes To Tell Crime Details.

Branch was asked:

"Can you give any estimate of the time taken in conversation in Conley's re-enactment of the crime?" He replied that it took about fifteen minutes.

Q. You never said it was about half the total time, did you?—A. I don't recall.

Attorney Arnold took the witness.

Q. You said it took about fifteen minutes to cover the time lost in conversation?—A. Yes.

Q. He began at 12:18 and you left at 1:08? That would be about 50 minutes that you were there?—A. Yes.

Q. How long was he writing the notes?—A. Two minutes at the most. He did not write fast or slow?

Q. How long did he stay in the wardrobe?—A. About one minute.

Q. Did you see Conley in the newspapermen's room here in this courthouse reading a newspaper since this trial began?—A. I saw him looking at one as though he was reading it.

Mr. Branch was excused and Lou Castro, former ball player and at present fight promoter, was called as a witness by the defense to testify to time it took to walk certain distances.

Q. Did you walk from Marietta and Forsyth streets to the second floor of the pencil factory?—A. Yes.

Q. How long did it take you?—A. Four and one-half minutes.

Q. Did you walk from the National Pencil Company to the corner of Whitehall and Alabama streets?—A. I did.

Q. How long did it take you?—A. Three minutes and twenty seconds.

Q. Did you walk from Bread and Hunter streets to the Pencil Factory?

Employees of Factory Character Witnesses.

Miss M. E. Fleming was the next witness called. She is one of Frank's former stenographers. She testified on direct examination that Frank's character was good. Dorsey cross-questioned her.

Q. Were you ever there on Saturday?—A. Yes.

Q. How long did it take you?—A. One and one-half minutes.

The witness was excused.

day afternoon?—A. No, I was off then.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Frank work on the financial sheet Saturday mornings?—A. Yes, I saw him work on it a little.

Miss Fleming was excused and Godfrey Winecoff, superintendent of the lead plant of the pencil factory, took the stand.

Q. Did you visit the National Pencil factory on Saturdays between July 1, 1912 and May 1, 1913?—A. Yes.

Q. What time?—A. Three to 5 o'clock.

Q. How often?—A. Almost every Saturday.

Q. Did you ever see women there in Frank's office?—A. No.

Q. Who was there?—A. Frank, Holloway, Schiff and the office boy.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Are you sure Holloway was there at 3 o'clock?—A. Yes.

The witness was excused, and Mrs. Mattie Thompson, an employee of the factory working on the fourth floor took the stand and testified as to Frank's good character. Arnold questioned her.

Q. Do you know anything about that dressing room on the fourth floor and the conduct of the girls there?—A. I made a complaint about the girls flirting out of the window.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Who has talked to you in the last few days about what you were to swear on the stand here?—A. Mr. Haas talked to me.

Registered Complaint About Girls Flirting.

Q. What did you tell him?—A. About some of those flippy girls flirting out of the window. I have talked it over with Mrs. Carson and we decided to complain to Mr. Darley.

Q. Who was flirting?—A. I don't know. It was only talked about the floor.

Q. Who was talking about it?—A. Several of the girls were talking about it.

The witness was excused and Miss Annie Howard who has worked at the factory for fourteen months; Miss Lillie May Goodman, an employee on the second floor for over a year; Miss Cora Cowan, an employee for four years, and Miss B. D. Smith, an employee of four years' standing, testified to Frank's good character. Miss Jimmie Mayfield, another employee of the factory, said she was not familiar enough with Frank's character to testify.

Miss Irene Carson, a factory employee, testified to Frank's good character. She declared that she was with her sister Rebecca and saw Frank on Whitehall street Saturday, April 26. She was not cross-examined.

Miss Lizzie Word, an employee of the pencil factory; Miss Ida Holmes, who has worked at the factory more than four years; Miss Willie Hatchett, Miss Mary Hatchett, Mrs. O. Johns, an employee at the factory for four and one-half years, and Miss Georgia Denham, formerly an employee for two years, all testified as to Frank's good character.

Girl Employees Give Frank a Good Name.

Miss Bessie White also testified in behalf of Frank's character. Mrs. Lizzie Florence declared she only knew Frank by sight and was not acquainted with his character. Mrs. Zilley Spivey, an employee of the pencil factory for more than four years, said Frank's character was good as far as she knew. Mrs. Minnie Smith and Miss Grace Atherton testified to Frank's good character. Both are employees of the pencil factory.

Miss Ethel Barber, a young girl, said she had worked at the pencil factory for several years and she did not know Frank's character.

Miss Velvey Holland, a pencil factory employee, said she knew nothing of Frank's character.

Miss Marjorie McCord, another employee, said Frank's character was good. Dorsey cross-examined her.

Q. What do you understand by his general character?—A. He was always a perfect gentleman.

Q. Are you talking about what you heard or what you know?—I am talking about what I know.

The witnesse was excused and R. P. Butler, shipping clerk at the factory, was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Are the doors leading into the metal room of glass or wood?—A. They are wooden with glass 15 by 18 inches in them.

Q. Can a man of ordinary heighth see through the glass?—A. Yes.

Q. Is Mr. Frank's character good or bad?—A. Good.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. How wide are these doors?—A. Six feet.

Q. Did you measure them?—A. I did.

Q. They are down a long narrow passage way with boxes on both sides, are they not?—A. The passageway is 10 feet wide except at one point.

Q. Right at the door it is very dark, isn't it?—A. Not so very dark.

Q. Do those doors usually stay open or closed?—A. Open.

Q. If any one was to sit to the right or left of those doors he could not be seen, could he?—A. A person would have to be at least one foot to either one side or the other.

The witness was excused and Rabbi David Marx was recalled to the stand to explain the functions of the B'nai B'rith. After conferring with the attorneys for the State, Mr. Arnold said he knew the evidence was irrelevant and he would send the jury out if the State desired.

The State objected.

Hooper: "To relieve Mr. Arnold's mind, I will state that it is already definite that it is a charity organization."

Judge Roan ruled that the details of the organization were inadmissible. Attorney Rosser, with the consent of Solicitor Dorsey, then dictated to the stenographer without the jury hearing what he wanted to prove by Dr. Marx. Dr. Marx was then excused.

Mrs. S. A. Wilson testified that Frank's character was good. On cross-examination she stated that she had never heard anything against him.

Miss Lena McMurtrey, a girl in short dresses, said she had only worked at the factory for a short time and did not know Frank's character.

Mrs. Mary Bolton said she worked at the factory for six months about four years ago and that she had found Frank to be a perfect gentleman. She returned to work at the factory June 1.

Attorney Arnold remarked that he did not think the witness entirely qualified. Mrs. J. Johnson testified to Frank's good character. Charles Lee, a young man employed in the factory, said Frank's character was good. Lee said he had heard nothing against him.

Dorsey cross-examined him.

Q. You said the other day you gave a written statement about Duffy getting hurt?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you seen that statement to refresh your memory?—A. Yes.

Q. You signed it?—A. I never said I signed it.

Q. Did you give a written statement and never signed it?—A. It was written on a typewriter.

Q. What did you tell them that they put in that statement?—A. I told them how he got cut on the right forefinger.

Q. Was there anything in the statement about him getting cut while putting on a brass roll?—A. No, because I put that on myself.

Mrs. J. G. Wardlaw, formerly Miss Lula McDonald, an employee in the pencil factroy for four years, testified to Frank's good character.

Dorsey—I want to ask this lady some questions which counsel for the defense have already indicated they object to.

The jury was sent from the courtroom. Mrs. Rae Frank, mother of the defendant, held her hands over her ears to keep from hearing. After the jury went out she also retired. Mrs. Leo Frank retained her seat by her husband.

Never Heard of Frank On Car With Girl.

Q. You say you have never heard anything bad about Mr. Frank?—A. No.

Q. You're sure you never talked to H. Stanton and H. M. Baker, in charge of a car, that Frank had a little girl with him and tried to get her to get on the car with him, and that he had his arm around her?—A. No.

Judge Roan ruled the questions were admissible, and when the jury returned Solicitor Dorsey repeated the questions and received the same reply. The witness was excused.

Frank Siganke, an employee of the pencil company; N. V. Darley, assistant superintendent, and E. F. Holloway, the day watchman, testified to Frank's good character.

Miss Emmeline Mayfield, one of the girls who was said to have been in the dressing room at the time Frank looked in, was called to the stand. Arnold questioned her.

Q. Were you ever in the dressing room when Mr. Frank came in and looked at you?—A. No.

Q. Were you ever in there undressed when he came in?—A. No.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Do you know Miss Mamie Kitchens?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know Miss Irene Jackson?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall Frank coming into the dressing room one day when either one of these young ladies were in there with you?—A. No.

The witness was excused, and the defense then introduced documentary evidence, including the financial sheet and the model of the pencil-factory. Attorney Arnold stated to a Georgian reporter that as soon as this was introduced Frank would go upon the stand.

The following documentary evidence was offered: All of the financial sheets of the National Pencil Company from June 1, 1912, to April 24, 1913; the letter from Leo Frank, dated April 26, 1913, to his uncle, M. Frank, in New York; the data from which the financial sheet of April 26 was made; twelve requisitions identified by Herbert Schiff as being made out in the handwriting of Leo Frank; ten orders dated April 26; ten carbon copies identified by Miss Hattie Hall as having been taken down and written by her Saturday morning, April 26; eleven orders recorded on the house order book April 26; page 195 of the cash book of the National Pencil Company, covering entries from April 21 to April 26, 1913; four affidavits of Jim Conley; specimens of cabbage presented by Dr. Hancock; records of various convictions of C. B. Dalton. (The indictment pending against him was ruled out on the protest of Solicitor Dorsey.) Part of the testimony of Newt Lee before the Coroner when he explained the meeting between Gantt and Frank on the afternoon of the murder.

Cool Days Promised As Breezes Return

The breezes, which had been on a strike for the past few days, were back at work Monday, keeping Atlanta's business section cool. The thermometer registered 70 degrees at dawn, after a night cool enough to make a blanket appreciated.

Although September is usually one of the hottest months in Atlanta, Forecaster VonHerrmann says it will be an unusually cool month this year. Fair weather Monday night and Tuesday is predicted by the local bureau.

Savannah Expects Big Seaboard Offices

SAVANNAH, Aug. 18.—In connection with the removal of the division headquarters of the Seaboard Air Line Railroad from Savannah to Americus, effective Saturday, there is a report that the Seaboard system contemplates the removal of its general headquarters from Portsmouth, Va., to Savannah.

The rumor has it that the Seaboard contemplates the erection of an eight-story building in Savannah upon the property recently acquired by that road, in which its general headquarters will be installed.

Bryan's Peace Dove War Eagle in Action

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—Bryan's dove of peace is a war eagle—at least the treaty seal of the State Department so represents it.

The seal's design is an ancient coin representing a war eagle preparing to attack its prey and a figure of the war god, Zeus. The martial emblems are placed on all treaties signed by the Secretary.

LOCAL DRUGGIST MAKES STATEMENT

Says Dodson's Liver Tone Is the Best Remedy for Constipation and Shirking Liver He Has Ever Sold.

Every person who has tried Dodson's Liver Tone and knows how surely and gently it starts the liver to working and relieves billiousness will bear out the druggist's statement about Dodson's Liver Tone.

"It is a purely vegetable liquid, that entirely takes the place of calomel, harmless and pleasant to the taste, that has proven itself the most satisfactory remedy for a slow-working liver that most of our customers have ever tried. A large bottle sells for 50 cents and we do not hesitate to give the money back to any person who tries a bottle on the strength of this statement, and is not satisfied with the result."

In these days of doubtful medicines and dangerous drugs, a statement like the above is a pleasant assurance that Dodson's Liver Tone is a reliable remedy for both children and grown-ups. In buying a bottle for immediate or future use it is well to make sure you are getting the genuine Dodson's Liver Tone and not some spurious imitation that has copied our claims but do not stand back of their guarantee. You may be certain of getting the genuine if you go to any druggist for it.

Brass and Iron Beds At "Blue Tag" Prices

The "Blue Tag" Furniture Sale is a big, broad-gauged affair, bringing savings on all the furniture (except contract price furniture) in this big five-floor furniture store.

To-day's news is of brass and iron beds. The list below serves only as a guide to what you may expect—it is by no means complete. Not one of these beds is a specially bought sale bed, but rather of that dependable soundness and worth that characterize all Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose merchandise at regular prices and "blue-tagged" regardless.

It is worthy of note that the lacquering on even the most inexpensive brass bed that we carry is the best.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

YOU MUST DECIDE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am in love with a young man who lives in the same neighborhood and is of a very high standard. He has told me he loves me and would like me to become his wife, but as he is a Hebrew and I am a Christian would like your advice, for I can not live without him. G. M. S.

This is a matter too serious for a third party to determine. Marriages of this nature are sometimes happy, but the risk is great. When it means an estrangement from one's family and friends, I would throw my influence against it.

BE PERSISTENT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 19 and deeply in love with a young lady one year my senior. One day I proposed to her and she said her parents would not permit the marriage because of the difference in nationality.

Please let me know what to do, for I love her. HEARTBROKEN.

You are too young to marry even though you had their consent, so do not feel discouraged. Go on loving her; attend to your business duties faithfully; develop yourself mentally, and don't despair or worry. Make yourself such a desirable suitor that objections will vanish.

DON'T MAKE THE EFFORT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a girl of 18 and in love with a man one year my senior. We have never kept company. He tells everyone he loves me, but while he is in my presence I fail to see it. How may I find out if he is true to me? I. H.

The man who tells "everyone" he loves a girl, and gives her no evidence, doesn't love her very much.

Unless you have made mutual vows of love, he can not be untrue to you. A man must make vows before he can break them. Do not fret yourself about him. Time for that when you are engaged.

YOU ARE A LITTLE EXACTING.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18, and for the past four months have been keeping steady company with a young man of 20. When I first became acquainted with this young man he was making a nice salary, but I told him that if he wanted to go with me he must change his profession, which he did, therefore starting at the bottom of the ladder again. It is also understood that he will not care to be married before three years, to which my parents and myself agree, provided we become engaged in about a month from now, which he absolutely refuses to do, claiming that he does not want to become engaged before next year. My parents have therefore forbidden my going with him under any other conditions.

Now, do you think that if he really loves me, as he claims he does, he would allow a matter of a few months to break our keeping company? The only reason he gives for not wanting to be engaged is that he is making a small salary, but if I and my folks are satisfied, I don't see why he should object.

IN DOUBT.

He gave up his profession for you, starting at the bottom of the ladder again. I think he has conceded his share, and, under the circumstances, you should not nag him into an engagement until he is ready. Love is worth too much to risk it by the exacting attitude which I am afraid you are taking.

Two Birds—One Stone.

Norah had arrived from Erin's Isle a week before, and was with difficulty being "broken in" to the routine of an English household. Cleanliness was not a very strong point with her, and her cooking, apart from "spuds," was hardly all that could be desired.

"If you are not quite sure on any point, come and ask me at once," said her mistress.

Dinner was just about to be served when there was a clatter along the hall, and the breathless Norah poked her head around the dining room door.

"Please, ma'am," she asked, "an' how will I be knowin' when the puddin' is done enough?"

"Stick a knife into it," said her mistress, with a resigned air. "If the knife comes out clean, the pudding is ready to serve."

"Yes, ma'am," said Norah; "and I'll be after that orathur that's boilin' over."

"And, oh, Norah"—the mistress had an after-thought—"if the knife does not come out clean, you might stick all the rest of the knives into the pudding."

In a Nutshell

By MINNA IRVING.

We heard with equanimity
That coal was soaring high,
We bore it when the price of meat
Went kiting to the sky;
When eggs and butter followed suit
We stood it like a sport,
But, lo, the worst has come at last—
The peanut crop is short.

Oh, what is summer time without
The tuber of delight?
We ought to bust the peanut trust,
We ought to make a fight;
We ought to put our woe in print,
We ought to go to court,
We ought to take the warpath when
The peanut crop is short.

The Mistakes of Jennie .:. By HAL COFFMAN

Being a Series of Chapters in the Life of a Southern Girl in the Big City

"No, no, my boy; I could not be so selfish."

CHAPTER XXV.

AFTER the row Jennie had with the installment man, she still owed $28 for her clothes. The man had come for his weekly payment on the clothes, which Tom had to pay to keep the man from literally tearing them off Jennie's back, for Jennie didn't have the money to pay him, and if Tom hadn't been there at the time Jennie would probably have had to do like other girls have done in such an emergency—gone out and GOT the money, never mind HOW.

When Jennie told Tom she still owed $28 for her clothes—that she foolishly bought and did not need—Tom left Jennie in the front room, saying he wanted to go in and talk to her mother a while.

Jennie's mother was lying in bed, and, sick as she was, managed a cheery smile at seeing Tom and told him she always regarded him as her boy, and that she had always hoped that some day he would marry Jennie. Tom did not tell Jennie's mother how much Jennie still owed on her clothes, for he knew that she had trouble enough without worrying any more. Instead, he told her that he had a little money saved up—for the time that Jennie would consent to marry him—and that he wanted her to take it and to go down to the beach somewhere, take a good rest, get well again and take Jennie with her.

At this the good woman cried and said over and over, as she patted Tom's hand:

"No, no, my boy. I could not be so selfish as to take your money that was meant for yours and Jennie's happiness."

A VERY NEAR THING .:. A Complete Short Story

VANSITTART was going to smash. At least, it looked ominously like it. Nobody said it openly. Nominally, nobody was supposed to even suspect that it was likely. But men whispered it to one another in the city; and when men whisper about a thing it is oftener far more serious than if they talked about it in their loudest voices.

"There's about one chance in a million for me!" he told himself. "If the Oriental Bank floats, I'm safe; if it closes down, I'm finished. And it will close down unless a miracle happens, and—Lily will know that the gods have given her her revenge!"

Vansittart's world would have been astonished, perhaps cynically amused, had it seen him now. After locking the door of his room from the inside, to render intrusion impossible, he opened a secret drawer in his desk by touching a spring, and took from it a bundle of letters and a photograph.

The letters were love letters, and the photograph that of a girl.

A fair-haired girl, with a pretty face, without Vansittart's pitiless power, but brave and patient, with love and faith in her eyes. And the letters had been written by a girl to the man to whom she had given her heart, whose wife she expected to be.

"By jove!" muttered Vansittart, as he put the letters down, "she's had to wait for her revenge, but it looks as if Fate is going to give it to her at last."

It had been an ordinary, commonplace story of a man's selfishness and falsity and a girl's outraged trust and love. Vansittart had been engaged to Lily Gordon, a girl clerk in the city, before he had begun to rise, and had left her without a word to fight life's battle for herself as soon as he began to grow rich.

Too Late.

"I was a cur, a mean cur!" he muttered. "But it's too late to think of it now. If I go down she'll know. Will she be glad, I wonder?"

He tried to laugh, but there was a harsh discordance in the sound. Replacing the latters and the photograph in the desk, he went out.

He felt he could not sit there waiting for ruin to come.

There was a man in the city, another speculator, named James Harper, whom Athol Vansittart had helped many times, by whose side he had stood in more than one threatening crisis. Harper had not the power to save him in his turn, but Vansittart felt that he must talk to someone if something in his brain were not to snap.

So he went to him now.

Harper was a keen-featured man, with a trick of half curving his lips in what promised to be a smile and never became one. He was alone in his office when Vansittart entered and grasped his hand cordially.

"You've come to talk over things, old chap?" he said. "I'm glad of it. I'd like to cheer you up. But wait a minute."

He closed the inner door.

"Anything wrong?"

"Oh, no; only a new girl I've got to help with my letters, and I don't want her to hear too much of our talk. Business is one thing, but a confidential chat between friends is another. I hope it's not so bad with you as some fools are making out?"

"I'm afraid some fools are rather wise," returned Vansittart, grimly. "It is no use blinking things. I'm done for if the Oriental closes down."

Harper's tone was sympathetic, but he was pretending to pick up something he had dropped on the floor and his eyes were very eager.

"Look here, Harper," Vansittard said with an effort; "I've come to you because I believe you're the only true friend I've got. As I said, I shall pull through if the bank stands firm. But I don't think it can. It's in a bad way itself, and if it can't raise a big loan practically at once it will close its doors. And if it does that I can't face the music."

"Surely, it's not so bad as that?"

Very Desperate.

"I tell you it is!" Vansittard answered, fiercely. "I shall owe more than I can pay. I shall be disgraced as well as ruined. But I'm not going to stop to face it. Harper, if—if anything happens to me, do your best to prevent too much mud being thrown on my name. It's all you can do."

There was a threat of self-destruction in his tense expression, if not on his lips. Harper knew it, but he did not endeavor to stop him or to argue with him. He only gripped his hand once more, with a few conventional words of sympathy.

And when Vansittart had gone Harper laughed.

Laughed, and then sat considering and frowning, until he suddenly struck his hand on his desk with a low, triumphant exclamation, as though he had hit on a way of accomplishing something that had seemed impossible before.

He left his office hastily, and when he had gone the inner door opened and there came out a girl, with love and terror on her colorless face.

It was late before Vansittart went home. He had gone back to his office and waited for news, but none had come. He left the place at last with a morbid conviction strong on him that he would never return to it. He hailed a hansom, but the man had to ask him twice before he was told where to drive him.

It seemed to Vansittart a matter of indifference where he went. It was not that he had abandoned all hope. He clung to the gambler's belief that there is always a last chance. But he was too restless and excited to fix his mind on anything except the news he was waiting for.

Ah, what was that?

The Crash.

The street was quiet, all but deserted. There was a gas lamp opposite Vansittart's door, and the illumination was gleaming on a pink something. It was the placard of an evening newspaper which a hawker was offering for sale.

He hastened toward it. In bold, merciless letters, the words stared at him:

"FAILURE OF THE ORIENTAL BANK."

He bought a paper, oblivious that he gave a sovereign for it. In the space reserved for late news were two smudged lines, stating that the Oriental Bank had closed its doors that evening and posted a notice outside that they would not reopen on the morrow.

So it was all over. It was useless to hope against hope any longer. His career was finished. He was a ruined man, with disgrace awaiting him if he lived.

He let himself into his house with a latch key, and went straight to the library, where he had been in the habit of working. At first he switched the electric light on full, but at once lowered it to a tiny shimmer. No need of much light for what he was going to do!

A revolver was ready to hand when he opened a drawer. There was nothing else for him to do.

* * * * * * * *

"No, no! Listen to me, Athol. I've come to tell you—I've come to tell you it's a lie."

Lily was beside him, struggling with him to get the revolver away. He stared at her stupidly.

"A lie?"

"The placard. The bank was not stopped. Mr. Harper had the false placard and the two lines of false news put in one copy of the paper. I have proof of it; I have found the man who printed it!"

The Plot.

He was hard to convince. But she told him how she had been in the inner office while he was talking to Harper, and how, after he was gone, Harper's manner had been so suspicious that she had followed him to see what he meant to do. He had gone to a printer. It was not for a long time after he had left the shop, however, that she half forced and half frightened the printer to confess that Harper had paid him handsomely to turn out the sham placard and insert the two lines in the paper. He had said it was for a joke, but the girl had not believed it. She had guessed that he intended to use the placard and doctored newspaper to drive Vansittart to desperation by leading him to believe that all was lost.

"So I came here to tell you," she said. "I saw you come in, but you did not see me. So I had to knock, and when the servant opened the door I ran past her. I had seen the light flash from the window into the street, and that helped me to find my way to you. The placard is a lie!"

Vansittart looked at her; there was

.:. One Woman's Story .:.

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XXII.

SO agitated had Mrs. Danforth been at the news of Mary's break with Gordon Craig that she lay down on the couch in the tiny parlor until the dishes were washed and put away. This task the daughter performed quickly and noiselessly. She was thankful that her mother had asked no more questions just then, for she felt that she had not the courage to reply to them. Her work done, she glanced nervously at the clock. It was now a quarter past eight. Bert Fletcher would be here soon. She must prepare her mother for the call. She went into the parlor and, drawing a chair close to the couch, took the pale and worn woman's hand in hers.

She Started Nervously.

"Mother, dear," she said, "I think you ought to go to bed now, for you do not feel well enough to see company."

Mrs. Danforth started nervously. "Company!" she exclaimed. "Why, what company could you be expecting?"

Mary smiled bitterly at the suggestion implied by the question.

"That's true, mother," she said, a hard ring in her voice. "I am not troubled with friends or guests, am I? But this evening will be an exception, for I am expecting a caller—Mr. Fletcher."

Her mother sat up and eyed her keenly. "Mr. Fletcher?" she asked. "Is he the man who was so nice to you one evening last winter?" There was eagerness in the tone, and as she noted this the girl appreciated that her loving, gentle mother was actually anxious to have her marry if it would mean freedom from care for herself and the girl.

"Mary, why don't you answer me?" demanded Mrs. Danforth.

Mary started guiltily. "I beg your pardon, mother," she said. "Did you ask me a question? I must have been absorbed in my own thoughts. What did you ask, dear?"

"Only if this Mr. Fletcher is the man who brought you home one night in a cab when it was stormy?"

"Yes," assented Mary, "that is the man."

"Well, I remember that you once said he was very kind," remarked her mother, watching the girl's face.

"Yes," said Mary, "he is kind—even if he is not a cultured gentleman and does murder the king's English. But, after all, truth and fidelity are more than education and manners. I have had enough of men of culture and of nothing else." She tried to change her sharp speech into a laugh that her mother might not suspect how sore her heart was.

Mary Remembered.

The widow replied with one of her sighs, but this time the sound was indicative of hope and satisfaction.

"He evidently knows that you are a lady, and he treats you as if you were. So he must be something of a gentleman himself. I am ready to like him if he is good to you. Oh, my child," lifting one of her daughter's hands to her pale lips and holding it there, "nobody, not even you, knows what I have gone through in seeing you overworked and in trying to save and manage here at home. There have been times when but for you I would have prayed to die."

Mary remembered how, less than two hours ago, she had said to herself: "If it were not for mother I would want to die." But she smiled reassurance into her mother's face.

"Since we need each other, mother," she said, jestingly, "let us both determine to live for each other. And there's a better time coming for us both."

The mother looked at her anxiously. "You mean that, Mary? You are not keeping the truth from me or trying to pacify me by seeming hopeful when you are not, are you, dear?"

"No, mother," replied the girl. "I am speaking the truth when I say that I believe there is a better time coming for you."

She did not add "and for me." Perhaps she did not think of it.

"I do not like to seem inquisitive," Mrs. Danforth went on, "but I am wondering how long ago you broke your engagement to Gordon—Mr. Craig, I mean."

The girl hesitated a moment before replying, and she avoided her mother's gaze.

"Not so long ago," she said indifferently. "You know I always think that when people find they are not suited to each other it is best for them to agree to disagree with as little fuss and talk as possible."

There was so much finality in her manner that the elderly woman ventured to say no more about the Texan. Yet she was not satisfied, and soon asked timidly:

"This—this Mr. Fletcher—do you like him very much, Mary, my dear?"

"I have told you, mother," said the girl, "that he is a kind man, and has been good to me—so why should I not like him?"

Her mother began another question, but a ring at the bell checked it.

"Good Night, Dear."

"Good night, dear," she said, rising hastily and hurrying into her own room.

When the door had closed behind her mother, Mary stood, her hands over her eyes. Perhaps she was praying, perhaps trying to collect her thoughts. But as the bell sounded forth a second summons she went slowly into the kitchen and pressed the button releasing the catch of the lower front door. For another minute she stood poised as if now, at this last moment before her guest's arrival, she would escape him, would avoid receiving him. Then, recovering her self-control and courage, she passed out into the narrow hall, opened her front door and stood waiting for the man whose footsteps she heard on the stairs ascending toward her.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THE most restful way for spending one's vacation is to watch one's neighbors. If they are idle, it makes the one on a vacation just indignant enough to make his blood circulate, and if they are working, the sight of their labors makes his own idleness soothing in contrast.

The man who lived next door interested himself with the Lysander John Appleton family, who were occupying their summer home. He watched them the day they moved in: Two women of regal bearing, a boy with a forehead like a Mansard roof, and a meek-looking man who might be a servant, the Appleton family being an ideal American family.

It was the women who interested the idle man the most. They were of such queenly bearing and had such perfect figures he longed for the fingers and skill of a Rodin. "I never," he murmured, "saw more perfectly-formed women."

They entered the house, closed the door, and for a half hour there was no outward evidence of occupancy, and then the man on the side porch saw a woman emerge from the back door the sight of whom made him throw back his head and laugh.

She had a figure like that of a featherbed, and if she had ever had a waist line it had long ago moved up and become lost in the foothills of her mountainous bosom. She shook and quivered as she walked like a bowl of calves'-foot jelly, and while he gazed at her in bewilderment the door opened again and there emerged a younger woman so thin that she looked the same coming as going.

For a week he saw two women with perfect figures enter and emerge at the front door, and a feather bed and a bean pole from which garments drooped like a flag at half mast emerge and enter at the back door. Then one evening when he saw Lysander John sitting alone on the porch in front he walked across the lawn and asked for an explanation.

"They are the same women," said Lysander John sadly. "If you are interested, I will show you the means of the transformation."

He led the way upstairs to a dressing room where two long, vise-like garments hung over the back of a chair.

"The modern magician's wand," he said, pointing to two corsets."

The Ten Commandments of the Summer Wife

By DOROTHY DIX.

He is as a phonograph.

ARISE, sister, gird up thy straight front, put glad raiment upon thyself and take thy vacation; yea, take it though thou hast to fight for it with tooth and nail, for she that hath wrestled with the robber that lieth in wait in the butcher shop and the despoiler who abideth in the grocery store, and who hath provided the wherewithal her family is fed three times a day for three hundred and sixty-five days, needeth to slip the yoke for a space while the galled place healeth.

2. When thou takest thy vacation, go it alone. Be not as those foolish wives who say, "I have never been parted from my husband, and lo, where he goeth there will I go also," for belike thou hast gotten on thy husband's nerves and he would fain have a rest from thee.

3. Reflect that nine months of the year can a man rejoice and be exceeding glad to be married. Ten months can he steel his heart with fortitude to endure it, but on the twelfth month he noticeth that his wife's nose is crooked, and he knoweth her cooking. Therefore get thee hence on the twelfth month, and when thou shalt return to him he will make a feast at thy coming.

They shall mock thee.

4. Stay not too long, though, on thy vacation, for it is not good that a husband should be left alone to his own devices until he can find the secret spot wherein the clean shirt hideth itself and the fresh collars are secreted. Verily it was written in the Book of the Prophets that a little absence maketh the heart grow fonder, but too much absence inclineth it to another skirt.

5. When thou rockest in the chair that swayeth back and forth on the Summer hotel gallery, boast not thyself of thine automobile, and thy butler, and thy social prestige, and the diamonds thou hast left behind thee in thy husband's safe; for the women thou braggest to art the Daughters of Missouri, that even require to be shown, and they shall mock thee behind thy back as a liar.

Go it alone.

6. Tell not the secret of thy life. Reveal not the weaknesses of thy husband, and pull not forth from thy closet the skeleton where it is hidden because thou happenest to stroll in the twilight with a sympathetic sister, for lo she shall tell the tale to another, and she shall repeat it to still another, and scandal shall be heaped upon thy name.

7. When thou playest bridge, get thee a strangle hold upon thy purse, for peradventure the society dames with whom thou sportest shall shear thee even as a lamb is sheared on Wall Street, and thou shalt have to write home for more money.

8. Take not the lone Summer man away from the maidens when he fleest to thee as to a temple of refuge, because thou already hast a husband and cannot expect him to marry thee. Flirt not with such an one, but stand thou to one side and give the virgins their chance, for lo, in these days a husband is scarce and hard to come at.

9. Listen not to the man who wanders on the beach with thee in the moonlight and who sayeth, "Would God I had met thee in time," for behold he is but as a phonograph with one record, and hath already said the same thing to 981,735 other women. Also he draweth but twenty-five bones per in a department store, whilst thy husband hath skill with the shekels, so that thou adornest thyself in purple and fine linen and split skirts therewithal.

10. Forget not that gossip stalketh through the halls of a Summer hotel, seeking whom it may destroy; therefore bear thyself as though thou posest in a moving picture film and converse as though thou consortest with a dictagraph. So shalt thou meet thy husband with a glad smile when he cometh down on the Saturday afternoon train, and thy heart shall not quake with fear when thou thinkest of what one of the old cats who knit pink sweaters in the hotel lobby may reveal unto him.

Selah.

'Tain't No Use.

The tramp approached the proud citizen and asked for alms.

"'Go to the ant, thou sluggard.'"

"'Tain't no use, mister. Me aunt's jist as tight-fisted as me uncle an' all de rest uv me relashuns. I fear I'll have to go to work at last."

Childlife.

"Come, Willie," said his mother, "don't be so selfish. Let your little brother play with your marbles a while."

"But," protested Willie, "he means to keep them always."

"Oh, I think not."

"I say, 'Yes,' 'cause he's swallowed two of them already."

.:. The Coralbank Case .:.

By MATTHEW JAMES.

ONE of the smarest little robberies that has ever come under my notice," said Detective Hunter, of Scotland Yard, as he musingly lit his first cigar one night recently at my rooms in Portman Square, "was that perpetrated in the autumn of last year upon a Mr. Silas Jay, then residing in a pretty little house known as "Coralbank" and situated about half a mile beyond Windsor."

I was on the alert in an instant, for there were few things I like better than listening to one of Detective Hunter's professional experiences.

"Perhaps," he said, after a few moments' reflection, "I had better give you the particulars as they were narrated to me by Mr. Silas Jay himself, since I personally had nothing to do with the case."

The story ran as follows:

First, I must explain that Mr. Jay, who was a bachelor, was a man of many prejudices. He suspected everybody, and regarded all recognized and established institutions with unqualified distrust. Those that were national were torpid, and therefore mere shams, while those that were not were established chiefly for the fattening of financiers by any process, honest or otherwise, but more generally otherwise.

The existing police system held a prominent position in the former category, while banking houses figured no less conspicuously in the latter. This last opinion induced him to distribute his capital among six or seven banks, in order that, should any one of them fail and swindle him out of his money, his fortune would not be very materially impaired. Well, among these banking houses was one situated in Windsor, which, for the sake of convenience, he always used when at home, and in this bank the sum of £60,000 was deposited.

The Rumor Spreads.

How the rumor reached him I was never able to discover, but one day in October he presented himself in great excitement at the offices of the bank in question, declaring that he had heard it whispered they contemplated suspending payment, and demanding an immediate surrender of his credit balance of $60,000.

The manager indignantly repudiated the suspicion, but the old gentleman was thoroughly frightened, and finally the money was handed to him over the counter in the shape of a hundred $500 and two hundred $50 notes. These, as he afterwards explained to me, he intended depositing the following day in another of the local banks. But this intention was frustrated.

Early the next morning it was discovered that during the night an entry had been effected into the house, and the alarmed Mr. Jay, descending hastily to the library, discovered, to his mortification, that the larger of the two parcels of bank notes, of the value of £10,000, had been abstracted from the drawer in which he had locked it. The smaller but more valuable parcel he had placed, for greater security, in a secret compartment of his secretary, and this, to his intense relief, he found to be intact. The ingeniousness of the contrivance had baffled the thief, who had been forced to retire without securing the bulk of the money.

Mr. Jay dispatched a servant with a telegram, which he had himself indited requesting the authorities at Scotland Yard to send down a detective at the "earliest possible opportunity."

Half an hour later the servant returned without having dispatched the telegram and accompanied by a tall, shrewd-looking, businesslike man of about thirty-five. He was immediately conducted to the library, where, without loss of time, he introduced both himself and his errand to the astonished Mr. Jay. He spoke with a quick, intelligent precision that was not without its effect on his listener.

"Mr. Walter Craft."

"Mr. Silas Jay, I believe?" he said, briskly. "I chanced to be in the telegraph office when your servant entered, and, observing the direction of the message he was about to dispatch, took the liberty of interrupting it until I had seen you. But first allow me to introduce myself."

He took a card from his pocket and laid it on the table. Mr. Jay picked it up and read the name, "Mr. Walter Craft, detective inspector, Scotland Yard."

"As you see," resumed the stranger in a matter-of-fact tone, "I am connected with the establishment to which your telegram was directed, and, this being so, I took the further liberty of making myself acquainted with its contents. The closing words, 'earliest possible opportunity,' particularly appealed to my professional recognition, of the value of time; so, being on the spot, I have come straight to you to offer my services in discovering the perpetrator or perpetrators of the robbery which took place here last night, the chief particulars of which I have already elicited from your servant."

Mr. Jay rose from his chair, "I am glad you came," he said.

The detective bowed, and then, resuming his brisk, businesslike air, which appeared to afford his listener no small satisfaction, said;

"Then let us begin at once."

"Had you any other money in the house?" His keen, gray eyes searched Mr. Jay's face.

The latter hesitated. He was at all times a suspicious man. But the detective's keen insight into the position of things had strongly prepossessed himself in his favor, while his character was no doubt unimpeachable. So, after a moment's consideration, he told the story of the untouched parcel of bank notes, even going so far, in the exuberance of his spirits at the thief's failure, as to touch the secret spring which opened the hidden compartment and reveal to the detective the notes within. As he did so, however, he appeared to regret the action, for he made a movement as if to reclose the compartment, but the detective stopped him.

"Pardon me," he said quickly, "but did I understand you to say that you drew these notes from the bank with those that are missing?"

Silas Jay nodded.

"In that case," said the detective, emphatically, "I must ask you to allow me to examine these notes. A great deal may depend on my doing so."

The Suspicion.

Silas Jay reluctantly drew them from their hiding place and handed them to the detective. The latter turned them over, one by one, his fingers lingering long over the task. Then, with a half-suppressed sigh, he handed them back to their owner and watched that gentleman as he once more replaced them in the secret compartment of the secretaire, and heard the sharp, metallic click of the spring as it flew into position.

When this was done he asked to be allowed to see the servants, and one by one they were called into the library. He said but little to them, however, chiefly impressing upon them the necessity for silence on the subject of the robbery, and dismissed them once more to their respective duties. Then he turned to Mr. Jay.

"Now," he said briskly, "I think I may confide to you the fact that my investigations so far have not been without their reward. To-morrow morning I shall return and shall probably require to again examine—and, if may be necessary to photograph—the notes still in your possession. I will now bid you good-day, as there are several things that need to be done in the meantime."

At half-past ten the following morning there was a loud pealing of the front door bell, and a few minutes later a servant announced that two police constables in uniform requested to see Mr. Jay on a matter of sensidarable importance. They were shown into the library, and awkwardly touched their helmets to the master of the house. They were typical country policemen—thickset, stolid-looking individuals, who might certainly form part of the arm of the law, but possessed no iota of its brains.

"Are you Mr. Silas Jay?" inquired one, in a slow, expressionless voice.

Mr. Jay admitted that such was the case.

"Well," explained the constable "we're in search of a feller who's wanted up in Brummagem for a little lob o' 'ousebreakin'. From information received"—he coughed to emphasize the professional phrase—"we know he's in this district, and we are hinformed that a man answerin' to his description was seen a-comin' into your 'ouse yesterday afternoon."

Silas Jay turned pale as a horrible suspicion crossed his mind. With a quick movement he pressed the secret spring of his secretaire, and a sigh of unutterable relief escaped his lips as he beheld the precious bank notes lying safely within their ingenious hiding place. Then, closing the compartment, he turned abruptly to the constables, who were watching him in evident curiosity, and said:

"He promised to be here at eleven this morning, and it barely wants a quarter to that now."

Instantly the men were on their feet.

"I wonder if he'll come?" said one.

"If he does," replied the other, "we've got 'im, and then we're safe for a stripe or two."

Eluded.

Simultaneously they moved to the window and stood looking out down the gravel paths that skirted the lawn and across the tall gates that led on the road. As for Silas Jay he was too bewildered even to think coherently and sat, with his chin resting on his hands, staring straight before him. An exclamation from one of the constables roused him.

"Here 'e is!" exclaimed the man.

Mr. Jay leaped to his feet and ran to the window. At the same instant a man who had just turned in at the gate came to a standstill and glanced irresolutely in the direction of the house.

"You infernal fools!" exclaimed Mr. Jay, with all his old disgust for the police returning in full force. "The fellow has seen your confounded uniforms through the window and has taken the alarm!"

It certainly looked as if this was actually the case, for at that instant the man turned and swiftly retreated through the gates and out on to the road, where he was immediately lost to view behind the tall hedge which shut in the lawn. With a smothered oath, Silas Jay threw up the widow, and, climbing out as quickly as his age would allow, started in hot pursuit. One of the constables followed his example, and, being a younger man, soon outstripped Mr. Jay.

When the latter reached the gate and looked down the road he beheld the bogus detective far away in the distance, speeding along through a cloud of dust, mounted on a bicycle. He was getting up a good pace, and, upon seeing Mr. Jay, waved his hand in token of his determination to catch the now rapidly disappearing thief. When Mr. Jay returned to the house he found that the other policeman had taken himself off.

The next day he was so restless that he could bear the house no longer, so he determined, as there was nothing to hinder him from doing so, to take the hundred $500 notes into Windsor and there deposit them in one of the local banks. He touched the concealed spring of his secretaire and the secret compartment flew noiselessly open. And then, with a wild cry, he staggered back against the wall and fell in a heap upon the floor. The bank notes were gone!

As soon as he recovered he rushed into Windsor and wired to Scotland Yard, and the chief sent me down to investigate. Both detective and his confederates, the country constables, were unknown—in that capacity, at least—to the authorities. When I communicated this information to Mr. Silas Jay I thought he would have a fit.

"What are you going to do?" he asked.

"I am afraid," I said, "there is but little left for me to do. I have been to the bank, and find that, owing to the ridiculous discussion which took place, the manager, in handing you the notes, omitted the customary precaution of taking down their numbers. All we can do, therefore, is to endeavor to trace the criminals by means of their description. But this is a tedious process, and not always crowned with success."

He handed me the card which the bogus detective had given him.

"An alias, I suppose," I said. "And Walter Craft is not an inappropriate name for one of his calling."

A gleam of something like self-contempt shone in the old man's eyes.

"Scarcely as appropriate as my own," he exclaimed savagely, "for if any man richly deserves the name of Jay, I am certainly he!"

PERFECT HEALTH WOMAN'S CROWN OF GLORY

Did you ever observe a woman who has reached the age of 60 or even 70 in perfect health and say to yourself, "I hope I may grow old as gracefully as she does?" Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

Happiness the Real Secret, Says One of the Stage's Prettiest Girls

"Being happy is the secret of being well, looking well and feeling well."

This is Miss Lois Josephine's recipe for obtaining and maintaining a beautiful face and figure.

Miss Lois Josephine in two poses.

"I AM determined to be happy," said Lois Josephine to me, smiling the while with the wistful sweetness that is the heritage of Irish blood. "I think that being happy is the secret of being well, and doing your work well, and looking well, and feeling well! Well, with all these wells to be acquired, my search for happiness is going to be untiring."

"Just how does one go about being happy—deliberately happy?" I asked. The blue-bird of happiness is an elusive-winged creature, and even when he is found at last at your own fireside he flies away as you clasp him in the welcoming circle of your hands.

"To be happy," answered Miss Josephine, with a tiny shadow of a smile that ought to lure happiness right to her side, never to depart, "to be happy, you like all the things you have to do, you trust your friends, you love all the beauty of nature around you—and you avoid unnecessary contact with tasks that you can not teach yourself to like. Oh, truly, I think that if you are happy you will be healthy and wealthy and wise and—and, yes, beautiful!"

Now, Miss Josephine is the Sunshine Girl in "The Passing Show of 1913" up at the Winter Garden in New York, and most charmingly does she and her partner, Wellington Cross, dispense gayety and sunshine as they dance their "joy of living" steps for you. Perhaps it is here that Miss Josephine found her inspiration to be a sunshiny girl in everyday life, but to be happy seems to me to be a most excellent way to acquire beauty.

Her Program.

"I am going to be so happy and contented with life that I will just naturally attract sunshine instead of shadow," went on the dainty girl whose picture delights you to-day. "I am going to be so pleased with my life and work that my expression can never be bitter or discontented, but instead must be sweet and friendly.

"Bitterness, discontent, envy, worry, anger, malice—I am going to banish them from my mind more and more earnestly as I get more and more power to pursue a search for happiness. If only girls knew what foes to beauty these evil feelings were they would all join me in a happiness hunt and get such sweet expressions that every one would be exclaiming: 'Well, I declare, if Mamie Jones isn't getting to be a beauty—she has the most attractive expression!' "

Suddenly Miss Josephine trilled out a merry laugh.

"Want to see one practical detail of my hunt for happiness? Well, I am making my feet happy, too! I wear flat-soled tennis shoes with buck instead of tennis soles, since rubber draws the feet, and so rest and relax the muscles and tendons of my feet. Narrow, tight, high-heeled shoes do not make your feet comfortable; they actually hurt your health, and they do great harm to the serenity of your face. You know the desperate expression you often see on the face of a girl whose shoes are too tight or are pitching her forward, with the strain coming heavily on already tired muscles. Well, an expression like that may carve its way in ugly lines right into a face. So I recommend making your feet happy if you want your face to look happy!

Ventral Courtesy.

"I am very polite to my digestion. I don't ask its overtaxed organs to handle heavy meats and rich sauces all through the hot summer. Instead, I eat vegetables and salads and the lighter meats, and give my system tonic food, instead of task food, in summer. An ideal summer program is to have meat on your dinner menu only two or three times a week. For instance: Chicken on Sunday, steak on Tuesday, lamb on Thursday, fish on Friday, and on the other three days try soup and a few extra vegetables for your dinner. Simple menus will give your 'digestery' a rested, happy feeling that will tell in a happy, rested-looking face.

"If you like it as well as I do, you will be delighted to drink three glasses of buttermilk during the day, and on rising and on retiring you will enjoy a bit of watercress with salt. Fine tonics for the system—both of these. Then to make your skin and muscles rejoice in the general prosperity, try a morning and evening rub with equal parts of alcohol and witch hazel. That will add a fine glow to the general beauty-dealing feeling of happiness you want to acquire. Oh, it is great fun working out a system whereby you will acquire happiness and all its attendant blessings of beauty and health and power to advance in the world."

As we left Miss Josephine's pretty home on a cross street, just west of Broadway, a friend called to the little blue linen-suited figure: "Hello, little bluebird!"! And the bluebird is for happiness, you know.

LILIAN LAUFERTY.

Its Virtue.

President A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard, said at a dinner in his honor in Chicago:

"Early marriages are the best. It is neither good for the man nor for the community that he should wait until he is 28 years old before marrying."

President Lowell paused a moment and then, smiling, he continued:

"Another trouble about late marriages is that the man's habits—his bad habits—are formed, and it's hard to break him of them. You know, perhaps, the story of the cigarette?

"A man of the old fashioned 'manly man' type—the soft, full-stomached type that drinks too much, belongs to too many lodges, and must be superior to woman in everything—this man took umbrage over his wife's cigarette, the one modest cigarette that she took after dinner, though he, of course, smoked like a chimney all day long. And so he said, one evening:

"'I believe you think more of that nasty, poisonous cigarette than you do of me, your husband.'

"'Well, dear,' his wife replied, smiling and blowing a cloud, 'I can keep my cigarette, you know, from going out.'"

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Mildred Farley was a dressmaker," this gentleman went on. "If you read the newspapers you know that, and also know that she worked hard at her duties for some weeks before her death. But what is very strange in her connection, and, together with some other reasons unnecessary to state here makes it difficult for the police to settle down to the belief that her death was the simple suicide it at first seemed, is that no one has succeeded in discovering for whom she worked, and to what home she carried the various dresses she finished in that time. For though it may not be material to know this, and may not help the affair forward one jot toward its rightful issue, yet because it is a mystery and an unsolved one, those whose business it is to see every doubtful case made clear, have sent me to this house to see if some light can not be thrown by you upon it."

He paused and looked at Genevieve. She at once raised her eyes and surveyed him steadily.

"You think, then, that I knew Mildred Farley?" was her question, clearly and coldly uttered.

At Loggerheads.

"Did you not?" he inquired.

Her lips broke into a smile. "Ask Dr. Cameron," she suggested, and seemed to think she had answered his question.

Their visitor glanced at the doctor, met only a dubious shake of the head, and continued in a more formal tone.

"If you did not know Miss Farley, it is strange she should have made the dresses of your trousseau, Mrs. Cameron."

"I don't understand you," was that lady's reply. "My dresses were made by any one but that girl. This I can assure you most positively, sir."

"You can. We are then brought round to my first question: who was it that did make your dresses, Mrs. Cameron?"

It was smilingly said, but it caused her to flush with great indignation.

"Is it necessary that I should tell you?" she somewhat haughtily inquired.

"If you do not, I cannot prevent certain people I know from thinking it was Mildred Farley."

"And why?" Dr. Cameron now broke in. "What reasons have they or any one to connect my wife with that poor unfortunate?"

"Only a very material one which I leave to Mrs. Cameron to explain. In the room of that dead girl were found scraps and ends of silk and velvet, which were preserved by the police as pieces of the goods she had been lately making up into dresses. Among these was a morsel of trimming—here it is—and as this trimming or some just like it was seen by chance upon a dress worn by Mrs. Cameron, it struck one of our agents that she was in all probability the lady who had profited by this poor girl's handiwork."

"The conclusion of a man!" exclaimed Mrs. Cameron, with chill sarcasm. "I suppose there are in this city to-day, twenty ladies with just that trimming on their gowns."

"And with this gray velvet for a dress? And this—I do not know how to call it—for another? And this soft white silk so suitable for a bride's adorning, and"——

"Enough, enough," cried Mrs. Cameron, putting up her hands merrily as a half dozen samples of various goods and colors fell in a shower into her lap. "I own to these, but I do not own to Mildred Farley. You waste your time; you will never find that she did any sewing for me, however she came into possession of these pieces." And with a half careless, half disdainful smile, she flirted the bits aside, looking so imperious and so charming, that for a moment her visitor seemed a trifle abashed and half rose as if to go. "You see if I had anything to tell, I would," she murmured, graciously. "But I have not. I cannot explain any more than you how these samples from my dresses should have been found where they were. I can only look at them and wonder. Is that enough, sir?"

"Hardly," his look seemed to say, but he rose. "And you will not tell me where your dresses were made?" he smiled.

She shook her head, laughed and rose with an arch air.

The Back Porch.

"It is a secret I have kept even from my husband, but if you must have it, you must. And rising on tiptoe with a look of merry defiance at the doctor, she whispered something in the visitor's ear.

He listened, stared at her a moment and broke into a genial laugh.

"And so this is your secret," he cried. "Well, I know how to respect the secrets of a lady when such respect does not interfere with my duty."

And with a gallant bow he took his leave, expressing the hope that he had not made his call to lengthy.

After he was gone Dr. Cameron turned to his wife.

"And what did you whisper in that big man's ear to calm him so suddenly?"

"Ah, you want to know my secret too," she laughed. "Well, I told him that the work which has been so much admired had been done by no woman. That in my vanity and desire for originality I had had the poor taste to employ a man, and that I was secretly ashamed of it."

"She told you that?" cried Mr. Gryce. "And you believed here? Humph!"

"She spoke the truth," asserted his companion—the gentleman whose name we purposely suppressed in the last chapter."

"You think so?"

"I do. There was something in her tone, whisper though it was, which brought conviction. I do not question her word in the least."

"Well, we will see; I did not hear her and so may be pardoned for having my doubts. I will talk with you again, sir. The play may not be worth the candle, and it may; a few days more will determine."

"And Molesworth?"

"Is very well as he is."

This conversation, fragmentary though it is, will show something of the stand which Mr. Gryce was taking in this matter. He had Molesworth under his eye and as good as under arrest, and yet he was not satisfied. Something—was it instinct or experience?—told him that this affair possessed complications of no ordinary nature, and that to a conscientious man like himself there were doubts to be solved and possibilities to be sounded, before he would dare proceed against the doctor as against a presumably guilty man.

But with the kindred remembrance of what the woman in Mrs. Olney's boarding house had said about Mildred Farley's frequent comings and goings with her great box, he did not consider it so foolish now, and only wished he had probed the subject deeper at the time. It was not so late yet, however, but that proper inquiries in the right places would settle the question as to whether these two girls were the same. He had only to pass a word or two with the complaisant butler at Mr. Gretorex's house, to learn enough to have the laugh, to say the least, on his somewhat credulous superior. To Mr. Gretorex's house he therefore went, and to Mr. Gretorex's butler he at once addressed himself.

He found this person quite ready to talk in his easy, French way.

The Butler.

"Zat girl? I—none of ze help know somezing bout zat girl, only Mees Gretorex always was at home when she come. A vell for ze face? Oui, so sick you no can see if she was black or white. But she was ver pretty—look good, Sacre! She walk good—proud like a comtesse. She no look at me. One time Pierre try, I try to speak wiz her. It was no good. If she was much deaf she do just so; for she look not to me, she look not to Pierre."

"You're right, Count," laughed a voice over their shoulders, "and one of us ain't a bad looking man, either."

It was Peter, who liked a bit of gossip as well as his neighbor, and who now came forward smiling.

"I feel ze compliment, M. Pierre, and it is ver much good for you to say so," retorted the "Count" with a grandiose bow. "It is ze opinion of ze ladies in ze house."

The butler then winked slyly at Mr. Gretorex's house he therefore went, and to Mr. Gretorex's butler he at once addressed himself.

He found this person quite ready to talk in his easy, French way.

The Butler.

"Zat girl? I—none of ze help know somezing bout zat girl, only Mees Gretorex always was at home when she come. A vell for ze face? Oui, so sick you no can see if she was black or white. But she was ver pretty—look good, Sacre! She walk good—proud like a comtesse. She no look at me. One time Pierre try, I try to speak wiz her. It was no good. If she was much deaf she do just so; for she look not to me, she look not to Pierre."

"You're right, Count," laughed a voice over their shoulders, "and one of us ain't a bad looking man, either."

It was Peter, who liked a bit of gossip as well as his neighbor, and who now came forward smiling.

"I feel ze compliment, M. Pierre, and it is ver much good for you to say so," retorted the "Count" with a grandiose bow. "It is ze opinion of ze ladies in ze house."

The butler then winked slyly at Gryce, and satisfied that he had effectually discomfited the footman, proceeded to put questions to the detective as to his reasons for the interest he showed in this girl, which that functionary had wit and experience enough to successfully parry.

Peter helped him; for Peter was a rival of the butler's in more than one field, and in his good-natured way invariably took part against him in any controversy, and it was from Peter that Mr. Gryce finally got the acknowledgment that this young woman, or lady, as he persisted in calling her, usually wore a long, black ulster and made her appearance in the evening.

Now this was satisfactory. In the closet of Mildred Farley at Mrs. Olney's house there was a long, black ulster, and she, as we know, was accustomed to take her work home evenings.

"But she didn't have the ulster on the last time she came, oh, no," continued Peter. "I don't know what it was made the difference, but she looked foine. O, now! well I'm tellin' ye I wouldn't have known her at all, at all, but for her ould brown veil and little handbag. Them wur the same as before and so was the air of her. Not a word, nor the divil of a look for one of us; but being the night o' the wedding, she got out o' me head, for sure I had enough else to moind."

Her Handbag.

This last admission was a surprise, but Mr. Gryce was accustomed to surprises, so he kept quite still; the more so that he saw the butler was about to speak, and he always preferred to glean his facts through the questions of other people rather than his own.

"Zat girl here on Miss Gretorex's wedding night? I zink you was mistake, Pierre."

"Mistaken is it I am! when these two hands let her in meself at the back door. It wasn't only here she was, but it's helpin' Miss Gretorex to dress she was, and divil a minute she had to spare, aither, being just in the nick of time to be of any help at all, at all, to her. I didn't see her leave, though."

Mr. Gryce felt his interest cool. Reason told him how improbable it was that this person with all her mysteries, could have been the runaway bride of Julius Molesworth. Even if this house had not been miles distant from the C—— Hotel where he had himself seen her at 7 o'clock of that same night, the great improbability of her fleeing from her own nuptials to assist in this very humble capacity at those of another, was too manifest for his consideration even. Yet because habit was strong in him and habit forbade him to leave a subject till he had exhausted it, he put in a word which he thought must settle the matter.

EVANS DECLARES CLOUDY DAY IS BEST FOR GOLF

By Chick Evans.

TO my mind a gray day gives the ideal golfing weather. This sort of a day frequently precedes or follows rain and there is something in the moist freshness of the atmosphere and absence of glare that is wholly delightful. The clubs at such a time seem unusually light and if they are your own there is a wonderful balance and the blades appear to lie supremely well. The grip also seems perfect because the moisture of the air gets into the leather and gives that feeling of absolute security to the grip. While this feeling in damp weather is true of all grips, it is particularly true of the oiled leather kind.

For some reason, whether it is a quality of the atmosphere or because one's clubs feel so good, the flight of the ball seems steadier and the picture of the little white globe floating in a true and steady line against a dull gray background of sky is a sight to warm the heart of every golfer

Sun's Glare Hampers Player.

On a bright, warm day the glare from the sun is often distressing to the eyes of the golfer, and a round of golf under a midsummer sun leaves him exhausted. But an overcast day is a comfort to the eyes and a strengthening tonic to the whole physique. One's game itself is better, too, for the moist greens hold the iron shots and permit accurate placing.

The game of golf evolved under gray skies, along wide, moist, grassy places by the sea. In Great Britain there are hundreds and hundreds of overcast days. Then, on these matchless courses, in sight and sound of the waves, with the smell of the sea and the moist freshness of its breath in one's nostrils, the game is enjoyed in all of its natural flavor.

Prairie Courses Harder.

We miss, perhaps, a good deal of this subtle enjoyment of the game on our sun-baked courses. When the greens are like lightning and the fairway cracked and seamed iron shots will not stay where put and fine points of the game are impossible of application. But while we miss much, we are spared that frequent British affliction—a downpour of rain in the midst of an interesting match.

I love an overcast day for golf, the gray sky and moist breeze are like an inspiring draught, but heaven preserve me from a rainy day upon the links.

Sports and Such

FAMOUS IN SPORT—VII.

The Fight Manager.

THE FIGHT MANAGER IS AN ever-present example of the value of human endeavor, so long as you can get somebody else to do the endeavoring. It is the mission of the Fight Manager to live by the toil of other men, and, so far as we are a judge, he does his duty. We never heard of one who starved to death.

Managing fighters has all of the advantages of managing a bank, with none of the risks. When a bank gets in bad you can not shake it and pick up another one; but the average Fight Manager continues to blow expensive cigar smoke into the eye of the Sporting Editor long after dozens of fighters he has managed have gone back to sparring for pork chops in the outskirts of Detroit and Cincinnati.

Lest you be thus encouraged to rush blindly into the business, it is our duty to warn you that certain natural gifts are essential. The successful Fight Manager must have tireless vocal chords, a barb-proof hide, a property smile and the imagination of a mining-stock salesman. Also, the gall of a policeman.

It is by no means necessary that he have a fighter. Many men have tried to get by with merely a fighter and have failed. It is much better to tow around some muscular misfit with a ten-ounce brain and by persistent talking and "gettin' in with the right guys" convince the public that he is a fighter. A real fighter usually has enough intelligence to want to audit accounts every now and then, and this is a serious handicap to real success in this profession.

But for the kind of man that fits into the profession it is certainly the kind of profession for him to fit into. Two or three thousand per cent profits are common. For instance, Lute McCarty won $4,000 in his last fight, and when every one had gotten his there was $26 left for the estate. That's a business.

Tuesday Society Night at 'Drome

R. F. Maddox Sweepstakes Feature

TUESDAY night has been selected as "society night" at the Motordrome, and a special card has been arranged to delight the large attendance that is expected to witness the events.

The feature event on the program is to be the Robert F. Maddox Sweepstakes, to be run in three heats of six riders each. The award will be on points.

Then there is a three-cornered race among Jock McNeil, Harry Glenn and Harry Swartz, which also promises a lot of excitement.

Here is the program:

Motordrome Purse.

(Heats, 1 mile; final, 2 miles; winner in each heat and second man in fastest heat.)

First Heat—Graves, Swartz and Lockner.

Second Heat—Richards, Luther and Renel.

Third Heat—McNeil, Lewis and Glenn.

Three-Cornered Match Race.

(Three heats, 1 mile, 2 miles and 3 miles.)

First Heat—Glenn, McNeil and Swartz. One mile.

Final Motordrome Purse, two miles.

Second Heat — Three-cornered match race, two miles.

R. F. Maddox Sweepstakes.

(French point system, 10 for first, 6 for second and 2 for third; three heats, 2, 4 and 6 miles.)

First Heat—Two miles: Graves, Richards, Luther, Lewis, Renel and Lockner.

Third Heat—Three-cornered match race, three miles.

Second Heat—Maddox Sweepstakes, four miles.

Third heat—Maddox Sweepstakes, six miles.

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

TWO MINUS ONE.

(Paraphrasing a well-known author.)

Two things greater than all things are.
One is a bush league baseball star
Who smites the ball with a heart of vim
And earns the kale they have paid for him.

P.S.—The other thing doesn't count.

It is said Fred Merkle is the lad who smote John McGraw on the jowl. This shows that ivory never melts.

In golf, which Mr. Merkle is alleged to play every morn, the slogan is: "Keep your eye on the ball." In baseball, which Mr. Merkle is alleged to play every afternoon, the slogan is: "Keep your eye on the base."

Charlie Ebbets is said to be figuring on a new manager, thus showing that he is willing to go to any expense to get something new to dedicate.

One is not surprised to read that Miller Huggins wants an entirely new team. But one might be surprised to read that he is satisfied with the team he has.

Occasionally a youth from California gets a trimming in a tennis tournament. We said occasionally.

Ban Johnson announces that the world's series will open on October 6. The announcement is received with great enthusiasm among ticket speculators.

It is claimed that tickets speculation on the world series has been reduced to a minimum. Figuring thusly, a maximum would be approximately 175 per cent of the gate receipts.

The report that Clark Griffith has offered $100,000 for Ty Cobb leads one to suspect that he is hitting .400 in the hop league.

We note in the newspapers that one Ar Chung, a Chinese lightweight, made one Pat McCarty quit. The A. O. H. will now proceed to start a libel suit.

It is rumored that Freddie Welch has saved $100,000 out of his earnings. This reveals the fact that his earnings were $100,000.05.

THIS PARAGRAPH IS WRITTEN TO IMMORTALIZE ONE HUMID KALLA PASHA, AN HONEST WRESTLER. HUMID IS HONEST ENOUGH TO ADMIT THAT THERE AIN'T NO SUCH THING.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Tommy Walsh, of New Orleans, who looks after the affairs of Joe Mandot, has also taken George "Knockout" Brown, the Chicago middleweight, under his management. He has matched Brown to meet Jack Dillon, the Indianapolis fighter, in a ten-round bout at a show to be brought off at Terre Haute, Ind., on Labor Day.

* * *

Tom McCarey, the fight promoter, has offered to assist Jim Coffroth, the San Francisco promoter, in getting a star bout for his show on Labor Day afternoon. As Champion Willie Ritchie has agreed to fight Freddie Welch at Vancouver on that day, Coffroth has been left without an attraction. McCarey is willing to let Coffroth have Johnny Dundee, Ad Wolgast or any fighter that is under contract to him.

* * *

Jimmy Clabby, the veteran middleweight, is in San Francisco trying to get a match with Bob McAllister. Jim Coffroth is trying to match the pair for a September date. Clabby is one of the real marvels of the boxing game and should be a big hit on the coast.

* * *

Charley White, who defeated Frank Whitney here last week, will meet Johnny Griffiths in a twelve-round bout at Akron, Ohio, on Labor Day. Griffiths recently defeated Young Saylor and also knocked out Phil Brock in three rounds. After this scrap White may go to the coast for a set-to with Harlem Tommy Murphy.

* * *

The San Langford-Joe Jeannette match, which has been hanging fire for some time, is now a settled affair. Tom McCarey has received assurances from both fighters that they will be ready to go the marathon route on October 7.

* * *

If the proposed match between Willie Ritchie and Freddie Welch goes through it will be the first international contest for the lightweight championship since George Lavigne and Dick Burge fought in England a number of years ago.

* * *

It is impossible to any longer overlook Gunboat Smith as a candidate for the heavyweight championship honors. Smith has gone right along whipping every man he has been matched with. His latest victory over Jim Flynn has certainly added a big feather in his cap.

TOMMY LONG AND CHAPMAN PLAY TO-DAY

HERE'S a grain of comfort. The Crackers will be able to send their regular line-up against the Barons this afternoon, when the first game of the series begins at 3:30 o'clock—note the change in the time.

Manager Smith said this morning that Tommy Long had about got over his severe cold and would be in left field this afternoon. Chapman's wrenched ankle has come around in good shape and Harry will be back of the wood.

As to the first slabman to get a whack at the Moles, Bill is going to try out the Gil Price jinx again. Gil has had something on the Barons all season; they haven't seemed able to make a start against the big left-hander, and Gil himself is eager to tackle them in the jump game.

A report from Birmingham announces the purchase of Ed Ery, leading pitcher of the Georgia-Alabama League, who is to report here to-day. "Rube" Evans, the big left-hander, has been suspended for failure to keep in condition, and Bill Prough was called away from the club by a sister's illness, so Molesworth's slab staff is badly in need of bolstering.

The Barons' manager said this morning that Prough was expected on almost any train from the direction of Athens, Ala., and that Ery was being looked for hourly, also. McGilvray is out of the line-up, too. Hardgrove is scheduled to pitch this afternoon.

Crackers Sign 'Goat' Holliday For Next Season

"Goat Holliday, the former crack first baseman of Tech, to-day signed a contract to play with the Crackers next season. He will report next spring.

Holliday was one of the greatest college first sackers in the South two years ago and should prove a good man for the local representatives in the Southern League.

As Joe Agler has been sold to the Jersey City club of the International League, the Crackers will have to unearth a worthy man for the first sack. Holliday may prove the right man.

Thousands at Burial Of Mine War Victims

CALUMET, MICH., Aug. 18.—A big public funeral for the two copper strikers killed in a fight Thursday night between Deputy Sheriffs and strikers was held here yesterday. A special train brought the bodies here from the Champion mine and thousands of strikers from every part of the copper district attended the services.

HANLON GETS PLAYERS.

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—E. J. Hanlon, president of the Sioux City Western League club, obtained from the Detroit Americans the outfielder and pitcher he needed for his team, it was learned to-day. Hanlon's visit here was brief and he did not give out the names of his new players.

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

Intense rivalry in Empire League cities is in evidence now in every game played. Charges and counter charges are being hurled at first one team, then another, while the president of the league gets his full share, too.

* * *

Babe Wilder, the wonder of the league, has lost the last three games he pitched for Cordele. The losses were not his fault, as errors behind him let his opponents score enough to win.

* * *

Brouthers, playing in the field for Americus, came mighty near pulling off a fatal play for his team recently. He tried to get a stone in center field, thinking it was the ball which had just been hit safely. A fellow fielder saw the mistake and nipped the real article up in time to save a run.

* * *

Left Fielder Powers, of the Waycross team, has returned to Jacksonville. He was declared ineligible and Waycross had nothing to do but let him go. He is a fleet fielder and has made a neat record during his stay with Waycross.

* * *

Ten victories to one defeat is the pitching record held by Dacey, of the Americus team. He was signed originally as a fielder but has developed into a pitcher as good as the best in the league.

* * *

Outfielder Schuyler, of the Brunswick team, is climbing rapidly in batting. He hits the ball hard regularly.

* * *

Day came back strong against the Valdosta team after they knocked him out of the box and won his game with ease for Thomasville. His shut-out record in the Empire is a good one.

* * *

Otto Jordan seems good on picking up good players. He has landed Wise, a catcher, and from the way the fellow plays he is slated for faster company. Gordon and Vaughan, pitchers, will both land in the Sally and perhaps higher. Gordon has already gone to Macon and ought to make good. And the Valdosta team has others just as reliable.

* * *

Umpire baiting in the league has ruined a number of games recently and the fans generally are in hopes of changes before another season arrives that will make this impossible. Attacks on umpires by players have received only minor treatment.

* * *

By winning four straight games, two from the league leaders, Waycross climbed out of the cellar position for the first time since early in July, when the second half of the season started.

* * *

Added to his fielding ability Doc Fenton, playing center for Waycross, has started hitting at a terrific clip. He got two home runs in succession and four hits in succession the next day. His put-out record is eight for one game, and has no equal in the league.

* * *

Red Stiles, who started the season with Waycross and went to Thomasville when he was released, has been suspended for the balance of the season at his own request.

* * *

"Handy" Anderson, who is playing third for Waycross, has developed into a remarkably fine player for a youngster. He joined Waycross from a school team, and made good with a rush. He plays short splendidly and is at home in the field. His bunting is a feature and he seldom fails to reach first when he gets one placed to his notion.

* * *

Stewart, the new pitcher with Brunswick, has a cross-fire ball that is mighty hard to hit. He has worked it with success on the best batters and fooled them every time. His brother, playing with Americus, is also able to work some deceptive balls over the plate.

JEFFRIES 'DOPE STORY' GAINS NEW HEARING

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—The direct statement that James J. Jeffries, after his defeat by Jack Johnson at Reno, sought and secured proof that he had been drugged before the battle with the negro was made in a signed article written by a New York sporting editor and published in an evening paper to-day.

The statement follows, in part:

"Jeffries hired one of the greatest detective agencies in the world to run down the facts. The details he gathered make up a complete story of the most sordid plot that ever turned fair sport into a sure-thing gamble. Possibly Johnson would have won in any case, but the clique that handled the betting made it a certainty by drugging Jeffries with the help of men who were in his confidence and who had the run of his camp. They cleaned up a fortune through betting commissioners stationed in many cities. In Paris alone they wagered $24,000 and won $40,000. In Reno and San Francisco and Los Angeles and New York their gains went into the hundreds of thousands.

"The 'tip' for the big killing was received by the waiting commissioners less than 24 hours before the fight when the gamblers knew that Jeffries was 'safe.'

"The grst plot was broached in a back room; the last man necessary to its success accepted his part in a meeting in a Reno alley two nights before the fight, after having learned that he could make no more money with Jeffries and that he could win thousands by turning Judas. One man whose available cash was also secretly wagered on Johnson smilingly posed as a friendly adviser of Jeffries during the fight."

FRANK GOTCH RETIRES AGAIN FOR STEENTH TIME

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Aug. 18.—Frank Gotch, greatest of all wrestlers, is through with the mat forever. In a letter to the sporting editor of The Minneapolis Daily News, received today, Gotch says:

"While the Minnesota State fair people made me an excellent offer to wrestle Zbyszko on September 5, I have turned it down, as I will all other propositions to return to the game.

"I have enough money, am happily married, and will spend the balance of my days with the people of Humboldt, Iowa, which means more to me than living in a mansion in New York City or in a castle in England. I shall always be an interested follower of the wrestling game, but will be satisfied to sit an the outside of the ring in the future."

Organize Dixie League Club Here

New Circuit Planned for South

APPLICATION for a charter for the Atlanta Baseball Club of the Dixie League was filed this morning in the office of the County Clerk, the petition being signed by the following incorporators:

Guy Hawkins and M. C. Kiser, of Atlanta; Carl Camp, of Fulton County, and Judge W. J. Bacon and H. N. Pharr, of Memphis.

W. W. Hood, local attorney for the club, which now is in the process of organization, spoke very highly of the prospects and aims of the new league.

"It has the proper men back of it, for one thing," Mr. Hood said. "Then it has the cream of the Southern cities. Here is the list: Atlanta, Memphis, New Orleans, Birmingham, Chattanooga, Nashville, Little Rock and Shreveport.

"With the exception of the last two cities, all now are members of the Southern League, with established rating as baseball towns. Little Rock and Shreveport have held Southern League franchises, and are eager to get regular league baseball again."

Besides being an incorporator of the Atlanta club, Judge Bacon is president of the new league. He is a man of much prominence and influence in Tennessee, and states plainly that the league has ample financial backing to launch its circuit next season without the need of placing any stock with outsiders, though it is thought best that each club shall be controlled by men living in its own city.

Application is to be made to the National Commission for affiliation under the present national agreement, which would give the new league a recognized standing at once. If that is denied, however, the league will proceed just the same.

In a statement issued to-day, Judge Bacon asserted that it was not the plan of the Dixie League to fight the Southern, but rather to arrange its schedule so as to furnish continuous baseball in the six cities which would have two clubs. At the end of each season an All-Southern championship is suggested, similar to the world's series, between the champion club of the Southern and that of the Dixie League.

Another meeting of the directors of the league will be called within 30 days, by which time the various local clubs are expected to be well organized.

TINKER READY TO QUIT JOB AS REDS' MANAGER

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—The repeated rumors that all was not well in the affairs of the Cincinnati camp and that the days of Joe Tinker as manager were numbered, were partly confirmed to-day.

The hustling leader of the Reds admitted he was ready to quit. The policies of Garry Herrmann, president of the club, does not jibe with his own, he said, and unless his superior was willing to reconstruct some of his pet theories the team would soon be under a new leader.

Tinker's declaration to-day was caused by the receipt of a telegram from Herrmann notifying Joe that he had "violated baseball law" by airing their differences.

* * *

"I REALIZE that I must take a stand with regard to the management of the club, or step down and out," said the Red manager. "The showing of the team has been a great disappointment to all concerned and I have held off because I felt that I am not a success myself, so far as I have gone. Since the club has not been making money I felt that it was up to me to step for some things that I would not otherwise have endured."

* * *

THE selling out of my players to minor leagues was what caused the break, according to Tinker, who felt that he should be allowed to make profitable trades with the other National League teams.

"I would rather go out to my fruit farm in Oregon," he added, "than to try to handle a club when I am not backed up by the owners. I shall not let another player go unless I know just what the deal is."

GRAND CIRCUIT MEET OPENS AT CHARLESTON NEXT WEEK

CHARLESTON, ILL., Aug. 18.—The Eastern Illinois Grand Racing Circuit opens the season with a program at Charleston next week, the dates being August 18 to 23. There will be three events of $1,000 purses each and ten events of $400 purses, assuring an attractive program. The second week of this circuit was awarded to Urbana, the dates being August 26 to 29. Entries to both meetings have been satisfactory.

PITCHER COMSTOCK SOLD TO DETROIT FOR $5,000

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Aug. 18.—Pitcher Ralph Comstock, of Minneapolis, who has been doing sensational work in the American Association, to-day was sold to the Detroit Americans for $5,000, Catcher Rondeau and a pitcher to be named later. Comstock had been reported sold to Comiskey's club, but there was some hitch in the deal.

Barons Loaded for Grouch Fight

Next Series an Elimination Bout

By O. B. Keeler.

BESTOWING a parting and futile imprecation upon the Pepper Kids, Atlanta fandom will now direct its clamorous attention to the advancing Barons, here for three games.

Indications point to another grouch fight.

Moley still might be considered a pennant contender, if you are good at considering. The reason Moley isn't more of a p. c. is because the Crackers licked him a straight series in Slagville recently.

So you may see quite easily the esteem and affection Moley would hold for our crowd, who also can be considered a pennant possibility—granting for the second time that the consideration faculty is working well.

* * *

THE approaching combat, therefore, takes on the status of an elimination bout for the Hope Championship. If the Barons obtain the measure of revenge they naturally are seeking, the stuff is absolutely off for us, barring miracles.

And miracles do not happen in baseball as frequently as one might suppose.

On the other hand, if Messrs. Moley, Prough, et al, again fail to come through, M. P. & Co. are entirely to the fritts, so far as 1913 is concerned.

And as for our own little outlook, that depends very largely on what is happening to the Gulls.

* * *

OF course, as long as Mique Finn can keep his justly celebrated $30 ball club steaming along at anything approaching its present clip, it really doesn't make a blamed bit of difference whether the Crackers win double-headers and things or lose them.

That is the strategic disadvantage of being seven or eight laps back of the pacemaker.

ON the whole, we are beginning to frog up a little stuff about the prospects for 1914—proclaiming loudly, nevertheless, our entire willingness to die game on the platform as adopted by the 1913 convention.

* * *

THAT Chattanooga series, now, fell in on us at a thoroughly unfortunate place.

Chapman was injured and the services of the speedy and hard-hitting Tommy Long were lost after the first indecisive struggle.

* * *

That of itself would make an acceptable alibi, if this were the open season for alibis.

Except, in that case, the Pepper Kids could put witnesses on the stand to testify to their own dismemberment and the fact that they had so few pitchers that the huge Pole had to be unloaded three times in one series.

That, however, is strictly an alibi with a flareback. If the full staff of Chattanooga hurlers could have been sent against the Crackers in order, and the Pole left in the lumber pile, it would have been an agreeable surprise for the Town Boys.

That's the kind of a pest the Pole is.

WELL, here are the Barons, and, as stated somewhere up ahead near the baggage car of this alleged train of thought, the meeting is in the nature of a grouch fight.

That usually makes business good—also baseball. No man full of red corpuscles cares to see a baseball game played as if between roommates.

Then, too, Bill Smith's birthday comes along next Wednesday, and there is going to be a little party at Ponce DeLeon in his honor. There will be a band, and about nine thousands guests are expected—if it doesn't rain.

This will be a good chance for the great body of fans who like Bill and his work to come out and let him know about it.

LARGE CROWD SEES YOUNG AND WILLARD WORK OUT

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 18.—Packed to capacity training camp crowds saw "White Hope" Jess Willard and "Bull" Young, matched to box twenty rounds before the Pacific A. C. at Vernon next Friday night, go through with their work-outs yesterday afternoon.

Leach Cross, matched to box Mexican Joe Rivers on Labor Day, returned from Catalina Island yesterday and will immediately open his camp at Doyle's resort, Vernon. Rivers will start work to-morrow. The local boy is to select a camp site at one of the beaches.

EARLY BASEBALL MEETING.

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—The annual meeting of the baseball league will be held here in October instead of December, according to B. B. Johnson. The earlier date was chosen on account of the world tour of the Chicago club.

A. A. C. WILL HAVE WATER SPORTS NEXT SATURDAY

There will be a lot of splashing, plain and fancy, at East Lake next Saturday when the second annual "water sports day" is to be observed by the Atlanta Athletic Club.

The water sports committee now is at work on the program, on which there are to be nine events, including swimming, canoeing, boat racing and fancy diving.

A dinner-dance will top off the afternoon's diversions.

JEANNETTE AND LANGFORD TO CLASH IN 10-ROUND GO

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Sam Langford, the Boston "Tar Baby," and Joe Jeannette, the Hoboken heavyweight, have signed articles to box ten rounds at Madison Square Garden the latter part of September. The match was closed yesterday.

MEAT IS GOING UP AND UP AND UP

Experts Say Country Will Have Worst Shortage of Beef in Its History.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18—This country will experience next winter the greatest shortage of beef in its history. Prices, which already have advanced 25 to 50 per cent in a year, are to be 10 to 13 per cent higher by January 1. Meat will sell at unheard of figures.

The representative of a big packer in Chicago said yesterday: "Forty cents a pound for the choice cuts seem a certainty, 45 cents in a probability, and even 50 cents a possibility before spring."

George L. McCarthy, proprietor of The National Provisioner, said today that the stock population in the United States is more depleted at present than it has been at any previous time in ten years. That in itself, Mr. McCarthy said, is sufficient cause for very high retail prices. But the drought in Kansas, Oklahoma and the Southwest has aggravated the situation bad before, till it may now be called alarming.

Sky-High Prices by Midwinter.

The expert buyer for Richard Webber, a butcher with an extensive business in New York, didn't hesitate to say that prices are going sky-high by midwinter. The average price paid by the laborer for beef to-day, he said, is 16 cents a pound. The same cuts will cost 18 cents or more in a few months.

The same authority predicted that the average price of sirloin steaks will creep up 3 cents in as many months, while the average price of porterhouse steaks will advance 4 to 5 cents in the same period.

The corn-killing drought in Kansas and neighboring States has deprived the cattle-raising sections of feed for their stock. Fodder remains, but the corn itself, necessary to fatten the steers for market, will have to be shipped into sections of country naturally grain exporters, at an expense that will preclude the idea of satisfactory profit by cattle raisers at anything near the present prices.

For ten days a steady rush of cattle to the big stock markets of the Middle West has been in progress. The raisers can't afford to hold and feed the cattle. In many instances, cows are being sent to market in such numbers that the generation of calves due next spring will be much less than the average.

Rushed to the Slaughter Houses.

Cattle receipts in the Western markets first rose above the normal when the hot weather killed the pasturage. Carload after carload of steers went to Chicago and Kansas City. The general movement to the slaughter houses is still in progress. In the first three days of the present week 129,000 cattle were received at the Western markets, nearly as many as in the entire week a year ago.

The same condition to a certain extent holds true in the hog market, and receipts have been nearly doubled since the drought.

The general situation is about as bad in the East. Mr. McCarthy said that farmers over a great part of the East are selling cattle just now that they would be holding had the hay crop been up to the standard.

Live stock prices are naturally slumping while the markets are loaded with stock. But in spite of the fact that steers and hogs are costing the packers less than at any time for several months no reduction in the wholesale price of meats is announced, and the housewife has obtained no benefits because of the present abnormal conditions in the markets.

The drought, according to stock men, will result in immense profits for the packers because of their ability to buy now and when the cattle raisers are at a disadvantage and to set prices this winter when there is a scarcity in the cattle receipts.

To The Young Expectant Mother

Women of Experience Advise the Use of Mother's Friend.

There is a certain degree of trepidation in the minds of most women in regard to the subject of motherhood. The longing to possess is often contradicted by the inherent fear of a period of distress.

But there need be no such dread in view of the fact that we have a most noble remedy in what is known as Mother's Friend. This is an external application that has a wonderful influence and control over the muscular tissues of the abdomen. By its daily use the muscles, cords, tendons and ligaments all gently expand without the slightest strain; there is no pain, no nausea, no nervousness; what was dreaded as a severe physical ordeal becomes a calm, serene, joyful anticipation that has its impress such as our foremost teachers of Eugenics are striving to drill into the minds of the present generation.

In almost every community there are women who have used Mother's Friend, and they are the ones that recovered quickly, conserved their health and strength to thus preside over families destined by every rule of physiology and the history of successful men and women to repeat the story of greater achievement.

Mother's Friend is prepared after the formula of a noted family doctor by the Bradfield Regulator Co., 188 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Write them for their instructive book to expectant mothers. You will find Mother's Friend on sale by all drug stores at $1.00 a bottle.

Burglars Get $600 Worth of Jewelry In Home; Rob Store

Burglars broke into the home of J. W. Russell, No. 3 Lafayette Drive, Ansley Park, Saturday night and stole $600 worth of jewelry. The department store of Morris Brothers, No. 137 Decatur street, was entered through the skylight and a large amount of clothing was stolen.

The robbery at the Russell home was discovered about 11 o'clock, when the family returned. The rooms on the upper floor had been ransacked. Entrance had been gained through a window. Among the stolen articles was Mrs. Russell's wedding ring and two fine watches.

In breaking into the Morris store the burglars were compelled to cross the roofs of seven buildings. They gained access to the roof of the first one from the Washington street viaduct.

New Boll Worm Invades Carolina

GREENVILLE, S. C., Aug. 18.—From Dunklin Township, in this county, come alarming reports of the invasion in that section of a small worm which is said to be playing havoc by devouring cotton bolls.

Large fields of cotton, it is said, are infested with the worm, and the farmers are greatly exercised. They are unable to account for the presence of the worms, and they say they are the first of the kind ever seen in this section.

The worms are rapidly spreading over the lower section of the county, and it is feared that unless something is quickly done to stop the ravages of the pest the crop in that section will be seriously damaged.

Underwood Urged to Run for the Senate

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 18.—Friends of Congressman Oscar W. Underwood, leader in the House of Representatives, are urging him to become a candidate for the United States Senate in the elections of next year, to take effect in 1915.

Even with the positive announcement that he is going to run to the very last, made by Congressman Richmond Pearson Hobson, who has been in the canvass for some time and is still running, it is believed that it would come to pass that Congressman Underwood would have no opposition.

Broker Tries Suicide; Saved by Pulmotor

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Harry Lattimer Bloodgood, broker and society man, attempted suicide by gas, but was saved from death by the use of a pulmotor.

Bloodgood was found in his home with his face covered by a large tin funnel attached to the end of a tube through which gas was flowing. He was seemingly lifeless. The pulmotor soon revived him.

Bloodgood is a brother-in-law of Clara Bloodgood, the actress who killed herself in Baltimore a few years ago.

Mount Zion Plans Big Camp Meeting

GRIFFIN, Aug. 18.—A coming event for the next week that is attracting unusual attention is the opening of the annual camp meeting at the old historic Mount Zion camp ground next Friday night.

Camp meetings have been held annually at that camp ground since 1832, excepting the years of the Civil War.

U. S. Gunboat Nearly Wrecked by Typhoon

SHANGHAI, Aug. 18.—The United States gunboat Wilmington had a narrow escape from destruction in the harbor here to-day during a typhoon. Her anchor began to drag and was going toward shore when rescued by a powerful tug.

The storm did great damage to shipping.

Negro Slayer Taken To Macon for Safety

MACON, Aug. 18.—Doc Mathis, a negro charged with having shot and killed R. L. Jossey, a prominent Lee County planter, was brought to Macon yesterday and lodged in the Bibb County jail for safekeeping. Threats of lynching had been made.

He was trapped at his home at Williamsburg, and fired at the arresting officers several times while they were approaching his house.

OBITUARY

The funeral of William F. Robinson, who died at a hospital Sunday, will be held at the residence, 339 Greenwich avenue, West End, at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon. He was 56 years old, and is survived by his wife, five sons, R. L., W. B., C. H., Angus and John Robinson; four daughters, Mrs. J. J. Egmomoser, Misses Mae and Lizzie Robinson, of Atlanta, and Mrs. E. C. Henderson, of Jacksonville, Fla.; his mother, Mrs. Martha A. Powell, of Central, S. C.; one sister, Mrs. F. B. Morgan, of the same place, and two brothers, T. A. Robinson, of Winslow, Ala., and F. Robinson, of Atlanta. Interment at Westview.

J. S. Brooks, a veteran of the Civil War, died at the Soldiers' Home Sunday. He was 77 years old. The body is at Poole's chapel, pending funeral arrangements.

The funeral of Beulah B. Jones, infant child of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Jones, who died Saturday, was held from the home Monday morning. Interment at Hollywood.

Benjamin E. Dearybury, 2-year-old infant of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Dearybury, 72 Spring street, died at a private sanitarium at 2 o'clock Monday morning. The body was removed to Poole's and funeral announcement will be made later.

WIVES OF DIGGS AND CAMINETTI WILL TESTIFY

Women To Be Asked to Tell of Their Knowledge of Husbands' Elopement

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 18.—Interest in the trial of Maury I. Diggs on the charge of violating the white slave law will be given fresh impetus to-morrow, when Mrs. Diggs and the wife of F. Drew Caminetti will take the stand as witnesses for the defense.

Mrs. Diggs, who is a handsome, dark-eyed woman, was expected to be called as the first witness. Last Friday she appeared in court with her young daughter, Evelyn, and was one of the most observed persons that sat facing the bench presided over by Federal Judge Van Fleet.

Mrs. Diggs and Mrs. Caminetti will be asked by the defense to tell of their knowledge of the relations between their husbands and Marsha Warrington and Lola Norris.

It is the contention of the attorneys for the defense that one of the reasons for the flight of Diggs and Caminetti to Reno with the two girls was that they believed their wives were about to have them prosecuted by the officials of the juvenile court of Sacramento. It is maintained by the defense that Mrs. Caminetti told her husband that she had complained to Judge Hughes, of the juvenile court of Sacramento, about Diggs and Caminetti in an effort to induce them to sever their relations with Miss Warrington and Miss Norris.

The Government contends that Diggs and Caminetti were reckless debauchers who had decided to go to Reno to desert their wives and induce the girls to lead immoral lives, in violation of the Mann act.

Promoter in Jail, Oil Wells Are Idle

GADSDEN, Aug. 18.—The conviction of E. C. Drew, the Fort Payne oil well promoter, will, it is believed, bring to a close the drilling for oil in DeKalb County.

Nobody appeared to have much faith in oil being found there except Drew. With five years in the penitentiary confronting him, Drew still contends that he will continue his drilling and that eventually he will find oil. But, no matter whether oil is found or not, Drew is held guilty of using the mails to defraud, first because the company in which he sought to sell stock was not regularly organized and second because he applied the money to other purposes than that for which it was intended.

Patten, Again in Pit, Cleans Up $500,000

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—James A. Patten, whose deals in grain and cotton in the last decade have attracted world-wide attention, is once more the central figure in a speculation that is causing the corn pit on the Board of Trade to boil with excitement.

Mr. Patten started to buy corn three weeks ago, when the first reports that hot weather and drought were damaging the crop began to come in. His paper profits at the present time are said to be at least $500,000.

'Cattle Queen' Freed Leases All 'Movies'

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS, COLO., Aug. 18.—In celebration of her acquittal on the charge of "rustling" cattle Anna Bernard, known as the "Cattle Queen," leased all the moving picture houses in the town for the night and treated her friends to screened thrills.

FAMOUS STARS NEW TO SOUTH BOOKED HERE

Manager George of the Atlanta Announces List—Season Opens With Musical Show Sept. 3.

The first harbinger of the new theatrical season has reached Atlanta in the person of Homer C. George, manager of the Atlanta Theater. Returning from his vacation, he stopped by the New York office of Klaw & Erlanger and crowded his grip with news of coming shows. The Shuberts and the Frohmans will be well represented.

The attractive playhouse will open with a predominance of musical shows as usual. According to Mr. George, the first breaths of fall that come with September nights are not sufficiently bracing for anything "heavy," and the first productions will be bright and breezy.

"Mary's Lamb" will be the opener, September 3. "Little Miss Fix-It," "who" caused much talk in New York, will be the second, and "The Merry Countess," one of the big hits of the Shuberts, will come third. An early big attraction will be Otis Harlan in a Savage production of "Little Boy Blue."

Favorites Are Coming.

In the galaxy of stars who are to perform to Atlanta audiences Mr. George points out a number of new ones to the South. Of course many favorites will return. To the trained theatergoer no announcement could produce a keener thrill than the statement that Rose Stahl, who delighted so many in the "Chorus Lady," will come early in her new play, "Maggie Pepper," and that William Faversham will appear in an all-star cast of "Julius Caesar."

But to take them as they come—Mr. George announces the tentative program in this wise:

Miss Annie Russell, three nights, the minstrels of Al G. Field, followed a month later by a reunion of the Dockstader and Primrose shows. In [illegible] come [illegible] George Evans and then Nell O'Brien.

Big Scenic Plays.

May Irwin is coming in November with her big Cohan Theater success of last season. Robert Hilliard will appear as Detective William J. Burns in a thrilling drama. Early in December Klaw & Erlanger will present that wonderful scenic play, "Ben Hur," for a week.

"Fine Feathers," a new Eugene Walters success, will be here in December, as well as the memorial players from Stratford-on-Avon, producing the drama as it was in Shakespeare's time.

And fascinating Mme. Nazimova is coming in "Bella Donna," and the wonderful Mme. Pavlowa, the Russian dancer, with "her special permit from the Czar" to leave that country.

Henry Miller is coming in "The Rainbow" and Otis Skinner in "Kismet," said to be his greatest success.

And one of the most important of all the announcements is that the unusual play, "Damaged Goods," by the famous French dramatist, Brieux, will be shown. It probably created more comment than any play presented in New York last season, its first production being semi-private, under the auspices of a medical organization.

Other popular plays booked are: "Within the Law," "Ready Money," "Romance," "Peg o' My Heart," "The Conspiracy," "Little Women," "Blue Bird," "The Girl of My Dreams," "Broadway Jones," "The Governor's Lady," "Stop Thief," and others.

Adrianople Guarded By 400,000 Moslems

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 18.—War Minister Enver Bey is hurling an army of 400,000 men into Thrace to defend Adrianople against the Bulgarians. Representatives of the Porte to-day declared that Europe's demand that Turkey give up Adrianople to the Bulgarians will be rejected.

Turkish soldiers have obtained the port of Dedeaghatch.

PLAN ALL-DAY SINGING.

VIDALIA, Aug. 18.—The Toombs County singing convention leaders are making plans for a big all-day singing scheduled for the fifth Sunday in August.

In your hand you hold a five-cent piece.

Right at the grocer's hand is a moisture-proof package of Uneeda Biscuit. He hands you the package—you hand him the coin. A trifling transaction?

No! A remarkable one—for you have spent the smallest sum that will buy a package of good food; and the grocer has sold you the most nutritious food made from flour—as clean and crisp and delicious as it was when it came from the oven.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

Drawing for Last 2,000,000 Acres U.S. Lands Is Announced

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Two million acres, the best wheat land on earth, according to James J. Hill, will be distributed to settlers by the United States September 23 at a public drawing by number at Glasgow, Mont. The land consists of a tract 80 by 40 miles and is known as the Fort Peck Reservation. It is the last Government reservation to be divided by Uncle Sam.

The tract borders on the Missouri River and formerly was the property of the Sioux Indians. Of the acreage to be allotted 487,000 acres are agricultural land for which applicants will be charged a nominal price of from $5 to $7 an acre, and 788,000 acres is in grazing land, for which $2.50 to $3 will be charged. Applications for the land will be received from September 1 to 20.

Fear Kept Man Off Cars All His 83 Years

LIZTON, IND., Aug. 18.—William Northcutt, aged 85, is dead, after spending his whole life without ever once riding in a railroad train, automobile or street car.

He claimed they were too fast and too dangerous.

3 NEGROES SLAIN; 20 OTHERS JAILED

With three negroes killed and a fourth seriously wounded in free-for-all cutting scrapes Sunday, twenty negroes are under arrest at police headquarters, two charged with murder and the remainder charged with fighting, frequenting blind tigers, and a host of misdemeanors.

The two against whom the charge of murder has been placed are B. C. Smith and Ed Smith, alias Ed Campbell. The third murderer, who is still at large, is said by the police to be Phoney Johnson, a negro desperado with a long police record.

Ed Smith, while resisting arrest after shooting Peter Jackson at 72 James street, was shot in the hand by Officer Palmer. B. C. Smith was captured after a hard chase by Officers Davis and Fielder and Louis Castro.

Most of the trouble started in blind tigers throughout the city. Johnson, after getting drunk, went to the home of Munch Harris, 282 Butler street, and stabbed him to death. B. C. Smith killed John Henry Wilkerson at 80 Decatur street about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and half an hour later Peter Jackson was shot by Ed Smith.

SLIT SKIRT HEALTH AID, SAYS EXPERT

DENVER, Aug. 18.—Wilbur F. Cannon, former pure food commissioner, has rushed to the defense of the X-ray and slit skirts with these five reasons:

The X-ray and slit skirts permit circulation of air about the body.

The absence of many underskirts relieves the strain on the hips and prevents kidney trouble.

Absence of the usual amount of clothes makes frequent bathing necessary and frequent bathing opens the pores and makes the bath quite healthy.

Absence of many clothes makes the body movement freer, thus saving energy.

There is less labor required in the care of clothes, such as washing, ironing and mending.

VOTE ON COURT CHANGE.

JACKSON, Aug. 18.—The City Court of Jackson was amended by the last session of the general assembly, subject to a ratification of the people. The matter will be voted on September 3. As amended, the Solicitor will receive a salary instead of fees.

BIG CAMP MEETING CLOSES.

JACKSON, Aug. 18.—Sunday night marked the closing session of the Indian Springs Holiness camp meeting, and what was generally declared to have been the most successful meeting in the history of the association.

Lungs Were Affected; Now in Good Health

The makers of Eckman's Alterative, a remedy for Throat and Lung Troubles, do not claim that it will restore every one to perfect health, but so many have voluntarily testified it saved their lives that all who have this dread disease should investigate and try it. It should stop the night sweats, reduce fever, promote appetite and in very many cases prolong life. Read what it accomplished in this case:

Catherine Ave. and Ascot Place,
Queen's Court, L. I.

"Gentlemen: In the year 1908 I was taken with a heavy cold and a nasty cough and went to several doctors, including a specialist. Their medicines failed. My brother then recommended Eckman's Alterative to me very highly. It is now nearly two years since I first took it. I am now well and I dare say that I would have been buried long ago if it had not been for Eckman's Alterative. I wish to thank you for the Godsend to me. Wherever I go I highly recommend the Alterative, as I owe my life to it."

(Affidavit) JOS. J. TROESCHER.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all of Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

MAKE MONEY WITH POULTRY.
AMERICAN POULTRY is a magazine devoted entirely to helping earnest men and women make a financial success of poultry raising. Its staff of writers is composed entirely of those who have made a practical, instead of theoretical, success of poultry farming, and who are glad to pass on the results of their hard-earned experience to AMERICAN POULTRY readers. There are many pitfalls in the path of the novice which may be entirely avoided by those who will follow the teachings set forth in this magazine. It fully explains how to make a start, how to construct houses, coops, and other devices how to get a large egg yield, how to cure and prevent disease, how to exhibit, how to get the top price for eggs, how to use incubators and hundreds of other points which every one wishes to know. It explains the famous secret system through which poultrymen have become rich and afterwards solid for hundreds of dollars. AMERICAN POULTRY is a large, handsomely illustrated, monthly journal, well printed on the paper, and should be found on file in the home of every poultry lover. No beginner in the poultry business should think of being without it. It will save him many times the small subscription price. The advanced poultryman will also find it a great value; the articles being varied in their scope.

SPECIAL OFFER. The regular price of AMERICAN POULTRY is 50c per year, but in order to introduce it to several thousand new readers, we will, for a short time, give a large 200-page poultry book, which is a complete guide in the poultry business, absolutely free to every one sending 50c for a yearly subscription or $1.00 for a two-year subscription to AMERICAN POULTRY. A trial six months' subscription (without book) will be sent for 25c. Never has so much been offered for so small a sum. Advantage of this offer should be taken at once.

SEEDS AND POULTRY SUPPLIES.
BOTH PHONES 2568.

IF OUR CUSTOMERS living on the North and South Sides place their orders before 9 o'clock and the ones in Inman Park and West End before 2 o'clock, they will be delivered the same day the orders are given. We are trying to give the very best service possible and if our customers will bear in mind the hours that our deliveries leave the store it will insure prompt service.

IT IS ABSOLUTELY necessary for chickens to have green food during the winter. This can easily be supplied if you will plant out a small patch of rye and rape. They both grow very rapidly and will furnish an abundance of green food all the winter. Now is the time to plant.

THIS IS THE MOULTING SEASON, and that means that the hens should be fed a good tonic. Pratt's Poultry Regulator and Conkey's Laying Tonic insure a quick and complete moult, and that means plenty of eggs during the fall and winter, when they bring the high prices; 25c, 50c and $1 package.

Medium-Sized Acreage Tracts

ALL of us know the profit that is usually made from acreage.

It is almost a conceded fact that if a person owns good acreage, he has a sure profit in it sooner or later. When we think of acreage propositions, we think of lots of land, and naturally lots of money, because the usual acreage transaction involves a great deal of money. The demand for good, close-in acreage for subdivision purposes is increasing every day. A trip to the outskirts of the city in any direction you choose to take will convince you of this fact. We are going to offer a tract of about 100 acres, between Decatur and East Lake, which we have cut up into five, ten and fifteen-acre tracts. The price and terms on these tracts make it possible for almost anybody to handle them.

TEXAS WEATHER PUZZLES TRADE

Ring Unloads Cotton Freely on Lone Star State Rains—Big Interests Buy on Hot Weather.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Trading was extremely active at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 14 to 17 points lower than the closing quotations of Saturday. Reports were coming from private houses that light rains had occurred throughout Oklahoma and Texas late Saturday. This, coupled with extremely weak cables, was responsible for the lower opening. The market was without suport at the decline. The ring was apparently long and were throwing cotton over from the general selling that was going on. Wall Street and many of the large spot houses were also noticeable sellers. Liverpool was aid to be down on the rains reported from Texas and was sold from this side. After half an hour of trading prices showed further recessions of 2 to 5 points from the final range.

During the forenoon the market developed a better tone through rather free buying from certain strong interests, based on special telegraphic reports on Texas rainfull and weather conditions, which was considered rather bullish. Price movement ranged a few points better than the opening range.

Strong sources fought the market on the high temperatures in Oklahoma and Texas and wires received reporting considerable damage by the continued drouth and extremely hot weather. The feeling altogether is far more bullish than it hasbe en for sometime past. Memphis is said to have been a good buyer in this market to-day also a good many other Southern points. Those inclined to the bear side are of the opinion that should good value come over the west that we may expect a considerable decline. Prices, however, were held within a narrow range during the afternoon session.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 10 to 19 points from the final quotations of Saturday.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: August, 11.59; October, 11.07; December, 10.99; January, 10.59; March, 10.96.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 18.—Werther developments over Sunday were favorable, as there was precipitation in combination with cooler weather over the greater part of the western States, while rainfall was light in the eastern half of the belt. Indications are for further precipitation, particularly in the southern and western half of Texas. It will get cooler generally over the northern half of the belt. Weekly crop reports from Alabama are very good; all say complaints are very few; plant has maintained its vigor is well fruited, no unusual shedding, free movement expected about the first week in September.

Liverpool came in about 5 points lower than due. Spots 6 points lower; sales 7,000 bales. Cables continue to report slack business. First trades here were at a decline of about 16 points, encountering very good demand near 11c, which steadied prices. A disposition seems to prevail to reduce short lines on the opinion that relief in the west comes too late to affect Bureau returns, and that it might be safer to wait around 11c for that publication and the storm period.

RECENT SELLERS BUYING STOCKS

Westinghouse Electric Early Feature—Market Shows Considerable Strength.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Westinghouse showed the best gain at the opening of the stock market to-day, with an advance of 1⅞. After opening at 72½, this issue climbed to 74⅛. The tone was strong at the beginning and most stocks made gains. Among them were Amalgamated Copper ⅞, United States Steel common ½, Union Pacific ⅝, Southern Pacific ½, Missouri Pacific ⅜, Canadian Pacific ⅜, Erie ½, St Paul ½, Chino Copper ½, American Telegraph and Telephone ⅛, American Can ¼.

Reading began at 108⅞ for a slight gain, but later receded. New York, New Haven and Hartford, which closed Saturday at par, opened at 99⅜.

The curb market was steady.

Americans in London held above New York parity. Canadian Pacific in London gained on strength of reports that storms in the Northwest had not done so much damage to railroad property as first reported.

What Do You Suppose Interests Them on Board the Train?

National Affairs, Great Discoveries, News of Historical Inportance? Not at All—Something Simpler.

"It hath not yet been shown what we shall be" is a fine sounding sentence, descriptive of our future greatness. "It hath not yet been shown what petty, little human mice we are" is a sentence that would describe pretty well the human race of to-day.

You have only to observe the mental occupations of your fellow passengers on Pullman coaches running between Atlanta and New York to be convinced of the vacuity of human minds, their absence of thought, their aversion to study.

Here are men traveling nearly a thousand miles, propelled by force buried in the coal several million years ago.

They travel in rooms lighted with the electric power that flashes in the clouds, on rails and wheels of steel.

Their journey is the result of millions of years of the earth's development, and hundreds of thousands of years in the development of human intelligence, AND THEIR MINDS ARE ON GAMES OR AMUSEMENT OR FOLLIES OF ONE KIND OR ANOTHER.

You see solemn old men and distressed old women reading—novels usually vapid or vulgar—when they are not playing bridge or solitaire.

If you see someone interested in a newspaper, what do you suppose most attracts his attention? Let us look over his shoulder and see.

No, gentle or fierce reader, he has not been reading important news of the Balkan war.

He hasn't wondered whether the United States would spread as it should all the way down this continent and stop just south of the Panama canal—for the present.

He hasn't been reading bulletins of scientific discovery, or news of importance in the world and its history.

He has been reading the important fact that Sommers "pitched" and Graham "caught" for Chattanooga, while Dent "pitched" and Dunn "caught" for Atlanta.

He has been reading the numbers of runs, hits and errors—if you know what they are—and finding out who won in various games of baseball throughout the country.

The human race has not grown up to its possibilities.

It is a race of children, easily tired, incapable of concentrated, earnest thought.

It is a race of men who work like beavers, or ants, or prairie dogs through the day, each in his own little direction, indifferent to the others, and who unite in intellect in the evening, not upon any subject worthy of the brain of a man, but in intense interest in some poor little make-believe game.

These men, "heirs of all the ages," have their magnificent minds concentrated on a childish game that could have been played and was played in another form by the savages that lived here before language was perfected.

Many a weary century must pass before the human mice of the present day will be really MEN.

Woes of "Affinity" Earle's Soul-Mates.

The folly of certain "advanced ideas" on marriage, that rise, phoenix-like, from the ashes of dead loves, comes with fresh proof in a London cable telling of a suit for divorce by the third wife of Ferdinand Pinney Earle, the New York artist, who has been in the limelight for years because of his love affairs.

The unsophisticated daughter of an English architect, Mrs. Earle No. 3—"the loveliest, sweetest, dearest of them all"—said she knew nothing of the American "affinity" advocate when she married him, two months after their first meeting. Now the mother of his child, she seeks her freedom on the ground of cruelty. Thus it was with Emilie Fischbacher and Julia Kuttner, both of whom Earle married and later lost.

Advocates of a nondescript affection may conjure up new forms of wedlock as an improvement on the old-fashioned vows, but such theories are like "silly moths that singe their wings and fall into dust." Discord and strife are the invariable accompaniments of defiance of the laws of decency and honor.

It is a fact that monogamic races have made the greatest progress in civilization. It was the monogamic barbarians, the virtuous Saxon vandals, that drove the hardest bargains with the Roman emperors. They preserved their rugged, healthy state from the weakening vices of a decadent age.

Pioneers who have cut the hard granite, hewn the tall trees, conquered the wilderness and forwarded the arts and sciences—who have made America the greatest miracle in the annals of the nations—all have had a wholesome regard for the sanctity of the marriage covenant. They rarely entered lightly into wedlock. Enemies of the free love that feeds on empty promises of a superfine conjugality, they were ever loyal to the lesson of Dana in Galilee.

Artist Earle's marital misfortunes are the common lot of all so-called idealists who set their own opinions against the experiences of the centuries. The religious element of the marriage relation can not be ignored without bringing counter obligations that gall and bind the offenders with worse cords than those that fret the flesh.

PRESBYTERIAN DOCTRINE

Editor Georgian:

Your recent statement, "The Presbyterian teaching of infant damnation seems to us horrible," is a gross misrepresentation, to say the least of it. And it is up to you to quote authorities and prove it, or else retract it. If I knew that you were a Methodist, I would tell you it was John Wesley, and not John Calvin, who once held such a belief. I come of Presbyterian ancestry dating back about two centuries, and claim to know something of the denomination at large. But I have never read or heard of one Presbyterian of any note who so believed and taught.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox Writes on Unfit Mothers

Poverty Does Not Make Them So, as Many Are Rich. Criticism Committees Should Be Established Everywhere.

Written for The Atlanta Georgian

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

"THE unfitness of mothers of dependent children, complained of by 'organized charity' is in my opinion all caused by poverty.

"The Mothers' Pension law recently enacted by the legislatures of eighteen States will, to a great extent, make the unfit mother fit because the pension removes the cause of her unfitness, which is her poverty.

"It is the common observation that the very fine and very fit mother becomes comparatively unfit to take care of her children after a few years of hopeless struggle with poverty.

"The mistake of organized charity is their allowing good mothers of dependent children to be made unfit by the poison of poverty, the poison of hopelessness, the poison of overwork in trying to earn the living for their children at hard work and give proper care to their children at the same time.

"Organized charity contends that a mother should have her children taken away from her because poverty has made her temporarily unfit.

"The real friends of the poor, the advocates of mothers' pensions, believe that the mother should have the cause of her unfitness removed and not her children. HENRY NEIL."

Unfit Mothers Caused by Poverty Open to Doubt.

MOTHERS' pensions now extend from coast to coast.

One can now travel from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean going through mothers' pension States only, starting on the coast of New Jersey and going through Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Utah, Nevada to the coast of California.

Other mothers' pension States are Washington, Oregon, Idaho, South Dakota, Minnesota, Massachusetts, New Hampshire—eighteen in all.

Three cities that have local mothers' pension laws are Kansas City, St. Louis and Milwaukee.

Meantime the statement of Mr. Nell that the unfit mothers are caused by poverty is open to doubt.

Some of the most unfit mothers to be found on earth are women of wealth.

Two little girls on board a large ocean liner were the daughters of a New York banker, and their mother was an educated woman, and their father was a man of parts; yet there were never seen on earth more insufferably disagreeable children than these. They were ill-mannered, impertinent, unkind and ungracious. The chief steward in the dining salon was obliged to rebuke them for their impertinence and their annoying treatment of other passengers.

The children she had should have been taken away from such parents and placed under wise and worthy instructors.

A woman who has been reared with excellent opportunities for culture is the mother of four children. There is no financial strain upon the family, yet the children have never been taught any of the gracious and lovely traits which help to build a worthy character and a pleasing personality.

Every School and Church Should Have a Criticism Committee.

Loud, harsh voices, flat contradictions, continual quarreling and the most disagreeable qualities distinguish this family.

Such parents are certainly unfit to bring up families.

A fund for the erection of a large scientific institution, such as Dr. Elmer Gates has always longed to see established, would be a benefit to the world, an institution where the brain cells of vulgar and disorderly children, as well as the perverted and viciously inclined, could be developed into constructive qualities.

Every school and church in the land ought to have a "criticism committee," such as existed in the Oneida community years ago.

To this committee every person who had a complaint to make of the manners or conduct of another member of the community went, and the committee called the offending person with the complainant, and the whole subject was calmly and thoroughly investigated. And reproof was administered where it belonged, and if it was proven that any personal or selfish or jealous feelings prompted the complainant, he was the one reproved and publicly placed under ban, and made to see how unworthy was his action.

An Institution for Brain Building Would Also Be Good.

Unselfishness was the religious keynote of the society, and had it let sex problems alone it would have been one of the greatest factors for bettering the world which ever existed in America.

If our schools and colleges and churches could adopt this excellent idea of the Oneida community and established the "Criticism committee" and then carry Dr. Elmer Gates' dream of a brain-building institution into realization, the children of the idle rich might stand as good a chance of becoming agreeable and useful citizens as do the children of the poor to-day.

: A DEAD FIRE :

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

WHERE some lean trapper lingered long ago
To make himself secure against the night,
It stays a scar whereon no blade will grow,
Its old, cold ashes sifting to and fro,
Its charred sticks black where once was leaping light.

All green and lovely lies the forest floor
Around this patch of ever-barren soil;
Nearby the pinks and daisies bloom once more
Abundantly as in the years before,
Watching the queer gray serpents writhe and coil.

In all the world of grim and ghostly sights
There is no sight more like to lasting pain,
Suggesting hopeless days and long, sad nights;
It is the ashen wraith of past delights—
It is the heart of one who loved in vain.

REMARKABLE STORY CREATES PROFOUND IMPRESSION ON ALL

From the lips of the man accused of the murder of Mary Phagan, came a remarkable story Monday afternoon.

The spectators in a densely packed courtroom listened with strained interest as Leo Frank told in graphic words of the events of the day which brought the charge of a terrible crime against him.

It is doubtful if a tale so clearly told, so thorough in its detail, so logically presented ever has been related in a Georgia court of justice by a man over whom has hung the accusation of a horrible murder.

His wife smiled affectionately at him when he told of his marriage to her and said with feeling: "My married life has been exceptionally happy; in fact, the happiest period of my life."

His words, dispassionate at first, grew in force as he proceeded, but he seldom departed from his moderate tone of voice. The only exceptions were when he was referring to some particularly vital point.

At on point he adverted to one of the Solicitor's charges that he had not done all the work on Saturday that his lawyers claimed for him. Frank displayed a sheaf of requisitions to the jurors, and said with a trace of heat:

"Notwithstanding any insinuations that may have been made, I—wrote—these—requisitions!"

He brought out the closing words with a startling force he had not displayed before, emphasizing each word with a blow of his hand on the railing in front of the jury box.

At another time he held up a long sample case of vari-colored pencils t othe view of the jury.

Solicitor Dorsey objected to the display of the pencils on the ground that they had not been introduced as evidence.

Frank smiled and said to the jurors:

"I guess you have seen enough of the pencils to perceive there are a great many kinds."

The spectators smiled with him as they saw he had accomplished all he desired.

Here is Frank's story as it was told with its various interruptions:

Mr. Arnold: "Now Mr. Frank, such papers as you want to use you can come down here at any time or from time to time and get them on this table right here.

The Court: "Before you commence your statement I want to read the law. In criminal procedure, the prisoner will have the right to make to the Court and jury such statement in the case as he may deem proper in his defense. It shall not be under oath and shall have such force as the jury shall think right to give it. They may believe it in preference to the sworn testimony in the case. The prisoner shall not be compelled to answer any questions on cross-examination. He should feel free to decline to answer them. Now you can make such statement as you see fit."

The defendant said: "Gentlemen of the jury, in 1884, the 17th day of April, I was born in Terrell, Tex. At the age of three months my parents took me to Brooklyn, N. Y., which became my home until I came South, to Atlanta, to make my home here. I attended the public schools of Brooklyn and prepared for college in Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"In the fall of 1902 I entered Cornell University, where I took the course of mechanical engineering, graduating after four years, in June, 1906. I then accepted a position as draughtsman with the B. F. Sturdevant Company, of Hyde Park, Mass. After remaining with this firm for about six months I returned once more to my home in Brooklyn, where I accepted a position as testing engineer and draughtsman with the National Meter Company of Brooklyn, N. Y.

"I remained with these parties until about the middle of October, 1907, when at the invitation of some citizens of Atlanta, I came South to confer with them with reference to the starting and operation of a pencil factory to be located in Atlanta. After remaining here for about two weeks I returned once more to New York, where I engaged passage and went to Europe. I remained in Europe nine months. During my sojourn abroad I studied the pencil business and looked after the erection and testing of machinery which had been previously traded for.

"In the first part of August, 1908, I returned once more to America, and immediately came South, to Atlanta, which has remained my home ever since. I married in Atlanta an Atlanta girl, Miss Lucille Selig. The major portion of my married life has been spent in the home of my parents-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. E. Selig, at No. 68 East Georgia avenue. My married life has been exceptionally happy, indeed—it has been the happiest days of my life.

"My duties as superintendent of the National Pencil Company were in general as follows: I took charge of the technical and mechanical end of the factory, looking after the processes and seeing that the product was turned out in quality equal to the standard which was set by our competitors. I looked after the installation of new machinery, and the purchasing of any machinery, and in addition I had charge of the office work at the Forsyth street plant, and the lead plant on Bell street.

Looked After the Purchase of Mateials.

"I looked after the purchasing of the raw material.' I saw after the manufacture of pencils and kept up with the market of these materials and when the prices fluctuated so that the purchases could be made to the best possible advantage.

"On Friday, April 25, I arrived at the pencil factory on Forsyth street at about 7 o'clock, my usual time. I immediately started in on my regular routine work, looking over the papers I had laid out the evening before, and attending to any work that needed my special attention that morning.

"At about 9:30 I went over to the office of the general manager and treasurer, Mr. Sigmund Montag, whose office is at Montag Brothers on Nelson street. I stayed over there a short time, and got what papers had arrived in the mail—all the mail of the pencil factory comes over to their office. I got that mail and brought it back to the Forsyth street office. I then separated the mail and continued in my usual routine duties in the office on Forsyth street.

"At about 11 o'clock Mr. Schiff handed me the payroll booy, covering the plants at Forsyth street and Bell street, for me to check over and see if the amounts and extensions were correct. Of course, this work has to be very carefully done, so that the proper amount of money is drawn from the bank. This checking took me until about 12:20 p. m.

Went to Bank To Get Pay Money.

"I then went over to Montag Brothers, took the checks drawn and had them signed by Mr. Sig. Montag, after which I returned to Forsyth street and got the leather bag in which I usually carried the money and the coin from the bank, and got the payroll slip, on which the various demoniations which I desired to have on the payroll were made out, and went, accompanied by Mr. Herbert Schiff, my assistant, to the Atlanta National Bank, where I had the checks cashed.

"Returning to the factory in company with Mr. Schiff, I placed this bag containing the money for the payroll, in the safe and locked it. At this time my wife called for me and in her company and that of Mr. Schiff I went over to the car, and went with my wife home to lunch. After lunch I returned to the factory and took a tour for about an hour through the factory, after which I then assisted Mr. Schiff in checking over the amounts on the pay envelopes, checking the money against the duplicate slips that we had got from the bank to see that the correct amount had been given us, and helped Mr. Schiff in checking over the money and in filling the envelopes.

"This took us approximately until a quarter to six to fill the envelopes and seal them, and place them in a box we have there with two hundred pigeon holes in it, that we call our payoff box.

Paid One Mon Check in Cash .

"While I was so occupied with Mr. Schiff in filling the envelopes, a young man named Wright who had helped us out in the office as clerk during the past week came in and I paid him in cash, as Mr. Schiff had neglected to put his name on the payroll. I just made out a ticket and put it in the payroll box, not the cash box, and continued in the office with Mr. Schiff, taking all the envelopes that were due the help that had worked from April 18 to April 24, inclusive, to pay them through the window in one side of the office. There is a little window built in the hall. I had stayed in my office, checking over the amount of money which had been left there.

"This amount should have been equal to the amount loaned out in advance to the help. I took a ticket out when we were filling the envelopes in checking this amount there. As near as I recollect it, it was about $15.

"I noticed a shortage of about $1.20, or something over a dollar, at any rate, and I kept checking to see if I could find the shortage shortage in the various deductions which had been made. I could not locate it that evening, after the help had been paid off, during which time I stayed in my office. No one came into my office and asked me for the envelope or for an envelope of any other party.

"After the paying off of the help had taken place, Mr. Schiff returned and handed me the envelopes which were left over, bound with an elastic band, and I put them in the cash compartment, which is different from the the cash box, the key to which is kept in my cash box, and placed them in the safe, and Mr. Schiff placed the amounts in the box, and placed the box in the safe and left them.

Tells of Puting Slips in Time Clock.

"I placed in the time clock slips which were to be used the next day. I took the two time slips dated April 25, which had been used by the help on Friday, April 25—these are the two that I put in the slot" exhibiting the same to the jury.)

Mr. Dorsey thereupon vigorously protested that Mr. Frank should be allowed to exhibit these slips to the jury, because they had not been offered in evidence, on the grounds that they were immaterial and irrelevant, and on the second ground that he could not put them in evidence on his own statement.

Counsel for the defendant insisted, however, that they should be allowed to offer these slips in evidence, as they had been testified to by Mr. Darley and others. The testimony, however, was not produced, and Judge Roan ruled that Mr. Frank might make any statement concerning the same, but that he would withhold his ruling until further investigation. Mr. Frank thereupon proceeded to explain to the jury.

"Gentlemen, as I was saying, these two slips that have April 26, 1913, written at the bottom are the two slips I put in the clock on the evening of Friday, April 25, to be used on the day following, which, of course, was April 26.

"I neglected to mention also, in going over my duties at the factory, that Mr. Darley was superintendent of labor and manufacture, and it fell to his duty to engage the help and distribute the help throughout the plant, and to discharge the help in case it was necessary. It was also due to him whether the wages were raised or not. In other words, he was the man that came directly in contact with the help. Moreover, he saw that the goods progressed through the plant without stopping, speedily and economically for their manufacture.

'On Friday evening I got home at about 6:30, had my supper, washed up, and with my wife played a game of auction bridge at a friend's home in the evening. My wife and I returned home and retired about 11 o'clock.

"On Saturday, April 26, I rose between 7 and 7:30 and liesurely washed and dressed and ate my breakfast, and caught a Washington Street or Georgia Avenue car. I don't really remember which, at the corner of Washington and Georgia avenue, and arrived at the factory, Forsyth street plant, at about 8:20.

"Upon my arrival at the factory I found Mr. Holloway, the day watchman, at his usual place, and I greeted him in my usual way, and found Alonzo Mann, the office boy, in the office.

"I took off my coat and hat and opened my desk and opened the safe, and removed the various

FRANK LOOKS STRAIGHT AT JURY AND TELLS STORY DELIBERATELY

During his statement, Frank looked straight into the faces of the jurymen and talked very distinctly and deliberately. His voice was not very strong and the deputies had to rap frequently to keep down the noise.

LATEST NEWS

SEATTLE, WASH., Aug. 18.—Fifty persons are reported to have been drowned off the southwestern Alaskan coast near Juneau, where the Pacific Coast Steamship Company's steamer, State of California, was wrecked, according to news received here to-day. That steamer sailed from Seattle August 13. There were more than 80 passengers and a crew of 60 on board.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 18.—Governor Sulzer was the only member of the Board of Trustees of Public Buildings present at a meeting called to-day. Martin H. Glynn and Speaker A. E. Smith, of the Assembly, were absent. Mr. Sulzer proceeded with the business alone. State Architect Pilcher read the bids for the new wing for the capitol to replace the part burned.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—Secretary of State Byran to-day denied a report that he had decided to leave the lecture platform because of unfavorable criticisms and public opinion. The Secretary said he expected to resume the lecture platform as soon as he found it possible to start on a vacation.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 18.—Despite Washington dispatches to the contrary members of the Mexican government asserted today that President Wilson's note brought here by Special Envoy John Lind had not officially been laid before President Huerta. It was tacitly admitted that the note is in posession of the government and that it will have the formal consideration of President Huerty within twenty-four hours.

LOCALS LEAD BARONS IN FIFTH

Hargrove and Price Hurl First Game of Series; Crackers Score in First.

PONCE DE LEON BALL PARK, Aug. 13.—Billy Smith's Crackers and the Barons met here this afternoon in the first game of their series. Hardgrove was Molesworth's selection to take the mound for the visitors, while Gilbert Price was on the hurling hill for the home talent.

Bibby Gilks, the Cleveland scout was at the game. It was rumored that he was looking over Harry Welchonce, who has not been grabbed up by any of the major league clubs.

FIRST INNING.

Marcan hoisted a high fly to Manush. Messenger ballooned to Welchonce. McBride waited for four wide ones and trotted to the initial sack. Kniseley was also awarded free transportation to Station One. Kniseley was caught off first. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Agler popped up an easy fly to Marcan. Manush slammed a one-timer to right. Marcan and Carroll disposed of Welchonce. Manush ambled to second on the out. Smith drew four wide ones. Bisland smashed a screaming single to left and Manush raced over the counting station. Holland lined to McBride. TWO HITS, ONE RUN.

SECOND INNING.

Mayer found one to his liking and pounded a single to left. Mayer was caught asleep off first, Chapman to Agler. Holland scooped up McDonald's grounder and threw him out at first. Ellam was disposed of over the strike-out route. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

Calvo flied to McBride. Chapman walked. Price flied to Kniseley. Agler singled to left. Manush popped to Ellam. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

THIRD INNING.

Carroll flied to Calvo. Hardgrove walked. Marcan walked. Messenger hit into a double play, Smith to Bisland to Agler. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Welchonce out, Marcan to Carroll. Smith singled to left. Bisland out, Ellam to Carroll. Holland flied to McBride. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

FOURTH INNING.

McBride out, Bisland to Agler. Kniseley popped to Agler. Mayer out, Bisland to Agler. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Calvo out, Marcan to Carroll. Chapman out, Ellam to Carroll. Price out, Marcan to Carroll. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

FIFTH INNING.

McDonald walked. Ellam grounded to Smith and on his error was safe. Carroll bunted to Price, who threw wild to first and all hands were safe. Hardgrove fanned. Marcan lined to Calvo. Smith made a dandy running catch of Messenger's short fly in centerfield. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Agler doubled to left. Agler pilfered third. Manush singled to right and Agler tallied. Welchonce in an attempt to sacrifice popped to McDonald and Mahush was doubled off first. Smith walked and stole second. On a passed ball Smith took third. Bisland fanned. TWO HITS, ONE RUN.

SIXTH INNING.

McBride lined to Smith. Kniseley singled to left. Mayer forced Kniseley at second, Price to Smith. McDonald walked. On a wild pitch both runners advanced. Ellam grounded out to Price unassisted. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

Holland walked. Calvo sacrificed, Mayer to Carroll. Chapman lined to Marcan and Holland was doubled off second. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

SEVENTH INNING.

Carroll beat out a grounder to Price. Hardgrove forced Carroll at second, Chapman to Bisland. On a short passed ball Hardgrove went to second. Agler made a fine running catch of Marcan's foul. Messenger out, Bisland to Agler. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

Price fanned. Agler singled to left. Manush beat out a hit to Ellam. When Ellam threw wild to second to catch Agler, Joe raced to third. Welchonce laced a triple to right scoring Agler and Manush. Smith singled to center and Welchonce registered. Bisland singled to left and Smith took second. Holland flied to McBride. Calvo flied to Kniseley. FIVE HITS, THREE RUNS.

For remainder of detail see red type.

BIG SWEET POTATO YIELD.

VILALIA, Aug. 18.—The Toombs County soil and climate are ideal for sweet potatoes was clearly demonstrated by Farmer Joe Todd, who has just disposed of his experimental acre of potatoes at $1.25 per bushel, which price nets him about $187.50 on the acre.

LEO M. FRANK AS HE TOLD HIS STORY ON WITNESS STAND

Frank appeared perfectly calm and collected as he went to the witness chair in his own behalf.

He apparently welcomed the opportunity to tell of the famous crime from his viewpoint.

The accused man urged his lawyers to let the Solicitor and his aides cross-question him freely.

books and files and wire trays containing the various imporant papers which were placed there the evening before and distributing them in their proper places about the office. I then went out to the shipping room and conversed a few minutes with Mr. Irby, who was at that time shipping clerk, about the work he was going to do that morning.

"According to my recollection, we did no shipping that day, owing to the fact that the freight offices were not receiving any shipments, due to the fact that it was a holiday.

"I returned to my office and looked through the papers and sorted out those which I was going to take over on my usual trip to the general manager's office that morning.

"I then turned to the invoice covering shipments which were made by the pencil factory on Thursday, April 24, and which were typewritten on Friday, April 25, by Miss Eubanks, who was the stenographer who stayed at my office. She had hurried through with the office work on the day previous, so that she could go home and spend the holiday in the country where she lived. But I didn't get to check over the invoices on the shipments on Friday, due to the fact that Mr. Schiff and myself were completely occupied the entire day. So we left the factory with the payroll. So that naturally, these invoices covering shipments which were made on April 24, ought to have been sent to the customers, and I got right to work checking them.

Shows Invoices to Jury First Time.

"Now I have these invoices here (taking up the papers and exhibiting them to the jury). These papers have not been exhibited to you before, but I will explain explan them. You have seen some similar to these.

"Of all the mathematical work in the office of a pencil factory, this very operation, this very piece of work that I have now before me is the most important. It is the invoices covering shipments and is sent to the customer, and it is very important that the prices are correct, that the amount of goods shipped agrees with the amount which is on the invoices, that the terms are correct, and that the price is correct. Also, in some cases, ther were freight deductions, all of which has to be very carefully checked over and looked into, because I know of nothing else that exasperates a customer more than to receive invoices which are incorrect.

"Now, with reference to the work I did on these orders—that is not such an easy job as you might be led to believe. Here are initials. They represent the salesman who took the order. Sometimes I have to go through a world of papers to find out to whom to credit these orders.

"I notice that one of the orders to R. B. Kindele calls for a specialty. That has to be carefully noted and recorded. One column represents the shipping point, another the date, etc.

"The next step is to fill in the orders on this sheet. On this sheet I must separate the orders into price groups. Evidently no work has been done on this sheet since he went away. The reason this is done —in the pencil business as in all manufacturing businesses—it is advantageous to sell as much of the high-proiced goods as possible.

"This sheet is the only means of telling how much of the various goods we are selling. It is the barometer of our business and requires most careful work.

Declares He Wrote Financial Sheet.

"After I have finished that work I have had to do this, and notwithstanding any i nsinuations that have been made, I wrote these requisitions."

Frank read the namé on each requisition, which were the same as the names on the orders.

"Now that is all my handwriting, except what was written at a subsequent date to April 26."

Frank went back to the stand. He was handed a glass of water as he resumed his seat, but declined it.

"Miss Hall left my office" he continued, "on her way home at this time. There were then in the building Arthur White, Harry Denham and Mrs. White. It must have been from ten to fifteen minutes after that this little girl whom I afterwards found to be Mary Phagan came in. She asked asked for her pay. I got my cash box, referred to the number and gave her the envelope.

"As she went out, she stopped near my outer office door and said:

"'Has the metal come?'

Sound of Voice Made Little Impression.

"The safe door was open and I could not see her, but I answered 'No.' The last I heard was the sound of her footsteps going down the hall. But a few moments after she asked me, I had the impression of a voice saying something, but it made no impression on me.

"The little girl had hardly left the office when Lemmie Quinn came in. He said something to me about working on a holiday and went out. A few minutes before 1 o'clock, I called up my wife and told her I was coming to lunch at 1:15. I then went upstairs to where Denham and White were working and found they had a bit of the floor taken up and were sawing.

"I explained to them that I was going to lunch and would lock the door when I left. Mrs. White left at this time. Some lady said that at 12:35 o'clock she found me in front of the safe. It is barely possible that she did. I don't recall her being there. Her memory probably is fresher than mine on this point.

'When I went up stairs I asked Mr. White if his wife was going to stay there with him. She said no, that she would go. She left and then I got my hat and coat and left, looking the outer door.

"Now, gentlemen, to the best of my recollection from the time the whistle blew until I went upstairs to see Mr. White, I did not stir out of my office. I went on home.

"I called up my brother-in-law, Mr. Ursenbach, to tell him I was unable to keep the engagement to go to the ball game. The cook answered the phone.

"My wife and mother-in-law were going to the opera. My father-in-law and I ate lunch. He went into the backyard while I lit a cigarette and lay down for a moment.

"I left and while passing the home of Mrs. Wolfsheimer, saw Mrs. Michael on the porch. I went in to see her and saw Mrs. Wolfsheimer, Mr. Loeb and others.

Watched Parade When Street Cars Stopped.

"To catch the next car I ran down to Glenn street. On the car I met my wife's cousin, Mr. Loeb. The car was blocked at the corner of Washington and Hunter streets. I walked up to Whitehall street and stood there possibly for fifteen minutes watching the Memorial Day parade.

"As I walked down Whitehall street I met Miss Rebecca Carson. This was probably 3:10 or 3:15 o'clock. I greeted her and walked on. I stopped at Jacobs' Pharmacy and walked on. I went from there to the factory.

"When I reached there I went upstairs and let the boys know I had returned. A minute later, I returned to my office and started to work on the financial sheet.

"In a few minutes the clock bell rang and Arthur White came into the office to borrow two dollars. It was while I was at work on the sheet at probably 4 o'clock that I went to the toilet.

"As I returned toward the office, I noticed Newt Lee coming toward me from the head of the stairs. I told him he could go on off but to be sure and be back at 6 o'clock. I told him I was very sorry I could not let him know about the half holiday but that he was at liberty to enjoy himself as he saw fit, but that he must not fail to return at 6 o'clock.

"The first night that Newt Lee came to work at the factory, I took him over the building, and stressed the fact that he must go into the basement, especially the dust bin, every half hour.

"I told him it would be part of his duties to watch the back door. He was to make a complete tour every half hour and punch the clock.

"Now, I will return to the work of the financial sheet. This sheet contains the cost o fall the pencils made that week. There are no names but this sample case will show you."

Evidence Excluded But Jury Sees It.

Frank unfolded a sample case.

Dorsey: "We object to this being used as evidence."

Judge Roan: "I sustain you."

Frank placed the sample case to one side.

"Well," he said, "you got a sufficient glance at those pencils to see there were a great many."

"In making up this sheet it was necessary to go through the list of all that were packed. Specials, of course, have to be figured separately.

"For instance, there is a special 60-60-x pencil known as 'Crackerjack.' Now I notice that the two expert accountants reported two errors. While they were unimportant, I wish to explain that those errors were not mine. They were made by Mr. Schiff. I never checked his figures. I checked over mine, but not his.

"Now the next is 'jobs.' The accountant found the only error in my financial sheet there in the item 'jobs. It was not an error, as I will show you. He did not know my method of figuring.

"Two items here are totals. The total gross amount is 791 gross, the total value amount $396.75. In figuring the average I obtained $50.01. In that average he discovered an error. It was not an error. I simply did not go as far into the decimals as he did. One-tenth of a cent was close enough for my purpose.

"Now some of the items in here are taken from the reports of the foremen of the different departments."

Frank then exhibited a report from the foreman or forewoman of each department and explained it.

"Then there is the report of Mr. Schiff, showing the gross of pencils shipped each day of that week—that week was an exceptionally heavy one.

"Now there is a little report here that constitutes one of the most difficult calculations. It is from the packing room. We have a trick of the trade to put the pencils that do not sell very fast into fancy packages to make them go.

"Now, very often these pencils are taken from the shelf, where they have laid for more than a year, and repacked in the fancy cases. I made all the calculations on this that afternoon, despite everything that has been said here to the contrary.

"Now here is a little sheet that deals with the grades of the pencils. It shows the totals for each class of pencils shipped that week. This data sheet—we have had very few clerks at the Forsyth street office capable of keeping it, because it requires rather advanced mathematics to reach the totals."

FRANK MAKES HIS OWN BEST WITNESS TELLING DIRECT DETAILED STORY

The eyes of Leo M. Frank's wife and his mother-in-law, Mrs. Emil Selig, were constantly upon him as he sat in the witness chair talking conversationally with the jurors. His mother seldom looked at him, maintaining her usual attitude, looking slightly downward and toward the judge's bench.

Frank had been talking only 10 minutes when he unexpectedly was interrupted by a heated argument between the opposing attorneys over Frank's explaining the time slips, including the one which the defense claims was taken from the time clock Sunday morning following the finding of Mary Phagan's body.

Frank had mentioned the time slips and was undertaking to make an explanation of the manner they are used when Attorney Rosser called for the slips for Frank to explain before the jury.

Solicitor Dorsey made an instant objection, arguing that the slips had not yet been placed in evidence. All four of the principal attorneys interested in the case were on their feet at once, two and sometimes three of them, were talking at the same time.

Papers Withheld.

Judge Roan was compelled to caution them to proceed parliamentarily. His ruling was that Frank might refer to them as much as he pleased, but that he must not go before the jury with them until they had been properly identified and offered for evidence. The same situation developed when Frank sought to explain the details of his work by means of papers and records of his office. He was allowed to sit in his chair and refer to them but not to exhibit them to the jurors.

Fearless and Direct.

Frank taked to the jurors directly and fearlessly. There was no trace of uncertainty in his voice or in his manner. He appeared exactly as though he were in an informal conference with some persons interested in the factory and was outlining his duties and leading up to some particular incident that had engaged their attention and interest.

He was entirely at ease. He assumed an easy pose in his chair, gestured frequently as he proceeded with his narrative, and occasionally changed his position. His hands most of the time were clasped in front of him, except when he illustrated a point with an unconscious gesture. He found it necessary often to adjust his glasses which seemed not to fit him perfectly.

Tells Complete Story.

He touched only briefly on his early history, telling merely of his place of birth, his career in school and college, his short business experience after his graduation and finally his coming to Atlanta in 1908 to take charge of the National Pencil Factory.

He began with Friday, August 25, the day before the crime and recounted his movements almost minute by minute. Coming to the fatal Saturday, he told of leaving his home, reaching his office, talking with his employees and taking up the work of the day.

He was given orders, records, acknowledgment of orders, record sheets, financial sheets and all the other minute details that are involved in the work of the office. Those that had been submitted in evidence he took before the jury and explained at length and in detail the amount of work required in getting these out.

His Own Best Witness.

Notebook in hand, Solicitor Dorsey took a seat almost directly in front of Frank, but this appeared to disturb the prisoner not in the least.

Through the major share of the remarkable address, with its clear-cut statements and explanations, there was little or no attempt at oratory, but the speech was unquestionably a most eloquent argument. As had been prophesied, Frank was his own best witness.

LEO FRANK'S OWN STORY TO ADD FINAL TOUCH TO STATE'S GREATEST TRIAL

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

It is rather an extraordinary thing that on this Monday, the beginning of the fourth week of the most remarkable murder trial ever held in Georgia, the interest should be in nowise abated or lessened, and that the opening of court to-day saw the biggest, hungriest and most insistent crowd of curious spectators yet on hand at the opening of court.

Far from letting go the Phagan mystery, the public to-day seems to be gripping it even more eagerly than ever before.

Opinion still is widely divided as to the guilt or innocence of Leo Frank, and there have been many switches of conclusion and reversals of theory, pro and con, within the past week, and no doubt there is much more of the same sort of thing to come.

People to-day believe Frank guilty who started out believing him innocent, and the rule is working right around the other way, moreover!

Despite the many things that have been said and the countless things that have been written of the Frank trial and all that led up to it, it remains, on the threshold of its fourth week, the most absorbing melodrama ever enacted in Atlanta—the most bitterly fought and the most uncompromisingly contested trial known to the criminal history of the State of Georgia.

The principal parties to the case are, of course, Mary Phagan, the dead girl; Leo Frank, defendant at bar, and Jim Conley, the grimly accusing ne[gro].

Four months ago no one of these people was known to many Georgians.

Mary Phagan, a sweet little working girl, had a circle of perhaps a hundred friends—not 1 per cent of the population of Atlanta ever had heard of her.

Frank Little Known.

Leo Frank, the superintendent of the National Pencil Factory, was hardly known by very many more people—he had a business and college acquaintance, and a limited circle of social intimates. Not more than 2 or 3 per cent of Atlanta's population ever had heard of him.

Jim Conley, the negro, more than well known in police circles, along the way of the "Butt In" bar in Peters street, and a familiar figure enough along Darkest Decatur, numbered among his respectable acquaintances not more than 50 people—if nearly so many—perhaps.

Now—less than four months after the terrible deed enacted in the pencil factory on Saturday, April 26—there is not a hamlet, a crossroads store or a country or city home in all Georgia that has not heard of every party to the sordid story, and that has not discussed everyone of them, together and singular, from every point of view imaginable!

It is more than morbid curiosity upon the part of people that prompts this great and never-flagging interest in the Phagan case—it is more than the mere fascination of crime that links the heart and mind of the people to it.

In the case of Leo Frank there is that indescribable element we call "human interest," that vague and elusive thing that tugs at the heartstrings and nags at the conscience—there is the knowledge upon the part of the public that a monstrous crime has been committed, and that responsibility for it must be fixed, no matter the cost and no matter the effort!

The public does not clamor for Leo Frank's life so much, nor for Jim Conley's—it demands that responsibility for Mary Phagan's brutal murder be fixed, and it will not be satisfied until that responsibility IS fixed.

At the same time, I believe—and I have believed all along—that the public wants to see justice done and fair play indulged in.

If Frank is not guilty he has been punished already beyond reason or reparation. He should be turned loose, with every amend decency and mistaken zeal may summon to their embarrassed effort at righting a frightful wrong.

If, however, he is guilty, and that is shown, then the inconvenience and discomfort accorded him thus far will matter little, if anything.

It is a tremendously big game the lawyers are playing in the stuffy little courtroom in the old City Hall Building.

On one side is the majesty of the law of the land, that must be maintained at any and all cost—that majesty of the law that may be invoked in behalf of the humblest no less than the highest. On the other hand is the defendant—an abstract thing in the sight of the law.

On one side is the great State of Georgia, calling for a "tooth for a tooth and an eye for an eye"—on the other side are those guaranteed rights of citizens, embodied in Frank, that must not be challenged lightly or without complete and compelling reason.

It Is a Big Game.

It is a big game—it involves that most precious of all gifts of God, a human life, and a human reputation, a home and the happiness thereof. It is a game, nevertheless, that involves on the contrary a sinister charge of utter unworthiness upon the part of the man who still protests his rights to these precious gifts, jealously given of a Divine Power, and as jealously guarded by His laws, no less than by the laws of human beings.

One can not get away from the conclusion, cited many times, that, after all is said and done, Frank's character will determine the verdict in the case now on trial.

His character will be found to be his greatest asset and his most sure dependence, in this his hour of pressing peril—as his lack of it, if shown, must prove to be his final and everlasting damnation.

Frank, by injecting his character in issue, has challenged the worst upon the part of the State.

He has cited scores of witnesses to uphold it—he has made a brave, and maybe an abundant, showing.

The State, however, says it will break down that character—that it will show Frank's unspeakable depravity, even as charged glibly and smugly by the negro, Conley, as yet uncorroborated by any person the most abandoned would care to believe.

If the State can do this thing——

Can it be possible that Frank, through all these years, has been leading a double life?

Can it be true that he has, while professing to be an honorable and upright man, a faithful husband, a dutiful and worthy son, a deserving and decent friend among his neighbors and his kind, nevertheless been, really, a moral degenerate, an ignoble and deceitful creature—and can it be that these things, so long and so cleverly concealed, at last led him to murder?

The State's Contention.

The State holds that his family circle, his intimate social acquaintances, and his business associates, would, as a matter of fact, be the last people in the world to know the truth of Frank's double life—for, say they, Frank would employ every artifice and summon to his aid every possible device to keep those very people from discovering the truth concerning him.

This, so the State contends, is precisely what Frank did do—and in that way they justify his alleged intimacy with Conley and his quick calling upon Conley for help, when eventually he found himself with the blood of a human being on his guilty hands.

The State is asking a good deal when it asks the public to believe this of Frank, in the light of the evidence of his good character tendered last week, and it hardly is possible that the public WILL believe it, unless the State makes its charges crystal clear.

Men will ask themselves—and will ask themselves wisely—whose reputation is safe, if it may be brushed away and broken down by the uncorroborated word of such a creature as Conley?

But, Conley uncorroborated in one thing—while Conley corroborated is quite and altogether another!

The State is yet to be heard in rebuttal of Frank's character witnesses—and so judgement must be suspended pending their revelations.

The only point is—and it has been an evident point so long that to reemphasize it seems trite—the State must make good on its sinister charge of perversion and degeneracy upon the part of Frank, or its case will be greatly weakened, perhaps beyond repair.

I have an idea that Frank's statement on the stand may weigh heavily in the minds of the jury.

Frank the Star.

Indeed, it is not improbable that the very best jury speech and jury argument put forth in defense of Frank, with all due appreciation and respect of and for Mr. Rosser and Mr. Arnold, will be made by Leo Frank himself!

His statement, although not sworn to, will carry an appeal that hardly can be framed of other lips—either that, or it will fall flat and stale and of no consequence whatever.

The trial long ago resolved itself into a matter of Frank vs. Conley.

It is the defendant's word against the negro's.

Both have self interest in the verdict—the life of one or the other must pay the forfeit of Mary Phagan's murder.

The forthcoming statement of Frank, and the rebuttal of the character witnesses, constitute the two events ahead that may, within themselves, make or mar this case, as one may come to view it eventually.

And it is this situation, no doubt, that holds up the interest to-day, as the fourth week begins—for, despite all that has gone before, the case is not yet nearly ended, and there still remains many things undetermined.

PASTOR TRIES TO SAVE M'NAUGHTON

Savannah Minister Declares That Flanders, Alleged Victim, Died From Natural Causes.

SAVANNAH, GA., Aug. 18.—The Rev. John S. Wilder, pastor of the South Side Baptist Church, has returned from Atlanta, where he appeared before the State Prison Commission in behalf of Dr. W. J. McNaughton, the Emanuel County physician who is in jail under sentence of death in September for the alleged murder of Fred Flanders.

All of the evidence has now been presented to the Prison Commission with the exception of one or two affidavits, which will be sent to Atlanta early next week. The commission is expected to act on the case on the first Monday in September. Immediately after the decision of the commission is rendered the matter will be taken up with the Governor. Everything will have to be done during the first week in September, because September 5 is the date set for the execution.

"I feel that nothing short of a pardon would vindicate an innocent man and correct one of the greatest mistakes ever made in Georgia," said Mr. Wilder, who expresses the utmost confidence that Dr. McNaughton will not be allowed to hang. "I have always contended that Flanders was not murdered, but died from natural causes. I think this has now been indisputably established. We have the sworn statements of seventeen of the most prominent physicians in Georgia, including an expert who gives more arsenic possibly than any other physician in the Southern States, all of them agreeing that Flanders did not have the symptoms of arsenic poisoning, but the symptoms of nephritis, or Bright's disease. If these medical authorities are correct, then no murder has been committed, and Dr. McNaughton should go free."

Patient Dies After 300 Neck Operations

BALTIMORE, Aug. 18.—After undergoing more than 300 operations during three years for the removal of a growth in his throat, George McDowell, 31 years old, formerly of Spartanburg, S. C., died in a hospital here while surgeons were making a last attempt to save his life.

For the last eighteen months, McDowell breathed through a silver tube inserted in his throat. He had been under so many operations that he became immune to the effects of cocaine.

Autos Can't Speed At Five Points, Says Recorder Preston

Recorder Pro Tem. Preston Monday morning stressed the dangers of pedestrians at Five Points.

C. W. Green, a chauffeur, was on trial at the time for running his car against Herman Lichtenstein, a merchant, Saturday afternoon and jamming him against a trolley car. Traffic Officer Burnett and several witnesses testified that Green had speeded the car in an effort to beat the trolley car: Lichtenstein was in the act of boarding the car when struck. He was only slightly hurt. Green was fined $15.75, and Judge Preston warned that autoists must run slowly and use the greatest of care at Five Points.

THE PLAY THIS WEEK

Sailors in Movie Romance.

"Victory," a wonderful motion picture in five reels, will be the attraction all of this week at the Grand, daily matinee at 2:30 and night at 8:30.

The picture was made in Cuba by a company which had the aid and the permission of the United States Navy. It is a story of love and war. It shows exactly what the navy does in peace and what might happen in war. The Battleship Utah plays a most prominent part, and in the land and sea battles hundreds of sailors and marines are used.

After the picture was exhibited privately in Washington last month, Acting Secretary of the Navy Franklin Roosevelt gave the owners a strong letter of indorsement.

Many Surprises at Forsyth.

Pleasant surprises feature the bill at the Forsyth this week, taking the place of some of the acts announced to appear. In one case sickness prevented a feature coming on from New York and an accident broke the promise of another of the acts. However, these two happenings made it possible to secure Toots Paka and her Hawaiian dancers and musicians, and brings the famous Castillions, in their wonderful novelty act to Atlanta. The bill is going to be better than originally announced.

Willie Weston will appear in character songs and recitations. The other numbers on the bill will be Clayton Kennedy and Mattie Rooney in a piano playing, singing and dancing novelty; Forster and Lovette in a comedy idea; the Nikko Troupe of Japanese, the best in the profession, and Grace Demar, a pretty and entertaining comedienne.

INSTITUTIONS PUT ON HALF RATIONS

Factional Fight in the Tennessee General Assembly Hits That State's Wards.

NASHVILLE, Aug. 18.—The Tennessee General Assembly is scheduled to reassemble Tuesday so that the appropriation bill may be passed and prevent suffering in some of the charitable institutions of the State.

With the fall months approaching and some of the State institutions subsisting on half rations, the question grows serious with them when winter supplies must soon be purchased and the available means now being far less than the required sums for the summer months.

The institutions mostly in need of aid are the State Industrial School, the School for the Mutes, the Blind School and the Boys' Reformatory.

Notwithstanding these appeals that have come from trustees of these institutions, there is grave doubt as to whether the prolonged session of the General Assembly may be gotten in working order at any time soon because of the intense feeling that exists over the fight between the Democrats and the Fusionists.

M'KEE TO MAKE FIGHT FOR JOB IN SENATE

Atlanta Postmaster Counts on Aid of Strong Political Influence in Committee.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—The Postoffice Department has received information that Postmaster Hugh L. McKee at Atlanta will refuse to send in his resignation as asked for by Postmaster General Burleson in a letter dated August 14, but will throw his case before the Senate Committee on Postoffices when the name of his successor comes up for confirmation.

Notwithstanding the fact that he will not receive any support from Senator Hoke Smith or from Representative William Schley Howard, of Atlanta, Mr. McKee can count on aid enough to make a fight that will rank with the contest in the Gainesville office, when Mrs. Helen D. Longstreet opposed being supplanted.

"I will leave it to the people of Atlanta to decide whether or not my administration as Postmaster of Atlanta, is inefficient. The patrons of the office I consider more competent to judge than the Postoffice Department officials in Washington," said Postmaster Hugh McKee Monday, following the receipt of a communication from First Assistant Postmaster General Roper Sunday demanding his resignation within the shortest time possible.

"Further than this I do not wish to discuss the subject at this time," declared the Postmaster. "Within a few days I will prepare a reply to the letter received by me from my superior officer. I am not inclined to exploit my grievances with the Government in the public press."

"If there is inefficiency in the Atlanta Postoffice I repeat that I do not know it. While the time I have yet to serve is short, my term expiring in January, to the best of my knowledge I am guilty of no violation of departmental rules and see no reason why I should not serve out my full term.

"The report of the Postoffice Inspectors which was reported to have been submitted to the head of the department several months ago, it has been stated, contained all sorts of charges against me. I have never seen the report and do not know that there was one prepared, hence I am still in the dark."

Down Went His Gum, On Went His Train

ATLANTIC CITY, Aug. 18.—Chewing gum or tobacco while on duty has been forbidden the motormen by the management of the Short Line road.

Glen Grice bought a penny stick of gum at Ocean City just before he boarded his train for a run to this city. After the train had attained a 30-mile gait, Grice swallowed the gum. It lodged in his throat and shut off his wind.

The motorman fell over unconscious and the train, heavily loaded with passengers, ran for three miles before the conductor could stop it.

U. S. Will Cremate Dead in Canal Zone

Organist Would Bar Babies at Recitals

Eugene Wyatt, famous English organist, was of the opinion Monday that if he performed a second time at the Auditorium-Armory he would of a necessity exclude infants in arms from his audience.

His recital Sunday afternoon was frequently interrupted by the ambitious wails of prospective Carusos, Gardens and an occasional Scotti. Professor Wyatt is the first of a number of organists to be presented by the Music Festival Association before an official city organist is selected. He made a fine impression on a large audience.

THAW'S ESCAPE FROM MATTEAWAN ASYLUM COMPLETE

Legal Experts Declare He Can Not Be Brought Back From Another State

HARRY THAW NOT CAUGHT; SENDS MOTHER NOTE

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Aug. 18.—A warrant charging Harry K. Thaw with conspiracy in connection with his escape from Matteawan was issued this afternoon to District Attorney Conger, of Dutchess County, who will attempt to use it as the basis of an indictment. If Thaw is captured in another State, said the District Attorney, an effort will be made to extradite him on the conspiracy charge. It was said that another warrant charging bribery would be demanded.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Harry K. Thaw, who escaped Sunday from the Matteawan Asylum for the criminal insane, to-day wrote to his mother, Mrs. William Copley Thaw, at the Hotel Gotham, in this city, saying he was well and that he would meet her at Elmhurst, the Thaw summer home at Cresson, Pa.

Mrs. Thaw said she would leave at 9:25 to-morrow morning for Elmhurst. Thaw's note was in an envelope apparently addressed by one of the men who had aided him to escape. It had been mailed from Station O in this city at midnight Sunday.

Over the top Thaw had written: "Night letter. Fifty words. Twenty-five cents." He had evidently intended to send it by telegraph. The note was addressed to Mrs. William Thaw, Hotel Gotham, New York City, and read as follows:

All well; will take a rest before going to Elmhurst, as I might be asked for interviews and do not wish to refuse, yet do not care to make any statement. Hope H. and G. arrived safe and that you will go home together. Have sent short note to New York Evening Journal. H. T. K.

Thaw, together with a man believed to be Dr. W. B. Holden, of No. 220 West Ninety-eighth street, spent the night at the Lennox Hotel in Lennox, Mass., according to Richard A. Stanley, proprietor of a hotel there. About 8 o'clock a dust covered Palmer-Singer touring car containing two men drove up to the Lennox Hotel, which is a favorite stopping place for tourists in that section of New England. One man registered as W. B. Holden, of New York and the other as P. H. Sims.

They spent the night there, leaving about 6:30 o'clock this morning in the direction of Pittsfield. Their car had the appearance of hard usage and both men were stained and travel weary. Sims avoided other guests and refused to enter the dining room.

This morning when newspapers bearing the picture of Thaw were received at the hotel, Stanley at once identified "Sims" as Thaw. Over the long distance telephone it was said by the clerk of the hotel both men left without eating any breakfast, Sims driving the car.

At Dr. Holden's office it was said that he is out of town making an automobile tour. He was last heard from near Saratoga, it was said, when his automobile had broken down.

Dr. Holden's asisstant denied that the doctor knew Harry Thaw.

The news from Lennox effectually stopped a search of the seas by wireless, as it was evident that the clews to the effect that Thaw sailed from South Norwalk, Conn., in a yacht with a yellow funnel were false.

He had also been reported from Danbury, Conn., and Newport, R. I., but the authorities threw aside all clews and theories save the Lennox trail.

The District Attorneys have begun plans for the detention of Thaw if he is found in another State. An effort will be made to hold Thaw on the charge that he bribed officials at Matteawan.

Evelyn Nesbit Fears Thaw.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, estranged wife of the fugitive, has hired private detectives to guard her.

"Harry Thaw is just as likely to appear at the corner of Broadway and Forty-second street and demand admittance to the theater where I am playing as he is to go anywhere else," said Mrs. Thaw. "He is dangerous and desperate and I fear him. So do his relatives fear him. When I woke up this morning the first thing I did was to thank God that I had been spared my life the night Harry was free. Harry can not be quieted over 24 hours. If he is on a yacht I will feel safer, but he has all the cunning of a maniac and it would be just like him to throw off his pursuers by pretending to sail for some foreign country. Thaw's escape proves that if one has money he can do anything."

Charging conspiracy in helping Thaw to escape, warrants were issued in Poughkeepsie to-day by Justice Borschaus for Richard Butler, Thomas Flood, Eugene Duffy, Michael O'Keefe and Roger Thompson.

On complaint of District Attorney Conger Asylum Guard Howard H. Barnum, who saw Thaw escape, was held on charges of bribery and neglect as a public officer. It was Barnum who was at the asylum gates as Thaw fled.

Thaw's Escape Dramatic.

Thaws escape by plot after five years of futile fighting in the New York courts combine all the romantic and sensational elements of fiction. From the moment that he dashed through the gates, eluding Keeper H. H. Barnum, while milk was being delivered at the institution, Thaw disappeared as completely as though the earth had swallowed him up.

District Attorney Whitman says Thaw can not be extradited if located.

"There is no indictment pending against Thaw in New York and he can not be brought back because he was legally adjudged insane after being acquitted of murder," said Mr. Whitman.

A rigid investigation is going on at the Matteawan Institution following ugly hints that Thaw had collusion inside the institition to aid his escape. Barnum was grilled so unmercifully that he nearly broke down. Time after time he declared that he used every means in his power to keep the prisoners safely. It was said that application would be made both to Governor Sulzer and Lieutenant Governor Glynn at Albany for a State investigation.

The only satisfactory method of finding Thaw, according to the police, is to fix the identity of the men who were waiting for him outside the institution with two automobiles. Something is known of these men. Ten days ago two men, calling themselves Richard J. Butler and Michael O'Keefe, appeared at the Holland Hotel in Beacon, or Fishkill Landing as it was formerly known. They spent money freely and devoted considerable time to scouting about the country.

In answer to queries they said they were preparing to locate for the summer and wanted to find a quiet, restful spot. Friday evening they returned in an eighty-horsepower automobile. The size and strength of the car also caused much curiosity. They had with them men who registered as Roger Thompson and Eugene Duffy. A little later the party was joined by a fifth man, who registered as Thomas Flood. It was he who took the launch to Beacon. Flood was afterward identified as the reckless driver of the touring car who took Thaw across the Connecticutt State line at 70 miles an hour. He was the most reckless of the party.

Saturday morning the men left the Holland early and were not seen about the hotel again. From the talk of the men an impression arose that they were professional gun-fighters recruited from gangs in this city and were paid liberally to risk getting Thaw to safety. One of them, after drinking considerably in the barroom at the Holland Hotel, said: "It was his business to help good fellows."

Reward of $500 Offered.

Following the escape, Superintendent Raymond F. C. Kieb, of Matteawan Asylum, offered a reward of $500 for Thaw's arrest as a "dangerous fugivtive."

Dr. Kieb's belief is that Thaw made his way around Long Island and is now bound for Europe. Dr. Kieb feels that his personal reputation and integrity as a public official are at stake, and has personally hired a private detective agency to trail Thaw.

So closely has Roger O'Mara, the Pittsburg private detective, been connected with Thaw since the shooting of White that some persons jumped to th conclusion that O'Mara was concrnd in some way with Thaw's escape. This was heightened by the fact that one of the men at the Holland Hotel slightly resembled him. Another posed as "Roger" Thompson. A Pittsburg telegram states, however, that O'Mara was in Pittsburg yesterday.

Mrs. Mary Thaw, mother of Harry K. Thaw, who has spent nearly a milli nodollars in trying to restore his liberty, was surprised to learn of her son's escape. She said she had come here in response to a requst from Harry that she pay him a visit.

The New York police department is keenly interested in the search for Thaw and have sento ut a general alarm with a description of the fugitive. The detective bureau will flood the country with circulars bearing Thaw's picture.

Escape Made Without Hitch.

The escape of Thaw was planned with the utmost precision and went through without a hitch. Thaw arose at his usual hour Sunday. After he had taken his breakfast he went into the storeroom, where he has been employed to do odd jobs. After spending a few minutes there, he went into the exercising yard. He wore a straw hat, which was usual for him, and he was otherwise attired for the outside. Keeper Barnum was in the yard at the time.

In a listless voice Thaw bid the keeper good-morning and remarked about the heat.

Then he took several turns up and down the inclosure and leaned against the gate. For many months Thaw had assumed the same attitude at the same spot and Barnum paid no particular attention to him. At 7:45 the milkman who supplied the institution with milk drove up and rang the gong. Barnum looked through the peephole, saw who it was and opened the gate. No sooner had the milkman entered than Thaw galvanized into activity. With the spring of a panther he was through the gate.

Just a short time before a roadster apparently had broken down outside the asylum's gate. The driver got down beneath the machine and was tinkering with it when the milk wagon drove up.

As soon as the institution's gate opened the repairs apparently were made, for the driver climbed into the machine and was just about to start when Thaw bounded through the gate.

Wild Race for Liberty.

The fugitive leaped into the machine, instantly the power was turned on and the machine sprang forward, about a mile farther on the roadster overtook the 80-horsepower touring car which had been seen at the hotel and Thaw was transferred.

Then began one of the wildest and most spectacular automobile rides in history. At Stormville, ten miles east of Matteawan, persons declared that five men surrounded Thaw in the touring car and that each clasped a revolver in his hand, evidently prepared to shoot down anyone who interfered with the car's progress. Pedestrians and carriage drivers east of Stormville said the touring car was going nearly 80 miles an hour. Many persons were nearly run down and killed.

Patrick Buckley, who was in charge of the storeroom yesterday at Matteawan, said that Thaw gave no indication of excitement.

"He came into the storeroom about 9 o'clock," said Buckley. "He said good morning, Mr. Buckley." I replied, 'Good morning, Mr. Thaw; how do you feel this morning?' He walked among the tables for a few minutes. His manner was just the same as it had always been. He was perfectly calm."

In fact, but two employees of the institution did see Thaw gain his liberty. They were Keeper Barnum and Mrs. James Maher, a laundress, who was in a high tower overlooking the exercise grounds and the roadway.

According to Mrs. Maher's story, two automobiles, one a touring car, and another a roadster, passed the hospital shortly after 7 o'clock. The roadster stopped in front of the gate while the big six-cylinder car sped on to the foot of Lowery's Hill, almost a mile beyond the hospital.

There it stopped and the doors on both sides were opened for quick action. Mrs. Maher kept her eyes on the machine outside the gates. Although the driver got out and began to tinker with the mechanism, the motor kept humming and there were many loud explosions from the exhaust.

William Hickey's milk cart rumbled up to the gate while the roadster's motor was humming and thumping. Mrs. Maher said that as Thaw dashed through the gate he waved his arms and cried, "Go, go! For God's sake, go!"

Keeper Barnum was stunned for a moment by the quickness of the escape. Then he notified Superintendent Keb, who called up the Sheriff and notified police headquarters in this city.

Thaw got fully ten minutes start on his pursuers, being headed straight for Connecticut.

HARRY THAW AND HIS NOTED WIFE

Harry Thaw Joins John A. Chaloner's 'Who's Looney' Club

Harry Kendall Thaw now is eligible for membership in the "Who's Looney Now?" Club of which John Armstrong Chaloner is charter and only member up to date.

The cases of Thaw and Chaloner are remarkable in their similarity. Each of them is officially insane in New York. Neither of them are insane, officially, anywhere else.

Chaloner escaped from Bloomingdale Asylum, where he had been imprisoned by relatives, in a gasoline launch.

Thaw escaped from Matteawan Asylum, where he had been imprisoned by the State, in an automobile and yacht.

Both men are of immensely women who had attained promiwealthy families. Both married nence before their marriage. Amelie Rives, Chaloner's wife, was noted as a novellst. Evelyn Nesbit, Thaw's wife, had achieved fame as a stage beauty and artist's model.

BIG SENDOFF IS GIVEN PATHFINDERS AS THEY START ON WAY TO PACIFIC

Cheered by hundreds of lusty-voiced good roads rooters and with the martial strains of the Fifth Regiment band and the hearty good wishes and godspeeds of scores of Atlanta's most prominent citizens and officials ringing in his ears, E. L. Ferguson, official "pathfinder" for the all-Southern open-the-year-round transcontinental highway, Monday morning glided up Alabama street to Peachtree for the start of the long auto-hike to San Francisco.

Mr. Ferguson's "official" family consisted of Mrs. Ferguson, two little Fergusons and Hugh Grant, representing The Sunday American, inaugurator of the monster campaign, who will accompany the party as far as Birmingham.

There seldom has been a warmer "sendoff" than that prepared for "Pathfinder" Ferguson and party on Monday morning. All were in readiness—those entered in the last week, including the Mayor, the chief of police and the fire chief—and scores of other prominent citizens and autoists besides.

Makeup of the Parade.

First came the Fifth Regiment band, followed by the trans-continental car occupied by Mr. Ferguson and party and in the order named, Mayor Woodward, in his private car; Chief Beavers, Fire Chief Cummings and other city officials, in addition to scores of cars piloted by the drivers who compete from time to time at the 'Drome. A number of motorcyclists were also in the line of march.

Stretched out on long, snaky Peachtree, after the departure from The Georgian-American office on East Alabama street, the parade assumed an imposing appearance, much to the delight and admiration of enthusiastic citizens.

The crowd caught the "drift" of the affair. This was no mere parade. Here was a man, without a peer in the art of "trail blazing," starting out for far-away San Francisco, from Atlanta—obviously a monster project in which Atlantans should take particular pride and one filled with all sorts of possibilities, not only for the Gate City of the South, but the entire Southland, including the great Southwest, and the Pacific Coast country.

Big Papers Behind Project.

With these things in mind they gave this man Ferguson a send-off which will be heralded all the way to 'Frisco, through the medium of a score of leading Southern newspapers, including The Georgian and American, The Birmingham News, The Montgomery Advertiser, The New Orleans Item, The Dallas Times-Herald and The Houston Daily Post.

Mr. Ferguson left Atlanta with virtually every detail of the first lap to Birmingham complete. Traveling almost due west from Atlanta, the party will reach the Georgia-Alabama line at Tallapoosa late Monday afternoon. Here the party will spend the night, resuming the journey early Tuesday morning in company with President John Craft, of the Alabama Good Roads Association, and State Highway Commissioner Keller, who will make the entire trip through Alabama.

Arriving at Anniston early Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Ferguson and party will be received officially by the Mayor, the president of the Chamber of Commerce and other prominent citizens and officials. The Alabama city, it is understood, has planned a big reception for the tourists following a lively campaign conducted recently in the interest of good roads between Anniston and Birmingham.

Birmingham Plans Greeting.

In line with tentative plans, as a result of a choice of two routes between Anniston and Birmingham, Mr. Ferguson probably will decide to spend Tuesday night in Anniston, leaving there Wednesday morning. Pell City and Riverside will be reached in the order named; Wednesday night will be passed en route, and Birmingham, the end of the first lap of the long journey, will be reached shortly before noon Thursday.

If reports are accurate, the Magic City good roads boosters will give the transcontinental tourists a reception and send-off never before equaled in the Alabama metropolis. Prominent officials of the Alabama Good Roads Association, city and county officials, representatives of The Birmingham News and others, headed by Nappi's Band, will meet the party several miles outside of the city and escort it downtown, where a monster demonstration has been planned.

From Birmingham the tourists will go direct to Montgomery, where Governor O'Neal, a good roads enthusiast, will receive them officially.

The remainder of the route will include Mobile, New Orleans, Dallas, Houston, El Paso, Phoenix, San Diego, Los Angeles and San Francisco. Mr. Ferguson expects to make San Francisco by October 1, perhaps sooner, after which he will return to Atlanta to begin a second trip to check up the results obtained on the first.

Apprehension as to possible blowouts, with resulting delays along the long route, were allayed Monday morning through the generosity of J. H. Kelly, of the Republic Rubber Company, who has offered to furnish Mr. Ferguson any number of Staggard-Tread tires throughout the entire trip.

Pathfinders Get Big Welcome at Austell.

AUSTELL, Aug. 18.—Pathfinder E. L. Ferguson and party arrived in Austell at 12:30 o'clock Monday afternoon on the first stage of The Hearst Sunday American transcontinental tour, and found a royal welcome awaiting them by Austell and Douglasville citizens. A few miles out from Austell they were met by a Douglasville delegation, who escorted them into Austell and on to Douglasville. The party was scheduled to reach Douglasville at 1:30 o'clock, where a reception and a dinner awaited them.

The trip from Atlanta to Austell was made in good shape. Four miles out from Atlanta a halt was made and the group of Atlanta escorts enjoyed a watermelon cutting. Talks were made by Mayor Woodward and Chief of Police Beavers, and everyone wished the pathfinding party good luck.

From Atlanta to the Chattahoochee River the tourists passed over a magnificent road, while the dirt road from the river to Austell was in fairly good shape. Reports here are that a good road will be found all the way to Tallapoosa, where the stop for the night will be made.

The Douglasville delegation was led by Mayor L. C. Upshaw, President J. T. Dake, of the Douglasville Commercial Club; R. E. Edwards, banker; J. F. Long, superintendent of the Douglasville Cotton Mill; J. M. Banks, merchant, and J. T. Lee and A. L. Gresham, County Commissioners.

BOTH GLYNN AND SULZER TRY TO RUN STATE

Each Sends Representative to Open Bids on $1,000,000 Capitol Construction Contract.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 18.—Forces were marshaled to-day for another week of bitter warfare in the fight between Governor William Sulzer, the impeached Executive of this State, and Lieutenant Governor Martin H. Glynn, for possession of the gubernatorial prerogatives pending Mr. Sulzer's trial on charges of high crimes and misdemeanors next month.

A physical clash between the two aspirants was expected to-day at a meeting of the Trustees of Public Buildings, which was scheduled to open bids for $1,000,000 worth of work on the burned portion of the Capitol. Under the law the secretary of the Governor is a member of the Trustees of the Public Buildings. Chester C. Platt, private secretary to Mr. Sulzer, was designated to go to the meeting and receive the bids turned in by State Architect Pilcher.

One of Many Tangles.

Lieutenant Governor Glynn, who claims to be the constitutional acting Governor, directed his secretary, Frank A. Tierney, to get the bids and to prevent them from falling into Platt's hands.

This was just one of the incidents in the tie-up of the State machinery which involves millions of dollars in various ways.

Governor Sulzer, accompanied by his bodyguard, arrived at the State Capitol at 10:30 o'clock and entered the executive suite. The Governor found a number of friends to greet him. He said he was feeling good and that Mrs. Sulzer, who had been suffering from a nervous collapse brought on by the political struggle, seemed in good spirits.

Not to Weaken, He Declares.

He said he had no intention of weakening in the fight to hold his office, although he did not want to precipitate an unseemly contest which might hurt the State's dignity in the eyes of the nation.

It is learned that the Sulzer array of counsel, headed by Judge D-Cady Herrick, are planning to base their defense of Sulzer's claims to the Governor's chair upon an article in New York's Constitution which provides that "no judicial officer of the State shall serve during impeachment proceedings." The Sulzer lawyers construe this to mean that all State officers may serve from the time they are impeached until actually convicted.

Many members of the Legislature arrived for a big conference of Tammany men, at which plans will be made for further warfare upon Governor Sulzer in the Legislature which meets to-morrow.

Tom Lawson Backs Anti-Tammany War.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 18.—A national campaign against Tammany, backed by a $2,000,000 fund and directed by a country-wide committee, was indicated to-day in telegrams exchanged between Thomas W. Lawson and Lyn J. Arnold, president of the Knickerbocker Press, of this city.

Lawson, who promised a few days ago to give $100,0000 and to undertake the raising of twenty times that sum for fighting the Tamany organization, says New York City and State is under control of "the system" and that Sulzer's impeachment can be made an opportunity "to let daylight into the black cave where works the system's machinery."

"I believe," he adds, "if publicity is set to work rightly, as it can be with right men and money, hell will be to pay for the system before the Sulzer trial is half over."

Arnold replied, also by wire, that his paper to-morrow morning will call upon patriotic men to form a committee to receive cotributions and perfect an organization in Sulzer's behalf.

Prisoners in Coupe Until it Runs Down

HUNTINGTON, IND., Aug. 18.—J. W. Caswell, president of the Huntington Commercial Association, and his family of four children were prisoners last night in a rapidly moving electric coupe which Caswell could not stop.

For six hours the family rode about the streets of Huntington and made excursions out into the country, unable to halt the car. Early to-day the car stopped, its batteries exhausted, on the outskirts of the city and the Caswells walked home.

Birmingham Plans To Close Tenderloin

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 18.—Notice has been given again to occupants of houses in the segregated district of Birmingham that the tenderloin is to be abolished October 1.

While no positive statement has been made, it is understood that the section of the city heretofore designated as the segregated district will be used as a wholesale or jobbing section.

Flyer Falls Into Sea In English Air Contest

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

YARMOUTH, ENGLAND, Aug. 18. The around Great Britain flight begun by H. D. Hawker at Southampton Sunday and continued by Aviator Sydney Pickles, was again up in the air to-day when the aeroplane fell into the sea. Pickles took Hawker's place because of serious illness which beset the latter and planned to finish the 2,000-mile journey from Yarmouth.

Pickles arose at 5 o'clock and soared out over the sea, but his motor stopped and the aeroplane dropped. Neither Pickles nor the car was hurt and another effort will be made to resume the flight Wednesday.

Hitch Arises in Plan For Race With Lipton

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—As a result of a hitch in the negotiations between the present holders of the America cup and Sir Thomas Lipton it is considered likely that the 1914 contest yet may be called off.

It is learned that the point of variance is the old one regarding the size of the defending vessel. Sir Thomas wants the New York Yacht Club to say it will select a boat of the same size as the challenger to defend the trophy.

Atlanta-Made Show Goes to Vote Tuesday

The final outcome of the proposed permanent exhibit of Atlanta-made goods will be determined at the luncheon to be given the manufacturers of Atlanta by the Chamber of Commerce at the Hotel Ansley at 1 o'clock Tuesday. Nearly two of the four floors allotted for the exhibit are yet unsold.

Over 150 guests have been invited, and several prominent business men will speak.

Booster Bulletins Put Out Broadcast

The industrial and statistical bureau recently added to the Chamber of Commerce is preparing a bulletin of information about Atlanta's various manufacturing enterprises; also facts of interest to prospective manufacturers. These bulletins will be put out every two months, and will be distributed all over the country.

W. H. Leahy, who has charge of the bureau, says the bulletins are expected to bring a number of new concerns to Atlanta.

Wins Race to Dying Husband's Bedside

MEMPHIS, TENN., Aug. 18.—Mrs. R. P. Moore, wife of an insurance man of Jackson, Miss., arrived here to-day in time to take her husband's hand and hear his last words.

She came on a special Illinois Central train, an automobile hurried her from the special and she ran up three flights of stairs. Her husband grasped her hand feebly and said: "My dear, I have waited for you, good-bye," then fell back on his pillow dead.

Pin in Fondler's Dress Stabs Baby

Little Mary Lola Morris, 18-months-old daughter of W. T. Morris, secretary to Chief Beavers, was painfully injured Sunday when a dress pin was accidentally plunged into her arm to the bone.

The little girl was being fondled by a woman caller when the pin, which had become unfastened, stuck into her arm.

Rains Lift Water Famine in Kansas

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 18.—More than half of Kansas was covered by rains to-day and it is believed the heat and drouth has been effectively routed. Little benefit to corn was contained in the belated rains, but forage and alfalfa were helped.

Pools that had dried were refilled and live stock was relieved. The highest mark reached by the thermometer in Kansas City yesterday was 92.

LOCAL DRUGGIST MAKES STATEMENT

Says Dodson's Liver Tone Is the Best Remedy for Constipation and Shirking Liver He Has Ever Sold.

Every person who has tried Dodson's Liver Tone and knows how surely and gently it starts the liver to working and relieves billousness will bear out the druggist's statement about Dodson's Liver Tone.

"It is a purely vegetable liquid, that entirely takes the place of calomel, harmless and pleasant to the taste, that has proven itself the most satisfactory remedy for a slow-working liver that most of our customers have ever tried. A large bottle sells for 50 cents and we do not hesitate to give the money back to any person who tries a bottle on the strength of this statement, and is not satisfied with the result."

In these days of doubtful medicines and dangerous drugs, a statement like the above is a pleasant assurance that Dodson's Liver Tone is a reliable remedy for both children and grown-ups. In buying a bottle for immediate or future use it is well to make sure you are getting the genuine Dodson's Liver Tone and not some spurious imitation that has copied our claims but do not stand back of their guarantee. You may be certain of getting the genuine if you go to any druggist for it.

JUDGE SLAIN, HIS BRIDE WOUNDED BY EX-WIFE

W. S. Godbee Shot to Death by Divorcee in the Streets of Millen, Ga.

MILLEN, GA., Aug. 18.—Judge W. S. Godbee is dead and his wife fatally wounded from shots fired by Mrs. Edna Godbee, the divorced wife of Judge Godbee.

Five years ago Mrs. Edna Godbee sued for and obtained a divorce. Less than a year ago Judge Godbee married Miss Florence Boyer, of Williamsport, Pa. They lived at the Estelle Hotel here.

This morning about 9 o'clock Mrs. Edna Godbee walked into the postoffice just as Judge Godbee and his wife were leaving. She immediately began shooting them in the back.

The judge was killed outright and his bride has only a slight chance to live.

Mrs. Edna Godbee walked to her home and has not been arrested yet.

Judge Godbee was a member of the Board of County Commissioners and a large landowner. Mrs. Edna Godbee comes from one of the oldest and most respected families in this section. She was a Miss Perkins, daughter of Mills Perkins.

The shooting created intense excitement, many persons being on the street at the time.

Sees Wrath of Lord In Drouth in Kansas

ZION CITY, ILL., Aug. 18.—"Kansas and adjoining States have reaped a harvest of wrath of the Lord. It will do them no good to pray for rain. The drouth which has affected the land there has been the Lord's direct answer and warning that he will not send rain to grow hogs to pollute the people."

This explanation of the drouth in Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri and Nebraska where corn crops were ruined, was offered by Wilbur Glenn Voliva, successor of John Alexander Dowie, as the head of Zion City.

Bell-Swenson.

At the First Presbyterian Church in Birmingham Saturday morning Mr. Joseph J. Swenson and Miss Genae Bell, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. H Bell, were married. The invitations were limited to a few friends, who gathered at the appointed hour to witness the ceremony, with Dr. J. S. Foster officiating.

The bride wore a traveling suit of blue cloth. Her maid of honor was Miss Josephine Aldrich, of Aldrich, who also wore a becoming tailored suit, and both carried shower bouquets of roses and valley lilies. The bridegroom met the bride at the altar, accompanied by his best, man, Mr. Henry J. Noble.

The bride is a member of one of Birmingham's pioneer families. The bridegroom is connected with one of the largest industrial corporations in the district. They will make their home at North Haven after their wedding journey.

Out-of-town guests at the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. Jordan, of Atlanta; Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Aldrich, of Rajah Lodge; Miss Helen Robertson, of Atlanta; Miss Mary Robertson, of Atlanta; Miss Mary Robertson, of El Paso, Texas; Mrs. Swenson, mother of the bridegroom, from Atlanta, and the Misses Easley, of Anniston.

Miss Tucker Hostess.

Miss Helen Tucker entertained at an informal party Saturday afternoon at her home in Juniper street.

The game of "up-jinks" was played. Miss Nellie Dodd won the first prize, a pair of white silk hose, and Miss Cornelia Walker cut the consolation, a silver picture frame.

Among the guests were Misses Emily Robinson, Nellie Dodd, Martha McGill, Rebecca Harrold, Hallie Crawford, Elizabeth Crawford, Virginia Walker, Cornelia Walker, Marion Dean, Carrilu Born, Emily West, Ludie Speer, Almeta Jackson, Irene Thrower, Catherine Hook, Eleanor Hook, Nina McCleskey, Florine Connally, Ruth Yarbrough and Marie Stoddard.

Wilson's Own Dentist In Navy, Mann Charge

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18. — The charge that "the navy is making a farce" of the retirement age law, and the further disclosure that President Wilson has appointed his personal dentist to the reserve corps are made by Minority Leader Mann.

"While the retirement age in the navy is 62," said Mr. Mann, one of thees new dental surgeons is now over seventy-six. But he happens to come from the same town as the Secretary of the Navy. One of the surgeons is 62 years and another who is 42, was the personal dentist of the President."

Mob at Gadsden Is Thwarted by Sheriff

GADSDEN, ALA., Aug. 18.—Dave Tarvin, a former inmate of the Georgia Asylum for the Insane, was rushed from here to Anniston last night to escape a mob after he had attacked a young white girl of this city.

Sheriff Lister had information that a mob was forming and with the prisoner in an automobile ran through a crowd of several hundred persons that was rushing toward the jail to storm it.

Tarvin's victim is reported to be dying.

Cool Days Promised As Breezes Return

The breezes, which had been on a strike for the past few days, were back at work Monday, keeping Atlanta's business section cool. The thermometer registered 70 degrees at dawn, after a night cool enough to make a blanket appreciated.

Although September is usually one of the hottest months in Atlanta, Forecaster VonHerrmann says it will be an unusually cool month this year.

Fair weather Monday night and Tuesday is predicted by the local bureau.

Savannah Expects Big Seaboard Offices

SAVANNAH, Aug. 18.—In connection with the removal of the division headquarters of the Seaboard Air Line Railroad from Savannah to Americus, effective Saturday, there is a report that the Seaboard system contemplates the removal of its general headquarters from Portsmouth, Va., to Savannah.

The rumor has it that the Seaboard contemplates the erection of an eight-story building in Savannah upon the property recently acquired by that road, in which its general headquarters will be installed.

Bryan's Peace Dove War Eagle in Action

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—Bryan's dove of peace is a war eagle—at least the treaty seal of the State Department so represents it.

The seal's design is an ancient coin representing a war eagle preparing to attack its prey and a figure of the war god, Zeus. The martial emblems are placed on all treaties signed by the Secretary.

Brass and Iron Beds At "Blue Tag" Prices

The "Blue Tag" Furniture Sale is a big, broad-gauged affair, bringing savings on all the furniture (except contract price furniture) in this big five-floor furniture store.

To-day's news is of brass and iron beds. The list below serves only as a guide to what you may expect—it is by no means complete. Not one of these beds is a specially bought sale bed, but rather of that dependable soundness and worth that characterize all Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose merchandise at regular prices and "blue-tagged" regardless.

It is worthy of note that the lacquering on even the most inexpensive brass bed that we carry is the best.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

YOU MUST DECIDE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am in love with a young man who lives in the same neighborhood and is of a very high standard. He has told me he loves me and would like me to become his wife, but as he is a Hebrew and I am a Christian would like your advice, for I can not live without him. G. M. S.

This is a matter too serious for a third party to determine. Marriages of this nature are sometimes happy, but the risk is great. When it means an estrangement from one's family and friends, I would throw my influence against it.

BE PERSISTENT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 19 and deeply in love with a young lady one year my senior. One day I proposed to her and she said her parents would not permit the marriage because of the difference in nationality.

Please let me know what to do, for I love her. HEARTBROKEN.

You are too young to marry even though you had their consent, so do not feel discouraged. Go on loving her; attend to your business duties faithfully; develop yourself mentally, and don't despair or worry. Make yourself such a desirable suitor their objections will vanish.

DON'T MAKE THE EFFORT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a girl of 18 and in love with a man one year my senior. We have never kept company. He tells everyone he loves me, but while he is in my presence I fail to see it. How may I find out if he is true to me? I. H.

The man who tells "everyone" he loves a girl, and gives her no evidence, doesn't love her very much.

Unless you have made mutual vows of love, he can not be untrue to you. A man must make vows before he can break them. Do not fret yourself about him. Time for that when you are engaged.

YOU ARE A LITTLE EXACTING.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18, and for the past four months have been keeping steady company with a young man of 20. When I first became acquainted with this young man he was making a nice salary, but I told him that if he wanted to go with me he must change his profession, which he did, therefore starting at the bottom of the ladder again. It is also understood that he will not care to be married before three years, to which my parents and myself agree, provided we become engaged in about a month from now, which he absolutely refuses to do, claiming that he does not want to become engaged before next year. My parents have therefore forbidden my going with him under any other conditions.

Now, do you think that if he really loves me, as he claims he does, he would allow a matter of a few months to break our keeping company? The only reason he gives for not wanting to be engaged is that he is making a small salary, but if I and my folks are satisfied, I don't see why he should object. IN DOUBT.

He gave up his profession for you, starting at the bottom of the ladder again. I think he has conceded his share, and, under the circumstances, you should not nag him into an engagement until he is ready. Love is worth too much to risk it by the exacting attitude which I am afraid you are taking.

Two Birds—One Stone.

Norah had arrived from Erin's Isle a week before, and was with difficulty being "broken in" to the routine of an English household. Cleanliness was not a very strong point with her, and her cooking, apart from "spuds," was hardly all that could be desired.

"If you are not quite sure on any point, come and ask me at once," said her mistress.

Dinner was just about to be served when there was a clatter along the hall, and the breathless Norah poked her head around the dining room door.

"Please, ma'am," she asked, "an' how will I be knowin' when the puddin' is done enough?"

"Stick a knife into it," said her mistress, with a resigned air. "If the knife comes out clean, the pudding is ready to serve."

"Yes, ma'am," said Norah; "and I'll be after that crathur that's boilin' over."

"And, oh, Norah!"—the mistress had an after-thought—"if the knife does not come out clean, you might stick all the rest of the knives into the pudding."

In a Nutshell

By MINNA IRVING.

WE heard with equanimity
That coal was soaring high,
We bore it when the price of meat
Went kiting to the sky;
When eggs and butter followed suit
We stood it like a sport,
But, lo, the worst has come at last—
The peanut crop is short.

Oh, what is summer time without
The tuber of delight?
We ought to bust the peanut trust,
We ought to make a fight;
We ought to put our woe in print,
We ought to go to court,
We ought to take the warpath when
The peanut crop is short.

The Mistakes of Jennie .:. By HAL COFFMAN

Being a Series of Chapters in the Life of a Southern Girl in the Big City

"No, no, my boy; I could not be so selfish."

CHAPTER XXV.

AFTER the row Jennie had with the installment man, she still owed $28 for her clothes. The man had come for his weekly payment on the clothes, which Tom had to pay to keep the man from literally tearing them off Jennie's back, for Jennie didn't have the money to pay him, and if Tom hadn't been there at the time Jennie would probably have had to do like other girls have done in such an emergency—gone out and GOT the money, never mind HOW.

When Jennie told Tom she still owed $28 for her clothes—that she foolishly bought and did not need—Tom left Jennie in the front room, saying he wanted to go in and talk to her mother a while.

Jennie's mother was lying in bed, and, sick as she was, managed a cheery smile at seeing Tom and told him she always regarded him as her boy, and that she had always hoped that some day he would marry Jennie. Tom did not tell Jennie's mother how much Jennie still owed on her clothes, for he knew that she had trouble enough without worrying any more. Instead, he told her that he had a little money saved up—for the time that Jennie would consent to marry him—and that he wanted her to take it and to go down to the beach somewhere, take a good rest, get well again and take Jennie with her.

At this the good woman cried and said over and over, as she patted Tom's hand:

"No, no, my boy. I could not be so selfish as to take your money that was meant for yours and Jennie's happiness."

A VERY NEAR THING .:. A Complete Short Story

VANSITTART was going to smash. At least, it looked ominously like it. Nobody said it openly. Nominally, nobody was supposed to even suspect that it was likely. But men whispered it to one another in the city; and when men whisper about a thing it is oftener far more serious than if they talked about it in their loudest voices.

"There's about one chance in a million for me!" he told himself. "If the Oriental Bank floats, I'm safe; if it closes down, I'm finished. And it will close down unless a miracle happens, and—Lily will know that the gods have given her her revenge!"

Vansittart's world would have been astonished, perhaps cynically amused, had it seen him now. After locking the door of his room from the inside, to render intrusion impossible, he opened a secret drawer in his desk by touching a spring, and took from it a bundle of letters and a photograph.

The letters were love letters, and the photograph that of a girl.

A fair-haired girl, with a pretty face, without Vansittart's pitiless power, but brave and patient, with love and faith in her eyes. And the letters had been written by a girl to the man to whom she had given her heart, whose wife she expected to be.

"By jove!" muttered Vansittart, as he put the letters down, "she's had to wait for her revenge, but it looks as if Fate is going to give it to her at last."

It had been an ordinary, commonplace story of a man's selfishness and falsity and a girl's outraged trust and love. Vansittart had been engaged to Lily Gordon, a girl clerk in the city, before he had begun to rise, and had left her without a word to fight life's battle for herself as soon as he began to grow rich.

Too Late.

"I was a cur, a mean cur!" he muttered. "But it's too late to think of it now. If I go down she'll know. Will she be glad, I wonder?"

He tried to laugh, but there was a harsh discordance in the sound. Replacing the letters and the photograph in the desk, he went out.

He felt he could not sit there waiting for ruin to come.

There was a man in the city, another speculator, named James Harper, whom Athol Vansittart had helped many times, by whose side he had stood in more than one threatening crisis. Harper had not the power to save him in his turn, but Vansittart felt that he must talk to someone if something in his brain were not to snap.

So he went to him now.

Harper was a keen-featured man, with a trick of half curving his lips in what promised to be a smile and never became one. He was alone in his office when Vansittart entered and grasped his hand cordially.

"You've come to talk over things, old chap?" he said. "I'm glad of it. I'd like to cheer you up. But wait a minute."

He closed the inner door.

"Anything wrong?"

"Oh, no; only a new girl I've got to help with my letters, and I don't want her to hear too much of our talk. Business is one thing, but a confidential chat between friends is another. I hope it's not so bad with you as some fools are making out?"

"I'm afraid some fools are rather wise," returned Vansittart, grimly. "It is no use blinking things. I'm done for if the Oriental closes down."

Harper's tone was sympathetic, but he was pretending to pick up something he had dropped on the floor and his eyes were very eager.

"Look here, Harper," Vansittard said with an effort; "I've come to you because I believe you're the only true friend I've got. As I said, I shall pull through if the bank stands firm. But I don't think it can. It's in a bad way itself, and if it can't raise a big loan practically at once it will close its doors. And if it does that I can't face the music."

"Surely, it's not so bad as that?"

Very Desperate.

"I tell you it is!" Vansittard answered, fiercely. "I shall owe more than I can pay. I shall be disgraced as well as ruined. But I'm not going to stop to face it. Harper, if—if anything happens to me, do your best to prevent too much mud being thrown on my name. It's all you can do."

There was a threat of self-destruction in his tense expression, if not on his lips. Harper knew it, but he did not endeavor to stop him or to argue with him. He only gripped his hand once more, with a few conventional words of sympathy.

And when Vansittart had gone Harper laughed.

Laughed, and then sat considering and frowning, until he suddenly struck his hand on his desk with a low, triumphant exclamation, as though he had hit on a way of accomplishing something that had seemed impossible before.

He left his office hastily, and when he had gone the inner door opened and there came out a girl, with love and terror on her colorless face.

It was late before Vansittart went home. He had gone back to his office and waited for news, but none had come. He left the place at last with a morbid conviction strong on him that he would never return to it. He hailed a hansom, but the man had to ask him twice before he was told where to drive him.

It seemed to Vansittart a matter of indifference where he went. It was not that he had abandoned all hope. He clung to the gambler's belief that there is always a last chance. But he was too restless and excited to fix his mind on anything except the news he was waiting for.

Ah, what was that?

The Crash.

The street was quiet, all but deserted. There was a gas lamp opposite Vansittart's door, and the illumination was gleaming on a pink something. It was the placard of an evening newspaper which a hawker was offering for sale.

He hastened toward it. In bold, merciless letters, the words stared at him:

"FAILURE OF THE ORIENTAL BANK."

He bought a paper, oblivious that he gave a sovereign for it. In the space reserved for late news were two smudged lines, stating that the Oriental Bank had closed its doors that evening and posted a notice outside that they would not reopen on the morrow.

So it was all over. It was useless to hope against hope any longer. His career was finished. He was a ruined man, with disgrace awaiting him if he lived.

He let himself into his house with a latch key, and went straight to the library, where he had been in the habit of working. At first he switched the electric light on full, but at once lowered it to a tiny shimmer. No need of much light for what he was going to do!

A revolver was ready to hand when he opened a drawer. There was nothing else for him to do.

* * * * * * *

"No, no! Listen to me, Athol. I've come to tell you—I've come to tell you it's a lie."

Lily was beside him, struggling with him to get the revolver away. He stared at her stupidly.

"A lie?"

"The placard. The bank was not stopped. Mr. Harper had the false placard and the two lines of false news put in one copy of the paper. I have proof of it; I have found the man who printed it!"

The Plot.

He was hard to convince. But she told him how she had been in the inner office while he was talking to Harper, and how, after he was gone, Harper's manner had been so suspicious that she had followed him to see what he meant to do. He had gone to a printer. It was not for a long time after he had left the shop, however, that she half forced and half frightened the printer to confess that Harper had paid him handsomely to turn out the sham placard and insert the two lines in the paper. He had said it was for a joke, but the girl had not believed it. She had guessed that he intended to use the placard and doctored newspaper to drive Vansittart to desperation by leading him to believe that all was lost.

"So I came here to tell you," she said. "I saw you come in, but you did not see me. So I had to knock, and when the servant opened the door I ran past her. I had seen the light flash from the window into the street, and that helped me to find my way to you. The placard is a lie!"

Vansittart looked at her; there was

Feor for the Loser.

Two costers were in the British Museum, looking at the statue of a Roman gladiator. One of his arms was broken off, his left leg ended at the knee, his helmet was battered, and there were several chips from the face of the warrior. Underneath the statue was an inscription, "Victory."

"Lor' bumme, Bill," said the gentleman in pearlies, "if that there bloke won the victory, what must 'e bean the state of the bloke what lost?"

.:. One Woman's Story .:.

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XXII.

SO agitated had Mrs. Danforth been at the news of Mary's break with Gordon Craig that she lay down on the couch in the tiny parlor until the dishes were washed and put away. This task the daughter performed quickly and noiselessly. She was thankful that her mother had asked no more questions just then, for she felt that she had not the courage to reply to them. Her work done, she glanced nervously at the clock. It was now a quarter past eight. Bert Fletcher would be here soon. She must prepare her mother for the call. She went into the parlor and, drawing a chair close to the couch, took the pale and worn woman's hand in hers.

She Started Nervously.

"Mother, dear," she said, "I think you ought to go to bed now, for you do not feel well enough to see company."

Mrs. Danforth started nervously. "Company!" she exclaimed. "Why, what company could you be expecting?"

Mary smiled bitterly at the suggestion implied by the question.

"That's true, mother," she said, a hard ring in her voice. "I am not troubled with friends or guests, am I? But this evening will be an exception, for I am expecting a caller—Mr. Fletcher."

Her mother sat up and eyed her keenly. "Mr. Fletcher?" she asked. "Is he the man who was so nice to you one evening last winter?" There was eagerness in the tone, and as she noted this the girl appreciated that her loving, gentle mother was actually anxious to have her marry if it would mean freedom from care for herself and the girl.

"Mary, why don't you answer me?" demanded Mrs. Danforth.

Mary started guiltily. "I beg your pardon, mother," she said. "Did you ask me a question? I must have been absorbed in my own thoughts. What did you ask, dear?"

"Only if this Mr. Fletcher is the man who brought you home one night in a cab when it was stormy?"

"Yes," assented Mary, "that is the man."

"Well, I remember that you once said he was very kind," remarked her mother, watching the girl's face.

"Yes," said Mary, "he is kind—even if he is not a cultured gentleman and does murder the king's English. But, after all, truth and fidelity are more than education and manners. I have had enough of men of culture and of nothing else." She tried to change her sharp speech into a laugh that her mother might not suspect how sore her heart was.

Mary Remembered.

The widow replied with one of her sighs, but this time the sound was indicative of hope and satisfaction.

"He evidently knows that you are a lady, and he treats you as if you were. So he must be something of a gentleman himself. I am ready to like him if he is good to you. Oh, my child," lifting one of her daughter's hands to her pale lips and holding it there, "nobody, not even you, knows what I have gone through in seeing you overworked and in trying to save and manage here at home. There have been times when but for you I would have prayed to die."

Mary remembered how, less than two hours ago, she had said to herself; "If it were not for mother I would want to die." But she smiled reassurance into her mother's face.

"Since we need each other, mother," she said, jestingly, "let us both determine to live for each other. And there's a better time coming for us both."

The mother looked at her anxiously. "You mean that, Mary? You are not keeping the truth from me or trying to pacify me by seeming hopeful when you are not, are you, dear?"

"No, mother," replied the girl. "I am speaking the truth when I say that I believe there is a better time coming for you."

She did not add "and for me." Perhaps she did not think of it.

"I do not like to seem inquisitive," Mrs. Danforth went on, "but I am wondering how long ago you broke your engagement to Gordon—Mr. Craig, I mean."

The girl hesitated a moment before replying, and she avoided her mother's gaze.

"Not so long ago," she said indifferently. "You know I always think that when people find they are not suited to each other it is best for them to agree to disagree with as little fuss and talk as possible."

There was so much finality in her manner that the elderly woman ventured to say no more about the Texan. Yet she was not satisfied, and soon asked timidly:

"This—this Mr. Fletcher—do you like him very much, Mary, my dear?"

"I have told you, mother," said the girl, "that he is a kind man, and has been good to me—so why should I not like him?"

Her mother began another question, but a ring at the bell checked it.

"Good Night, Dear."

"Good night, dear," she said, rising hastily and hurrying into her own room.

When the door had closed behind her mother, Mary stood, her hands over her eyes. Perhaps she was praying, perhaps trying to collect her thoughts. But as the bell sounded forth a second summons she went slowly into the kitchen and pressed the button releasing the catch of the lower front door. For another minute she stood poised as if now, at this last moment before her guest's arrival, she would escape him, would avoid receiving him. Then, recovering her self-control and courage, she passed out into the narrow hall, opened her front door and stood waiting for the man whose footsteps she heard on the stairs ascending toward her.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THE most restful way for spending one's vacation is to watch one's neighbors. If they are idle, it makes the one on a vacation just indignant enough to make his blood circulate, and if they are working, the sight of their labors makes his own idleness soothing in contrast.

The man who lived next door interested himself with the Lysander John Appleton family, who were occupying their summer home. He watched them the day they moved in: Two women of regal bearing, a boy with a forehead like a Mansard roof, and a meek-looking man who might be a servant, the Appleton family being an ideal American family.

It was the women who interested the idle man the most. They were of such queenly bearing and had such perfect figures he longed for the fingers and skill of a Rodin. "I never," he murmured, "saw more perfectly-formed women."

They entered the house, closed the door, and for a half hour there was no outward evidence of occupancy, and then the man on the side porch saw a woman emerge from the back door the sight of whom made him throw back his head and laugh.

She had a figure like that of a featherbed, and if she had ever had a waist line it had long ago moved up and become lost in the foothills of her mountainous bosom. She shook and quivered as she walked like a bowl of calves'-foot jelly, and while he gazed at her in bewilderment the door opened again and there emerged a younger woman so thin that she looked the same coming as going.

For a week he saw two women with perfect figures enter and emerge at the front door, and a feather bed and a bean pole from which garments drooped like a flag at half mast emerge and enter at the back door. Then one evening when he saw Lysander John sitting alone on the porch in front he walked across the lawn and asked for an explanation.

"They are the same women," said Lysander John sadly. "If you are interested, I will show you the means of the transformation."

He led the way upstairs to a dressing room where two long, vise-like garments hung over the back of a chair.

"The modern magician's wand," he said, pointing to two corsets."

The Ten Commandments of the Summer Wife

By DOROTHY DIX.

He is as a phonograph.

ARISE, sister, gird up thy straight front, put glad raiment upon thyself and take thy vacation: yea, take it though thou hast to fight for it with tooth and nail, for she that hath wrestled with the robber that lieth in wait in the butcher shop and the despoiler who abideth in the grocery store, and who hath provided the wherewithal her family is fed three times a day for three hundred and sixty-five days, needeth to slip the yoke for a space while the galled place healeth.

2. When thou takest thy vacation, go it alone. Be not as those foolish wives who say, "I have never been parted from my husband, and lo, where he goeth there will I go also," for belike thou hast gotten on thy husband's nerves and he would fain have a rest from thee.

3. Reflect that nine months of the year can a man rejoice and be exceeding glad to be married. Ten months can he steel his heart with fortitude to endure it, but on the twelfth month he noticeth that his wife's nose is crooked, and he knoweth her cooking. Therefore get thee hence on the twelfth month, and when thou shalt return to him he will make a feast at thy coming.

They shall mock thee.

4. Stay not too long, though, on thy vacation, for it is not good that a husband should be left alone to his own devices until he can find the secret spot wherein the clean shirt hideth itself and the fresh collars are secreted. Verily it was written in the Book of the Prophets that a little absence maketh the heart grow fonder, but too much absence inclineth it to another skirt.

5. When thou rockest in the chair that swayeth back and forth on the Summer hotel gallery, boast not thyself of thine automobile, and thy butler, and thy social prestige, and the diamonds thou hast left behind thee in thy husband's safe; for the women thou braggest to art the Daughters of Missouri, that even require to be shown, and they shall mock thee behind thy back as a liar.

Go it alone.

6. Tell not the secret of thy life. Reveal not the weaknesses of thy husband, and pull not forth from thy closet the skeleton where it is hidden because thou happenest to stroll in the twilight with a sympathetic sister, for lo she shall tell the tale to another, and she shall repeat it to still another, and scandal shall be heaped upon thy name.

7. When thou playest bridge, get thee a strangle hold upon thy purse, for peradventure the society dames with whom thou sportest shall shear thee even as a lamb is sheared on Wall Street, and thou shalt have to write home for more money.

8. Take not the lone Summer man away from the maidens when he fleest to thee as to a temple of refuge, because thou already hast a husband and cannot expect him to marry thee. Flirt not with such an one, but stand thou to one side and give the virgins their chance, for to in these days a husband is scarce and hard to come at.

9. Listen not to the man who wandereth on the beach with thee in the moonlight and who saith, "Would God I had met thee in time," for behold he is but as a phonograph with one record, and hath already said the same thing to 981,735 other women. Also he draweth but twenty-five bones per in a department store, whilst thy husband hath skill with the shekels, so that thou adornest thyself in purple and fine linen and split skirts therewithal.

10. Forget not that gossip stalketh through the halls of a Summer hotel, seeking whom it may destroy; therefore bear thyself as though thou posest in a moving picture film and converse as though thou consortest with a dictagraph. So shalt thou meet thy husband with a glad smile when he cometh down on the Saturday afternoon train, and thy heart shall not quake with fear when thou thinkest of what one of the old cats who knit pink sweaters in the hotel lobby may reveal unto him.

Selah.

'Tain't No Use.

The tramp approached the proud citizen and asked for alms.

"'Go to the ant, thou sluggard.'"

"'Tain't no use, mister. Me aunt's jist as tight-fisted as me uncle an' all de rest uv me relashuns. I fear I'll have to go to work at last."

Childlife.

"Come, Willie," said his mother, "don't be so selfish. Let your little brother play with your marbles a while."

"But," protested Willie, "he means to keep them always."

"Oh, I think not."

"I say, Yes,' 'cause he's swallowed two of them already."

.:. The Coralbank Case .:.

By MATTHEW JAMES.

ONE of the smarest little robberies that has ever come under my notice," said Detective Hunter, of Scotland Yard, as he musingly lit his first cigar one night recently at my rooms in Portman Square, "was that perpetrated in the autumn of last year upon a Mr. Silas Jay, then residing in a pretty little house known as "Coralbank" and situated about half a mile beyond Windsor."

I was on the alert in an instant, for there were few things I like better than listening to one of Detective Hunter's professional experiences.

"Perhaps," he said, after a few moments' reflection, "I had better give you the particulars as they were narrated to me by Mr. Silas Jay himself, since I personally had nothing to do with the case."

The story ran as follows:

First, I must explain that Mr. Jay, who was a bachelor, was a man of many prejudices. He suspected everybody, and regarded all recognized and established institutions with unqualified distrust. Those that were national were torpid, and therefore mere shams, while those that were not were established chiefly for the fattening of financiers by any process, honest or otherwise, but more generally otherwise.

The existing police system held a prominent position in the former category, while banking houses figured no less conspicuously in the latter. This last opinion induced hmi to distribute his capital among six or seven banks, in order that, should any one of them fail and swindle him out of his money, his fortune would not be very materially impaired. Well, among these banking houses was one situated in Windsor, which, for the sake of convenience, he always used when at home, and in this bank the sum of $60,000 was deposited.

The Rumor Spreads.

How the rumor reached him I was never able to discover, but one day in October he presented himself in great excitement at the offices of the bank in question, declaring that he had heard it whispered they contemplated suspending payment, and demanding an immediate surrender of his credit balance of $60,000.

The manager indignantly repudiated the suspicion, but the old gentleman was thoroughly frightened, and finally the money was handed to him over the counter in the shape of a hundred $500 and two hundred $50 notes. These, as he afterwards explained to me, he intended depositing the following day in another of the local banks. But this intention was frustrated.

Early the next morning it was discovered that during the night an entry had been effected into the house, and the alarmed Mr. Jay, descending hastily to the library, discovered, to his mortification, that the larger of the two parcels of bank notes, of the value of £10,000, had been abstracted from the drawer in which he had locked it. The smaller but more valuable parcel he had placed, for greater security, in a secret compartment of his secretary, and this, to his intense relief, he found to be intact. The ingenuousness of the contrivance had baffled the thief, who had been forced to retire without securing the bulk of the money.

Mr. Jay dispatched a servant with a telegram, which he had himself indited requesting the authorities at Scotland Yard to send down a detective at the "earliest possible opportunity."

Half an hour later the servant returned without having dispatched the telegram and accompanied by a tall, shrewd-looking, businesslike man of about thirty-five. He was immediately conducted to the library, where, without loss of time, he introduced both himself and his errand to the astonished Mr. Jay. He spoke with a quick, intelligent precision that was not without its effect on his listener.

"Mr. Walter Craft."

"Mr. Silas Jay, I believe?" he said, briskly. "I chanced to be in the telegraph office when your servant entered, and, observing the direction of the message he was about to dispatch, took the liberty of interrupting it until I had seen you. But first allow me to introduce myself."

He took a card from his pocket and laid it on the table. Mr. Jay picked it up and read the name, "Mr. Walter Craft, detective inspector, Scotland Yard."

"As you see," resumed the stranger in a matter-of-fact tone, "I am connected with the establishment to which your telegram was directed, and, this being so, I took the further liberty of making myself acquainted with its contents. The closing words, 'earliest possible opportunity,' particularly appealed to my professional recognition, of the value of time; so, being on the spot, I have come straight to you to offer my services in discovering the perpetrator or perpetrators of the robbery which took place here last night, the chief particulars of which I have already elicited from your servant."

Mr. Jay rose from his chair, "I am glad you came," he said.

The detective bowed, and then, resuming his brisk, businesslike air, which appeared to afford his listener no small satisfaction, said:

"Then let us begin at once."

"Had you any other money in the house?" His keen, gray eyes searched Mr. Jay's face.

The latter hesitated. He was at all times a suspicious man. But the detective's keen insight into the position of things had strongly prepossessed himself in his favor, while his character was no doubt unimpeachable. So, after a moment's consideration, he told the story of the untouched parcel of bank notes, even going so far, in the exuberance of his spirits at the thief's failure, as to touch the secret spring which opened the hidden compartment and reveal to the detective the notes within. As he did so, however, he appeared to regret the action, for he made a movement as if to reclose the compartment, but the detective stopped him.

"Pardon me," he said quickly, "but did I understand you to say that you drew these notes from the bank with those that are missing?"

Silas Jay nodded.

"In that case," said the detective, emphatically, "I must ask you to allow me to examine these notes. A great deal may depend on my doing so."

The Suspicion.

Silas Jay reluctantly drew them from their hiding place and handed them to the detective. The latter turned them over, one by one, his fingers lingering long over the task. Then, with a half-suppressed sigh, he handed them back to their owner and watched that gentleman as he once more replaced them in the secret compartment of the secretaire, and heard the sharp, metallic click of the spring as it flew into position.

When this was done he asked to be allowed to see the servants, and one by one they were called into the library. He said but little to them, however, chiefly impressing upon them the necessity for silence on the subject of the robbery, and dismissed them once more to their respective duties. Then he turned to Mr. Jay.

"Now," he said briskly. "I think I may confide to you the fact that my investigations so far have not been without their reward. To-morrow morning I shall return and shall probably require to again examine—and, if may be necessary to photograph—the notes still in your possession. I will now bid you good-day, as there are several things that need to be done in the meantime."

At half-past ten the following morning there was a loud pealing of the front door bell, and a few minutes later a servant announced that two police constables in uniform requested to see Mr. Jay on a matter of sonsiderable importance. They were shown into the library, and awkwardly touched their helmets to the master of the house. They were typical country policemen—thickset, stolid-looking individuals, who might certainly form part of the arm of the law, but possessed no iota of its brains.

"Are you Mr. Silas Jay?" inquired one, in a slow, expressionless voice.

Mr. Jay admitted that such was the case.

"Well," explained the constable "we're in search of a feller who's wanted up in Brummagem for a little lob o' 'ousebreakin'. From information received"—he coughed to emphasize the professional phrase—"we know he's in this district, and we are hinformed that a man answerin' to his description was seen a-comin' into your 'ouse yesterday afternoon."

Silas Jay turned pale as a horrible suspicion crossed his mind. With a quick movement he pressed the secret spring of his secretaire, and a sigh of unutterable relief escaped his lips as he beheld the precious bank notes lying safely within their ingenious hiding place. Then, closing the compartment, he turned abruptly to the constables, who were watching him in evident curiosity, and said:

"He promised to be here at eleven this morning, and it barely wants a quarter to that now."

Instantly the men were on their feet. "I wonder if he'll come?" said one. "If he does," replied the other, "we've got 'im, and then we're safe for a stripe or two."

Eluded.

Simultaneously they moved to the window and stood looking out down the gravel paths that skirted the lawn and across the tall gates that led on the road. As for Silas Jay he was too bewildered even to think coherently and sat, with his chin resting on his hands, staring straight before him. An exclamation from one of the constables roused him.

"Here 'e is!" exclaimed the man.

Mr. Jay leaped to his feet and ran to the window. At the same instant a man who had just turned in at the gate came to a standstill and glanced irresolutely in the direction of the house.

"You infernal fools!" exclaimed Mr. Jay, with all his old disgust for the police returning in full force. "The fellow has seen your confounded uniforms through the window and has taken the alarm!"

It certainly looked as if this was actually the case, for at that instant the man turned and swiftly retreated through the gates and out on to the road, where he was immediately lost to view behind the tall hedge which shut in the lawn. With a smothered oath, Silas Jay threw up the widow, and, climbing out as quickly as his age would allow, started in hot pursuit. One of the constables followed his example, and, being a younger man, soon outstripped Mr. Jay.

When the latter reached the gate and looked down the road he beheld the bogus detective far away in the distance, speeding along through a cloud of dust, mounted on a bicycle. He was getting a good start, and upon seeing Mr. Jay, waved his hand in token of his determination to catch the now rapidly disappearing thief. When Mr. Jay returned to the house he found that the other policeman had taken himself off.

The next day he was so restless that he could bear the house no longer, so he determined, as there was nothing to hinder him from doing so, to take the hundred $500 notes into Windsor and there deposit them in one of the local banks. He touched the concealed spring of his secretaire and the secret compartment flew noiselessly open. And then, with a wild cry, he staggered back against the wall and fell in a heap upon the floor. The bank notes were gone!

As soon as he recovered he rushed into Windsor and wired to Scotland Yard, and the chief sent me down to investigate. Both detective and his confederates, the country constables, were unknown—in that capacity, at least—to the authorities. When I communicated this information to Mr. Silas Jay I thought he would have a fit.

"What are you going to do?" he asked.

"I am afraid," I said, "there is but little left for me to do. I have been to the bank, and find that, owing to the ridiculous discussion which took place, the manager, in handing you the notes, omitted the customary precaution of taking down their numbers. All we can do, therefore, is to endeavor to trace the criminals by means of their description. But this is a tedious process, and not always crowned with success."

He handed me the card which the bogus detective had given him.

"An alias, I suppose," I said. "And Walter Craft is not an inappropriate name for one of his calling."

A gleam of something like self-contempt shone in the old man's eyes.

"Scarcely as appropriate as my own," he exclaimed savagely, "for if any man richly deserves the name of Jay, I am certainly he!"

PERFECT HEALTH WOMAN'S CROWN OF GLORY

Did you ever observe a woman who has reached the age of 60 or even 70 in perfect health and say to yourself, "I hope I may grow old as gracefully as she does?" In order to reach a lovely old age women should guard against woman's diseases, as they are the greatest menace to joy and gladness. Lydia E. Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

Happiness the Real Secret, Says One of the Stage's Prettiest Girls

"Being happy is the secret of being well, looking well and feeling well."

This is Miss Lois Josephine's recipe for obtaining and maintaining a beautiful face and figure.

Miss Lois Josephine in two poses.

"I AM determined to be happy," said Lois Josephine to me, smiling the while with the wistful sweetness that is the heritage of Irish blood. "I think that being happy is the secret of being well, and doing your work well, and looking well, and feeling well! Well, with all these wells to be acquired, my search for happiness is going to be untiring."

"Just how does one go about being happy—deliberately happy?" I asked. The blue-bird of happiness is an elusive-winged creature, and even when he is found at last at your own fireside he flies away as you clasp him in the welcoming circle of your hands.

"To be happy," answered Miss Josephine, with a tiny shadow of a smile that ought to lure happiness right to her side, never to depart, "to be happy, you like all the things you have to do, you trust your friends, you love all the beauty of nature around you—and you avoid unnecessary contact with tasks that you can not teach yourself to like. Oh, truly, I think that if you are happy you will be healthy and wealthy and wise and—and, yes, beautiful!"

Now, Miss Josephine is the Sunshine Girl in "The Passing Show of 1913" up at the Winter Garden in New York, and most charmingly does she and her partner, Wellington Cross, dispense gayety and sunshine as they dance their "Joy of living" steps for you. Perhaps it is here that Miss Josephine found her inspiration to be a sunshiny girl in everyday life, but to be happy seems to me to be a most excellent way to acquire beauty.

Her Program.

"I am going to be so happy and contented with life that I will just naturally attract sunshine instead of shadow," went on the dainty girl whose picture delights you to-day. "I am going to be so pleased with my life and work that my expression can never be bitter or discontented, but instead must be sweet and friendly.

"Bitterness, discontent, envy, worry, anger, malice—I am going to banish them from my mind more and more earnestly as I get more and more power to pursue a search for happiness. If only girls knew what foes to beauty these evil feelings were they would all join me in a happiness hunt and get such sweet expressions that every one would be exclaiming: 'Well, I declare, if Mamie Jones isn't getting to be a beauty—she has the most attractive expression!' "

Suddenly Miss Josephine trilled out a merry laugh.

"Want to see one practical detail of my hunt for happiness? Well, I am making my feet happy, too! I wear flat-soled tennis shoes with buck instead of tennis soles, since rubber draws the feet, and so rest and relax the muscles and tendons of my feet. Narrow, tight, high-heeled shoes do not make your feet comfortable; they actually hurt your health, and they do great harm to the serenity of your face. You know the desperate expression you often see on the face of a girl whose shoes are too tight or are pitching her forward, with the strain coming heavily on already tired muscles. Well, an expression like that may carve its way in ugly lines right into a face. So I recommend making your feet happy if you want your face to look happy!

Ventral Courtesy.

"I am very polite to my digestion. I don't ask its overtaxed organs to handle heavy meats and rich sauces all through the hot summer. Instead, I eat vegetables and salads and the lighter meats, and give my system tonic food, instead of task food, in summer. An ideal summer program is to have meat on your dinner menu only two or three times a week. For instance: Chicken on Sunday, steak on Tuesday, lamb on Thursday, fish on Friday, and on the other three days try soup and a few extra vegetables for your dinner. Simple menus will give your 'digestery' a rested, happy feeling that will tell in a happy, rested-looking face.

"If you like it as well as I do, you will be delighted to drink three glasses of buttermilk during the day, and on rising and on retiring you will enjoy a bit of watercress with salt. Fine tonics for the system—both of these. Then to make your skin and muscles rejoice in the general prosperity, try a morning and evening rub with equal parts of alcohol and witch hazel. That will add a fine glow to the general beauty-dealing feeling of happiness you want to acquire. Oh, it is great fun working out a system whereby you will acquire happiness and all its attendant blessings of beauty and health and power to advance in the world."

As we left Miss Josephine's pretty home on a cross street, just west of Broadway, a friend called to the little blue linen-suited figure: "Hello, little bluebird!" And the bluebird is for happiness, you know.

LILIAN LAUFERTY.

Its Virtue.

President A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard, said at a dinner in his honor in Chicago:

"Early mariages are the best. It is neither good for the man nor for the community that he should wait until he is 28 years old before marrying."

President Lowell paused a moment and then, smiling, he continued:

"Another trouble about late marriages is that the man's habits—his bad habits—are formed, and it's hard to break him of them. You know, perhaps, the story of the cigarette?

"A man of the old fashioned 'manly man' type—the soft, full-stomached type that drinks too much, belongs to too many lodges, and must be superior to woman in everything—this man took umbrage over his wife's cigarette, the one modest cigarette that she took after dinner, though he, of course, smoked like a chimney all day long. And so he said, one evening:

"'I believe you think more of that nasty, poisonous cigarette than you do of me, your husband.'

"'Well, dear,' his wife replied, smiling and blowing a cloud, 'I can keep my cigarette, you know, from going out.'"

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Mildred Farley was a dressmaker," this gentleman went on. "If you read the newspapers you know that, and also know that she worked hard at her duties for some weeks before her death. But what is very strange in her connection, and, together with some other reasons unnecessary to state here makes it difficult for the police to settle down to the belief that her death was the simple suicide it at first seemed, is that no one has succeeded in discovering for whom she worked, and to what home she carried the various dresses she finished in that time. For though it may not be material to know this, and may not help the affair forward one jot toward its rightful issue, yet because it is a mystery and an unsolved one, those whose business it is to see every doubtful case made clear, have sent me to this house to see if some light can not be thrown by you upon it."

He paused and looked at Genevieve. She at once raised her eyes and surveyed him steadily.

"You think, then, that I knew Mildred Farley?" was her question, clearly and coldly uttered.

At Loggerheads.

"Did you not?" he inquired.

Her lips broke into a smile. "Ask Dr. Cameron," she suggested, and seemed to think she had answered his question.

Their visitor glanced at the doctor, met only a dubious shake of the head, and continued in a more formal tone.

"If you did not know Miss Farley, it is strange she should have made the dresses of your trousseau, Mrs. Cameron."

"I don't understand you," was that lady's reply. "My dresses were made by any one but that girl. This I can assure you most positively, sir."

"You can. We are then brought round to my first question: who was it that did make your dresses, Mrs. Cameron?"

It was smilingly said, but it caused her to flush with great indignation.

"Is it necessary that I should tell you?" she somewhat haughtily inquired.

"If you do not, I cannot prevent certain people I know from thinking it was Mildred Farley."

"And why?" Dr. Cameron now broke in. "What reasons have they or any one to connect my wife with that poor unfortunate?"

"Only a very material one which I leave to Mrs. Cameron to explain. In the room of that dead girl were found scraps and ends of silk and velvet, which were preserved by the police as pieces of the goods she had been lately making up into dresses. Among these was a morsel of trimming—here it is—and as this trimming or some just like it was seen by chance upon a dress worn by Mrs. Cameron, it struck one of our agents that she was in all probability the lady who had profited by this poor girl's handiwork."

"The conclusion of a man!" exclaimed Mrs. Cameron, with chill sarcasm. "I suppose there are in this city to-day, twenty ladies with just that trimming on their gowns."

"And with this gray velvet for a dress? And this—I do not know how to call it—for another? And this soft white silk so suitable for a bride's adorning, and"——

"Enough, enough," cried Mrs. Cameron, putting up her hands merrily as a half dozen samples of various goods and colors fell in a shower into her lap. "I own to these, but I do not own to Mildred Farley. You waste your time; you will never find that she did any sewing for me, however she came into possession of these pieces." And with a half careless, half disdainful smile, she flirted the bits aside, looking so imperious and so charming, that for a moment her visitor seemed a trifle abashed and half rose as if to go. "You see if I had anything to tell, I would," she murmured, graciously. "But I have not. I cannot explain any more than you how these samples from my dresses should have been found where they were. I can only look at them and wonder. Is that enough, sir?"

"Hardly," his look seemed to say, but he rose. "And you will not tell me where your dresses were made?" he smiled.

She shook her head, laughed and rose with an arch air.

The Back Porch.

"It is a secret I have kept even from my husband, but if you must have it, you must. And rising on tiptoe with a look of merry defiance at the doctor, she whispered something in the visitor's ear.

He listened, stared at her a moment and broke into a genial laugh.

"And so this is your secret," he cried. "Well, I know how to respect the secrets of a lady when such respect does not interfere with my duty."

And with a gallant bow he took his leave, expressing the hope that he had not made his call to lengthy.

After he was gone Dr. Cameron turned to his wife.

"And what did you whisper in that big man's ear to calm him so suddenly?"

"Ah, you want to know my secret too," she laughed. "Well, I told him that the work which has been so much admired had been done by no woman. That in my vanity and desire for originality I had had the poor taste to employ a man, and that I was secretly ashamed of it."

"She told you that?" cried Mr. Gryce. "And you believed here? Humph!"

"She spoke the truth," asserted his companion—the gentleman whose name we purposely suppressed in the last chapter."

"You think so?"

"I do. There was something in her tone, whisper, though it was, which brought conviction. I do not question her word in the least."

"Well, we will see; I did not hear her and so may be pardoned for having my doubts. I will talk with you again, sir. The play may not be worth the candle, and it may; a few days more will determine."

"And Molesworth?"

"Is very well as he is."

This conversation, fragmentary though it is, will show something of the stand which Mr. Gryce was taking in this matter. He had Molesworth under his eye and as good as under arrest, and yet he was not satisfied. Something—was it instinct or experience?—told him that this affair possessed complications of no ordinary nature, and that to a conscientious man like himself there were doubts to be solved and possibilities to be sounded, before he would dare proceed against the doctor as against a presumably guilty man.

But with the kindred remembrance of what the woman in Mrs. Olney's boarding house had said about Mildred Farley's frequent comings and goings with her great box, he did not consider it so foolish now, and only wished he had probed the subject deeper at the time. It was not so late yet, however, but that proper inquiries in the right places would settle the question as to whether these two girls were the same. He had only to pass a word or two with the complaisant butler at Mr. Gretorex's house, to learn enough to have the laugh, to say the least, on his somewhat credulous superior. To Mr. Gretorex's house he therefore went, and to Mr. Gretorex's butler he at once addressed himself.

He found this person quite ready to talk in his easy, French way.

The Butler.

"Zat girl? I—none of ze help know somezing bout zat girl, only Mees Gretorex always was at home when she come. A vell for ze face? Oui, so zick you no can see if she was black or white. But she was ver pretty—look good, Sacre! She walk good—proud like a comtesse. She no look at me. One time Pierre try, I try to speak wiz her. It was no good. If she was much deaf she do just so; for she look not to me, she look not to Pierre."

"You're right, Count," laughed a voice over their shoulders, "and one of us ain't a bad looking man, either."

It was Peter, who liked a bit of gossip as well as his neighbor, and who now came forward smiling.

"I feel ze compliment, M. Pierre, and it is ver much good for you to say so," retorted the "Count" with a grandiose bow. "It is ze opinion of ze ladies in ze house."

The butler then winked slyly at Gryce, and satisfied that he had effectually discomfited the footman, proceeded to put questions to the detective as to his reasons for the interest he showed in this girl, which that functionary had wit and experience enough to successfully parry.

Peter helped him; for Peter was a rival of the butler's in more than one field, and in his good-natured way invariably took part against him in any controversy, and it was from Peter that Mr. Gryce finally got the acknowledgment that this young woman, or lady, as he persisted in calling her, usually wore a long, black ulster and made her appearance in the evening.

Now this was satisfactory. In the closet of Mildred Farley at Mrs. Olney's house there was a long, black ulster, and she, as we know, was accustomed to take her work home evenings.

"But she didn't have the ulster on the last time she came, oh, no," continued Peter. "I don't know what it was made the difference, but she looked foine. O, now! well I'm tellin' ye I wouldn't have known her at all, at all, but for her ould brown veil and little handbag. Them wur the same as before and so was the air of her. Not a word nor the divil of a look for one of us; but being the night o' the wedding, she got out o' me head, for sure I had enough else to moind."

Her Handbag.

This last admission was a surprise, but Mr. Gryce was accustomed to surprises, so he kept quite still; the more so that he saw the butler was about to speak, and he always preferred to glean his facts through the questions of other people rather than his own.

"Zat girl here on Miss Gretorex's wedding night? I zink you was mistake, Pierre."

"Mistaken is it I am! when these two hands let her in meself at the back door. It wasn't only here she was, but it's helpin' Miss Gretorex to dress she was, and divil a minute she had to spare, aither, being just in the nick of time to be of any help at all, at all, to her. I didn't see her leave, though."

Mr. Gryce felt his interest cool. Reason told him how improbable it was that this person with all her mysteries, could have been the runaway bride of Julius Molesworth. Even if this house had not been miles distant from the C—— Hotel where he had himself seen her at 7 o'clock of that same night, the great improbability of her fleeing from her own nuptials to assist in this very humble capacity at those of another, was too manifest for his consideration even. Yet because habit was strong in him and habit forbade him to leave a subject till he had exhausted it, he put in a word which he thought must settle the matter.

EVANS DECLARES CLOUDY DAY IS BEST FOR GOLF

By Chick Evans.

TO my mind a gray day gives the ideal golfing weather. This sort of a day frequently precedes or follows rain and there is something in the moist freshness of the atmosphere and absence of glare that is wholly delightful. The clubs at such a time seem unusually light and if they are your own there is a wonderful balance and the blades appear to lie supremely well. The grip also seems perfect because the moisture of the air gets into the leather and gives that feeling of absolute security to the grip. While this feeling in damp weather is true of all grips, it is particularly true of the oiled leather kind.

For some reason, whether it is a quality of the atmosphere or because one's clubs feel so good, the flight of the ball seems steadier and the picture of the little white globe floating in a true and steady line against a dull gray background of sky is a sight to warm the heart of every golfer

Sun's Glare Hampers Player.

On a bright, warm day the glare from the sun is often distressing to the eyes of the golfer, and a round of golf under a midsummer sun leaves him exhausted. But an overcast day is a comfort to the eyes and a strengthening tonic to the whole physique. One's game itself is better, too, for the moist greens hold the iron shots and permit accurate placing.

The game of golf evolved under gray skies, along wide, moist, grassy places by the sea. In Great Britain there are hundreds and hundreds of overcast days. Then, on these matchless courses, in sight and sound of the waves, with the smell of the sea and the moist freshness of its breath in one's nostrils, the game is enjoyed in all of its natural flavor.

Prairie Courses Harder.

We miss, perhaps, a good deal of this subtle enjoyment of the game on our sun-baked courses. When the greens are like lightning and the fairway cracked and seamed iron shots will not stay where put and fine points of the game are impossible of application. But while we miss much, we are spared that frequent British affliction—a downpour of rain in the midst of an interesting match.

I love an overcast day for golf, the gray sky and moist breeze are like an inspiring draught, but heaven preserve me from a rainy day upon the links.

Sports and Such

FAMOUS IN SPORT—VII.

The Fight Manager.

THE FIGHT MANAGER IS AN ever-present example of the value of human endeavor, so long as you can get somebody else to do the endeavoring. It is the mission of the Fight Manager to live by the toil of other men, and, so far as we are a judge, he does his duty. We never heard of one who starved to death.

Managing fighters has all of the advantages of managing a bank, with none of the risks. When a bank gets in bad you can not shake it and pick up another one; but the average Fight Manager continues to blow expensive cigar smoke into the eye of the Sporting Editor long after dozens of fighters he has managed have gone back to sparring for pork chops in the outskirts of Detroit and Cincinnati.

Lest you be thus encouraged to rush blindly into the business, it is our duty to warn you that certain natural gifts are essential. The successful Fight Manager must have tireless vocal chords, a barb-proof hide, a property smile and the imagination of a mining-stock salesman. Also, the gall of a policeman.

It is by no means necessary that he have a fighter. Many men have tried to get by with merely a fighter and have failed. It is much better to know around some muscular misfit with a ten-ounce brain and by persistent talking and "gettin' in with the right guys" convince the public that he is a fighter. A real fighter usually has enough intelligence to want to audit accounts every now and then, and this is a serious handicap to real success in this profession.

But for the kind of man that fits into the profession it is certainly the kind of profession for him to fit into. Two or three thousand per cent profits are common. For instance, Lute McCarty won $4,000 in his last fight, and when every one had gotten his there was $26 left for the estate. That's a business.

Tuesday Society Night at 'Drome

R. F. Maddox Sweepstakes Feature

TUESDAY night has been selected as "society night" at the Motordrome, and a special card has been arranged to delight the large attendance that is expected to witness the events.

The feature event on the program is to be the Robert F. Maddox Sweepstakes, to be run in three heats of six riders each. The award will be on points.

Then there is a three-cornered race among Jock McNeil, Harry Glenn and Harry Swartz, which also promises a lot of excitement.

Here is the program:

Motordrome Purse.

(Heats, 1 mile, final, 2 miles; winner in each heat and second man in fastest heat.)

First Heat—Graves, Swartz and Lockner.

Second Heat—Richards, Luther and Renel.

Third Heat—McNeil, Lewis and Glenn.

Three-Cornered Match Race.

(Three heats, 1 mile, 2 miles and 3 miles.)

First Heat—Glenn, McNeil and Swartz. One mile.

Final Motordrome Purse, two miles.

Second Heat — Three-cornered match race, two miles.

R. F. Maddox Sweepstakes.

(French point system, 10 for first, 6 for second and 2 for third; three heats, 2, 4 and 6 miles.)

First Heat—Two miles: Graves, Richards, Luther, Lewis, Renel and Lockner.

Third Heat—Three-cornered match race, three miles.

Second Heat—Maddox Sweepstakes, four miles.

Third heat—Maddox Sweepstakes, six miles.

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

TWO MINUS ONE.

(Paraphrasing a well-known author.)

Two things greater than all things are,
One is a bush league baseball star
Who smites the ball with a heart of vim
And earns the kale they have paid for him.

P.S.—The other thing doesn't count.

It is said Fred Merkle is the lad who smote John McGraw on the jowl. This shows that ivory never melts.

In golf, which Mr. Merkle is alleged to play every morn, the slogan is: "Keep your eye on the ball." In baseball, which Mr. Merkle is alleged to play every afternoon, the slogan is: "Keep your eye on the base."

Charlie Ebbets is said to be figuring on a new manager, thus showing that he is willing to go to any expense to get something new to dedicate.

One is not surprised to read that Miller Huggins wants an entirely new team. But one might be surprised to read that he is satisfied with the team he has.

Occasionally a youth from California gets a trimming in a tennis tournament. We said occasionally.

Ban Johnson announces that the world's series will open on October 6. The announcement is received with great enthusiasm among ticket speculators.

It is claimed that tickets speculation on the world series has been reduced to a minimum. Figuring thusly, a maximum would be approximately 175 per cent of the gate receipts.

The report that Clark Griffith has offered $100,000 for Ty Cobb leads one to suspect that he is hitting .400 in the hop league.

We note in the newspapers that one Ar Chung, a Chinese lightweight, made one Pat McCarty quit. The A. O. H. will now proceed to start a libel suit.

It is rumored that Freddie Welch has saved $100,000 out of his earnings. This reveals the fact that his earnings were $100,000.05.

THIS PARAGRAPH IS WRITTEN TO IMMORTALIZE ONE HUMID KALLA PASHA, AN HONEST WRESTLER. HUMID IS HONEST ENOUGH TO ADMIT THAT THERE AIN'T NO SUCH THING.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Tommy Walsh, of New Orleans, who looks after the affairs of Joe Mandot, has also taken George "Knockout" Brown, the Chicago middleweight, under his management. He has matched Brown to meet Jack Dillon, the Indianapolis fighter, in a ten-round bout at a show to be brought off at Terre Haute, Ind., on Labor Day.

* * *

Tom McCarey, the fight promoter, has offered to assist Jim Goffroth, the San Francisco promoter, in getting a star bout for his show on Labor Day afternoon. As Champion Willie Ritchie has agreed to fight Freddie Welch at Vancouver on that day, Coffroth has been left without an attraction. McCarey is willing to let Coffroth have Johnny Dundee, Ad Wolgast or any fighter that is under contract to him.

* * *

Jimmy Clabby, the veteran middleweight, is in San Francisco trying to get a match with Bob McAllister. Jim Coffroth is trying to match the pair for a September date. Clabby is one of the real marvels of the boxing game and should be a big hit on the coast.

* * *

Charley White, who defeated Frank Whitney here last week, will meet Johnny Griffiths in a twelve-round bout at Akron, Ohio, on Labor Day. Griffiths recently defeated Young Saylor and also knocked out Phil Brock in three rounds. After this scrap White may go to the coast for a set-to with Harlem Tommy Murphy.

* * *

The San Langford-Joe Jeannette match, which has been hanging fire for some time, is now a settled affair. Tom McCarey has received assurances from both fighters that they will be ready to go the marathon route on October 7.

* * *

If the proposed match between Willie Ritchie and Freddie Welch goes through it will be the first international contest for the lightweight championship since George Lavigne and Dick Burge fought in England a number of years ago.

* * *

It is impossible to any longer overlook Gunboat Smith as a candidate for the heavyweight championship honors. Smith has gone right along whipping every man he has been matched with. His latest victory over Jim Flynn has certainly added a big feather in his cap.

TOMMY LONG AND CHAPMAN PLAY TO-DAY

HERE'S a grain of comfort. The Crackers will be able to send their regular line-up against the Barons this afternoon, when the first game of the series begins at 3:30 o'clock—note the change in the time.

Manager Smith said this morning that Tommy Long had about got over his severe cold and would be in left field this afternoon. Chapman's wrenched ankle has come around in good shape and Harry will be back of the wood.

As to the first slabman to get a whack at the Moles, Bill is going to try out the Gil Price jinx again. Gil has had something on the Barons all season; they haven't seemed able to make a start against the big left-hander, and Gil himself is eager to tackle them in the jump game.

A report from Birmingham announces the purchase of Ed Ery, leading pitcher of the Georgia-Alabama League, who is to report here to-day. "Rube" Evans, the big left-hander, has been suspended for failure to keep in condition, and Bill Prough was called away from the club by a sister's illness, so Molesworth's slab staff is badly in need of bolstering.

The Barons' manager said this morning that Prough was expected on almost any train from the direction of Athens, Ala., and that Ery was being looked for hourly, also. McGilvray is out of the line-up, too. Hardgrove is scheduled to pitch this afternoon.

Crackers Sign 'Goat' Holliday For Next Season

"Goat Holliday, the former crack first baseman of Tech, to-day signed a contract to play with the Crackers next season. He will report next spring.

Holliday was one of the greatest college first sackers in the South two years ago and should prove a good man for the local representatives in the Southern League.

As Joe Agler has been sold to the Jersey City club of the International League, the Crackers will have to unearth a worthy man for the first sack. Holliday may prove the right man.

Thousands at Burial Of Mine War Victims

CALUMET, MICH., Aug. 18.—A big public funeral for the two copper strikers killed in a fight Thursday night between Deputy Sheriffs and strikers was held here yesterday. A special train brought the bodies here from the Champion mine and thousands of strikers from every part of the copper district attended the services.

HANLON GETS PLAYERS.

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—E. J. Hanlon, president of the Sioux City Western League club, obtained from the Detroit Americans the outfielder and pitcher he needed for his team, it was learned today. Hanlon's visit here was brief and he did not give out the names of his new players.

JEFFRIES 'DOPE STORY' GAINS NEW HEARING

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—The direct statement that James J. Jeffries, after his defeat by Jack Johnson at Reno, sought and secured proof that he had been drugged before the battle with the negro was made in a signed article written by a New York sporting editor and published in an evening paper to-day.

The statement follows, in part:

"Jeffries hired one of the greatest detective agencies in the world to run down the facts. The details he gathered make up a complete story of the most sordid plot that ever turned fair sport into a sure-thing gamble. Possibly Johnson would have won in any case, but the clique that handled the betting made it a certainty by drugging Jeffries with the help of men who were in his confidence and who had the run of his camp. They cleaned up a fortune through betting commissioners stationed in many cities. In Paris alone they wagered $24,000 and won $40,000. In Reno and San Francisco and Los Angeles and New York their gains went into the hundreds of thousands.

"The 'tip' for the big killing was received by the waiting commissioners less than 24 hours before the fight when the gamblers knew that Jeffries was 'safe.'

"The grst plot was broached in a back room; the last man necessary to its success accented his part in a meeting in a Reno alley two nights before the fight, after having learned that he could make no more money with Jeffries and that he could win thousands by turning Judas. One man whose available cash was also secretly wagered on Johnson smilingly posed as a friendly adviser of Jeffries during the fight."

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

Intense rivalry in Empire League cities is in evidence now in every game played. Charges and counter charges are being hurled at first one team, then another, while the president of the league gets his full share, too.

* * *

Babe Wilder, the wonder of the league, has lost the last three games he pitched for Cordele. The losses were not his fault, as errors behind him let his opponents score enough to win.

* * *

Brouthers, playing in the field for Americus, came mighty near pulling off a fatal play for his team recently. He tried to get a stone in center field, thinking it was the ball which had just been hit safely. A fellow fielder saw the mistake and nipped the real article up in time to save a run.

* * *

Left Fielder Powers, of the Waycross team, has returned to Jacksonville. He was declared ineligible and Waycross had nothing to do but let him go. He is a fleet fielder and has made a neat record during his stay with Waycross.

* * *

Ten victories to one defeat is the pitching record held by Dacey, of the Americus team. He was signed originally as a fielder but has developed into a pitcher as good as the best in the league.

* * *

Outfielder Schuyler, of the Brunswick team, is climbing rapidly in batting. He hits the ball hard regularly.

* * *

Day came back strong against the Valdosta team after they knocked him out of the box and won his game with ease for Thomasville. His shut-out record in the Empire is a good one.

* * *

Otto Jordan seems good on picking up good players. He has landed Wise, a catcher, and from the way the fellow plays he is slated for faster company. Gordon and Vaughan, pitchers, will both land in the Sally and perhaps higher. Gordon has already gone to Macon and ought to make good. And the Valdosta team has others just as reliable.

* * *

Umpire baiting in the league has ruined a number of games recently and the fans generally are in hopes of changes before another season arrives that will make this impossible. Attacks on umpires by players have received only minor treatment.

* * *

By winning four straight games, two from the league leaders, Waycross climbed out of the cellar position for the first time since early in July, when the second half of the season started.

* * *

Added to his fielding ability Doc Fenton, playing center for Waycross, has started hitting at a terrific clip. He got two home runs in succession and four hits in succession the next day. His put-out record is eight for one game, and has no equal in the league.

* * *

Red Stiles, who started the season with Waycross and went to Thomasville when he was released, has been suspended for the balance of the season at his own request.

* * *

"Handy" Anderson, who is playing third for Waycross, has developed into a remarkably fine player for a youngster. He joined Waycross from a school team, and made good with a rush. He plays short splendidly and is at home in the field. His bunting is a feature and he seldom fails to reach first when he gets one placed to his notion.

* * *

Stewart, the new pitcher with Brunswick, has a cross-fire ball that is mighty hard to hit. He has worked it with success on the best batters and fooled them every time. His brother, playing with Americus, is also able to work some deceptive balls over the plate.

FRANK GOTCH RETIRES AGAIN FOR STEENTH TIME

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Aug. 18.—Frank Gotch, greatest of all wrestlers, is through with the mat forever. In a letter to the sporting editor of The Minneapolis Daily News, received today, Gotch says:

"While the Minnesota State fair people made me an excellent offer to wrestle Zbyszko on September 5, I have turned it down, as I will all other propositions to return to the game.

"I have enough money, am happily married, and will spend the balance of my days with the people of Humboldt, Iowa, which means more to me than living in a mansion in New York City or in a castle in England. I shall always be an interested follower of the wrestling game, but will be satisfied to sit on the outside of the ring in the future."

Organize Dixie League Club Here

New Circuit Planned for South

APPLICATION for a charter for the Atlanta Baseball Club of the Dixie League was filed this morning in the office of the County Clerk, the petition being signed by the following incorporators:

Guy Hawkins and M. C. Kiser, of Atlanta; Carl Camp, of Fulton County, and Judge W. J. Bacon and H. N. Pharr, of Memphis.

W. W. Hood, local attorney for the club, which now is in the process of organization, spoke very highly of the prospects and aims of the new league.

"It has the proper men back of it, for one thing," Mr. Hood said. "Then it has the cream of the Southern cities. Here is the list: Atlanta, Memphis, New Orleans, Birmingham, Chattanooga, Nashville, Little Rock and Shreveport.

"With the exception of the last two cities, all now are members of the Southern League, with established rating as baseball towns. Little Rock and Shreveport have held Southern League franchises, and are eager to get regular league baseball again."

Besides being an incorporator of the Atlanta club, Judge Bacon is president of the new league. He is a man of much prominence and influence in Tennessee, and states plainly that the league has ample financial backing to launch its circuit next season without the need of placing any stock with outsiders, though it is thought best that each club shall be controlled by men living in its own city.

Application is to be made to the National Commission for affiliation under the present national agreement, which would give the new league a recognized standing at once. If that is denied, however, the league will proceed just the same.

In a statement issued to-day, Judge Bacon asserted that it was not the plan of the Dixie League to fight the Southern, but rather to arrange its schedule so as to furnish continuous baseball in the six cities which would have two clubs. At the end of each season an All-Southern championship is suggested, similar to the world's series, between the champion club of the Southern and that of the Dixie League.

Another meeting of the directors of the league will be called within 30 days, by which time the various local clubs are expected to be well organized.

TINKER READY TO QUIT JOB AS REDS' MANAGER

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—The repeated rumors that all was not well in the affairs of the Cincinnati camp and that the days of Joe Tinker as manager were numbered, were partly confirmed to-day.

The hustling leader of the Reds admitted he was ready to quit. The policies of Garry Herrmann, president of the club, does not jibe with his own, he said, and unless his superior was willing to reconstruct some of his pet theories the team would soon be under a new leader.

Tinker's declaration to-day was caused by the receipt of a telegram from Herrmann notifying Joe that he had "violated baseball law" by airing their differences.

* * *

"I REALIZE that I must take a stand with regard to the management of the club, or step down and out," said the Red manager. "The showing of the team has been a great disappointment to all concerned and I have held off because I felt that I am not a success myself, so far as I have gone. Since the club has not been making money I felt that it was up to me to stand for some things that I would not otherwise have endured."

* * *

THE selling outright of his players to minor leagues was what caused the break, according to Tinker, who felt that he should be allowed to make profitable trades with the other National League teams.

"I would rather go out to my fruit farm in Oregon," he added, "than to try to handle a club when I am not backed up by the owners. I shall not let another player go unless I know just what the deal is."

GRAND CIRCUIT MEET OPENS AT CHARLESTON NEXT WEEK

CHARLESTON, ILL., Aug. 18.—The Eastern Illinois Grand Racing Circuit opens the season with a program at Charleston next week, the dates being August 19 to 23. There will be three events of $1,000 purses each and ten events of $400 purses, assuring an attractive program. The second week of this circuit was awarded to Urbana, the dates being August 26 to 29. Entries to both meetings have been satisfactory.

PITCHER COMSTOCK SOLD TO DETROIT FOR $5,000

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Aug. 18.—Pitcher Ralph Comstock, of Minneapolis, who has been doing sensational work in the American Association, to-day was sold to the Detroit Americans for $5,000. Catcher Rondeau and a pitcher to be named later. Comstock had been reported sold to Comiskey's club, but there was some hitch in the deal.

Barons Loaded for Grouch Fight

Next Series an Elimination Bout

By O. B. Keeler.

BESTOWING a parting and futile imprecation upon the Pepper Kids, Atlanta fandom will now direct its clamorous attention to the advancing Barons, here for three games.

Indications point to another grouch fight.

Moley still might be considered a pennant contender, if you are good at considering. The reason Moley isn't more of a p. c. is because the Crackers licked him a straight series in Slagville recently.

So you may see quite easily the esteem and affection Moley would hold for our crowd, who also can be considered a pennant possibility—granting for the second time that the consideration faculty is working well.

* * *

THE approaching combat, therefore, takes on the status of an elimination bout for the Hope Championship. If the Barons obtain the measure of revenge they naturally are seeking, the stuff is absolutely off for us, barring miracles.

And miracles do not happen in baseball as frequently as one might suppose.

On the other hand, if Messrs. Moley, Prough, et al, again fail to come through, M. P. & Co. are entirely to the frittz, so far as 1913 is concerned.

And as for our own little outlook, that depends very largely on what is happening to the Gulls.

* * *

OF course, as long as Mique Finn can keep his justly celebrated $30 ball club steaming along at anything approaching its present clip, it really doesn't make a blamed bit of difference whether the Crackers win double-headers and things or lose them.

That is the strategic disadvantage of being seven or eight laps back of the pacemaker.

ON the whole, we are beginning to frog up a little stuff about the prospects for 1914—proclaiming loudly, nevertheless, our entire willingness to die game on the platform as adopted by the 1913 convention.

* * *

THAT Chattanooga series, now, fell in on us at a thoroughly unfortunate place.

Chapman was injured and the services of the speedy and hard-hitting Tommy Long were lost after the first indecisive struggle.

* * *

That of itself would make an acceptable alibi, if this were the open season for alibis.

Except, in that case, the Pepper Kids could put witnesses on the stand to testify to their own dismemberment and the fact that they had so few pitchers that the huge Pole had to be unloaded three times in one series.

That, however, is strictly an alibi with a flareback. If the full staff of Chattanooga hurlers could have been sent against the Crackers in order, and the Pole left in the lumber pile, it would have been an agreeable surprise for the Town Boys.

That's the kind of a pest the Pole is.

* * *

WELL, here are the Barons, and, as stated somewhere up ahead near the baggage car of this alleged train of thought, the meeting is in the nature of a grouch fight.

That usually makes business good—also baseball. No man full of red corpuscles cares to see a baseball game played as if between roommates.

Then, too, Bill Smith's birthday comes along next Wednesday, and there is going to be a little party at Ponce DeLeon in his honor. There will be a band, and about nine thousands guests are expected—if it doesn't rain.

This will be a good chance for the great body of fans who like Bill and his work to come out and let him know about it.

LARGE CROWD SEES YOUNG AND WILLARD WORK OUT

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 18.—Packed to capacity training camp crowds saw "White Hope" Jess Willard and "Bull" Young, matched to box twenty rounds before the Pacific A. C. at Vernon next Friday night, go through with their work-outs yesterday afternoon.

Leach Cross, matched to box Mexican Joe Rivers on Labor Day, returned from Catalina Island yesterday and will immediately open his camp at Doyle's resort, Vernon. Rivers will start work to-morrow. The local boy is to select a camp site at one of the beaches.

EARLY BASEBALL MEETING.

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—The annual meeting of the baseball league will be held here in October instead of December, according to B. B. Johnson. The earlier date was chosen on account of the world tour of the Chicago club.

A. A. C. WILL HAVE WATER SPORTS NEXT SATURDAY

There will be a lot of splashing, plain and fancy, at East Lake next Saturday when the second annual "water sports day" is to be observed by the Atlanta Athletic Club.

The water sports committee now is at work on the program, on which there are to be nine events, including swimming, canoeing, boat racing and fancy diving.

A dinner-dance will top off the afternoon's diversions.

JEANNETTE AND LANGFORD TO CLASH IN 10-ROUND GO

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Sam Langford, the Boston "Tar Baby," and Joe Jeannette, the Hoboken heavyweight, have signed articles to box ten rounds at Madison Square Garden the latter part of September. The match was closed yesterday.

PALZER TO MEET MORAN AT NEW YORK NEXT MONTH

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Al Palzer, the big Iowa farmer, plans to celebrate his return to form again with a bout with Frank Moran, of Pittsburg, at the St. Nicholas Club here on September 3. The Pittsburg heavy has improved steadily of late and believes he can give the mastodonic Western a very interesting evening.

Both fighters expect to start training shortly for the bout.

CHAMPAIGN WINS FLAG IN ILLINOIS-MISSOURI LEAGUE

CHAMPAIGN, ILL., Aug. 18.—Champaign won the pennant of the four-club race of the Illinois-Missouri League, after a brush with Lincoln, which was only decided by the final game of the season. As Lincoln won the six-club race last year a post-season series will be played between Champaign and Lincoln. Champaign played a doubleheader with Streator as the season's windup, winning both games, 6 to 1 and 2-1.

DUNDEE AND AD WILL NOT BOX BEFORE THEIR BOUT

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 18.—Ad Wolgast and Johnny Dundee have telegraphed that they will live up to their articles of agreement with Promoter T. J. McCarey and will not enter the ring until they face each other here on admission day.

Dundee returned from San Francisco yesterday morning and Wolgast is to follow inside the next few days.

"My alleged match with Tommy Murphy was only to bluff Wolgast out of fighting young Azevedo," said Manager "Scotty" Monteith. "We had no intention of breaking our contract. We do not want anybody else to get a chance at Ad before us. Dundee will stop Wolgast inside the twenty round limit."

MEAT IS GOING UP AND UP AND UP

Experts Say Country Will Have Worst Shortage of Beef in Its History.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18—This country will experience next winter the greatest shortage of beef in its history. Prices, which already have advanced 25 to 50 per cent in a year, are to be 10 to 13 per cent higher by January 1. Meat will sell at unheard of figures.

The representative of a big packer in Chicago said yesterday: "Forty cents a pound for the choice cuts seem a certainty, 45 cents in a probability, and even 50 cents a possibility before spring."

George L. McCarthy, proprietor of The National Provisioner, said today that the stock population in the United States is more depleted at present than it has been at any previous time in ten years. That in itself, Mr. McCarthy said, is sufficient cause for very high retail prices. But the drought in Kansas, Oklahoma and the Southwest has aggravated the situation bad before, till it may now be called alarming.

Sky-High Prices by Midwinter.

The expert buyer for Richard Webber, a butcher with an extensive business in New York, didn't hesitate to say that prices are going sky-high by midwinter. The average price paid by the laborer for beef to-day, he said, is 16 cents a pound. The same cuts will cost 18 cents or more in a few months.

The same authority predicted that the average price of sirloin steaks will creep up 3 cents in as many months, while the average price of porterhouse steaks will advance 4 to 5 cents in the same period.

The corn-killing drought in Kansas and neighboring States has deprived the cattle-raising sections of feed for their stock. Fodder remains, but the corn itself, necessary to fatten the steers for market, will have to be shipped into sections of country naturally grain exporters, at an expense that will preclude the idea of satisfactory profit by cattle raisers at anything near the present prices.

For ten days a steady rush of cattle to the big stock markets of the Middle West has been in progress. The raisers can't afford to hold and feed the cattle. In many instances, cows are being sent to market in such numbers that the generation of calves due next spring will be much less than the average.

Rushed to the Slaughter Houses.

Cattle receipts in the Western markets first rose above the normal when the hot weather killed the pasturage. Carload after carload of steers went to Chicago and Kansas City. The general movement to the slaughter houses is still in progress. In the first three days of the present week 129,000 cattle were received at the Western markets, nearly as many as in the entire week a year ago.

The same condition to a certain extent holds true in the hog market, and receipts have been nearly doubled since the drought.

The general situation is about as bad in the East. Mr. McCarthy said that farmers over a great part of the East are selling cattle just now that they would be holding had the hay crop been up to the standard.

Live stock prices are naturally slumping while the markets are loaded with stock. But in spite of the fact that steers and hogs are costing the packers less than at any time for several months no reduction in the wholesale price of meats is announced, and the housewife has obtained no benefits because of the present abnormal conditions in the markets.

The drought, according to stock men, will result in immense profits for the packers because of their ability to buy now and when the cattle raisers are at a disadvantage and to set prices this winter when there is a scarcity in the cattle receipts.

To The Young Expectant Mother

Women of Experience Advise the Use of Mother's Friend.

There is a certain degree of trepidation in the minds of most women in regard to the subject of motherhood. The longing to possess is often contradicted by the inherent fear of a period of distress.

But there need be no such dread in view of the fact that we have a most noble remedy in what is known as Mother's Friend. This is an external application that has a wonderful influence and control over the muscular tissues of the abdomen. By its daily use the muscles, cords, tendons and ligaments all gently expand without the slightest strain; there is no pain, no nausea, no nervousness; what was dreaded as a severe physical ordeal becomes a calm, serene, joyful anticipation that has its impress such as our foremost teachers of Eugenics are striving to drill into the minds of the present generation.

In almost every community there are women who have used Mother's Friend, and they are the ones that recovered quickly, conserved their health and strength to thus preside over families cherished by every rule of physiology and the history of successful men and women to repeat the story of greater merit.

Mother's Friend is prepared after the formula of a noted family doctor by the Bradfield Regulator Co., 138 Lamar Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Write them for their instructive book for expectant mothers. You will find Mother's Friend on sale by all drug stores at $1.00 a bottle.

Burglars Get $600 Worth of Jewelry In Home; Rob Store

Burglars broke into the home of J. W. Russell, No. 3 Lafayette Drive, Ansley Park, Saturday night and stole $600 worth of jewelry. The department store of Morris Brothers, No. 137 Decatur street, was entered through the skylight and a large amount of clothing was stolen.

The robbery at the Russell home was discovered about 11 o'clock, when the family returned. The rooms on the upper floor had been ransacked. Entrance had been gained through a window. Among the stolen articles was Mrs. Russell's wedding ring and two fine watches.

In breaking into the Morris store the burglars were compelled to cross the roofs of seven buildings. They gained access to the roof of the first one from the Washington street viaduct.

New Boll Worm Invades Carolina

GREENVILLE, S. C., Aug. 18.—From Dunklin Township, in this county, come alarming reports of the invasion in that section of a small worm which is said to be playing havoc by devouring cotton bolls.

Large fields of cotton, it is said, are infested with the worm, and the farmers are greatly exercised. They are unable to account for the presence of the worms, and they say they are the first of the kind ever seen in this section.

The worms are rapidly spreading over the lower section of the county, and it is feared that unless something is quickly done to stop the ravages of the pest the crop in that section will be seriously damaged.

Underwood Urged to Run for the Senate

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 18.—Friends of Congressman Oscar W. Underwood, leader in the House of Representatives, are urging him to become a candidate for the United States Senate in the elections of next year, to take effect in 1915.

Even with the positive announcement that he is going to run to the very last, made by Congressman Richmond Pearson Hobson, who has been in the canvass for some time and is still running, it is believed that it would come to pass that Congressman Underwood would have no opposition.

Broker Tries Suicide; Saved by Pulmotor

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Harry Lattimer Bloodgood, broker and society man, attempted suicide by gas, but was saved from death by the use of a pulmotor.

Bloodgood was found in his home with his face covered by a large tin funnel attached to the end of a tube through which gas was flowing. He was seemingly lifeless. The pulmotor soon revived him.

Bloodgood is a brother-in-law of Clara Bloodgood, the actress who killed herself in Baltimore a few years ago.

Mount Zion Plans Big Camp Meeting

GRIFFIN, Aug. 18.—A coming event for the next week that is attracting unusual attention is the opening of the annual camp meeting at the old historic Mount Zion camp ground next Friday night.

Camp meetings have been held annually at that camp ground since 1832, excepting the years of the Civil War.

U. S. Gunboat Nearly Wrecked by Typhoon

SHANGHAI, Aug. 18.—The United States gunboat Wilmington had a narrow escape from destruction in the harbor here to-day during a typhoon. Her anchor began to drag and was going toward shore when rescued by a powerful tug.

The storm did great damage to shipping.

Negro Slayer Taken To Macon for Safety

MACON, Aug. 18.—Doc Mathis, a negro charged with having shot and killed R. L. Jossey, a prominent Lee County planter, was brought to Macon yesterday and lodged in the Bibb County jail for safekeeping. Threats of lynching had been made.

He was trapped at his home at Williamsburg, and fired at the arresting officers several times while they were approaching his house.

OBITUARY

The funeral of William F. Robinson, who died at a hospital Sunday, will be held at the residence, 220 Greenwich avenue, West End, at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon. He was 56 years old, and is survived by his wife, five sons, R. L., W. B., C. H., Angus and John Robinson; four daughters, Mrs. J. J. Ennomoser, Misses Mae and Lucile Robinson, of Atlanta, and Mrs. E. C. Henderson, of Jacksonville, Fla.; his mother, Mrs. Martha A. Powell, of Central, S. C.; one sister, Mrs. F. B. Morgan, of the same place, and two brothers, T. A. Robinson, of Winslow, Ala., and J. F. Robinson, of Atlanta. Interment at Westview.

J. S. Brooks, a veteran of the Civil War, died at the Soldiers' Home Sunday. He was 77 years old. The body is at Poole's chapel, pending funeral arrangements.

The funeral of Beulah B. Jones, infant child of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Jones, who died Saturday, was held from the home Monday morning. Interment at Hollywood.

Benjamin E. Dearybury, 2-year-old infant of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Dearybury, 72 Spring street, died at a private sanitarium at 2 o'clock Monday morning. The body was removed to Poole's and funeral announcement will be made later.

WIVES OF DIGGS AND CAMINETTI WILL TESTIFY

Women To Be Asked to Tell of Their Knowledge of Husbands' Elopement

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 18.—Interest in the trial of Maury I. Diggs on the charge of violating the white slave law will be given fresh impetus to-morrow, when Mrs. Diggs and the wife of F. Drew Caminetti will take the stand as witnesses for the defense.

Mrs. Diggs, who is a handsome, dark-eyed woman, was expected to be called as the first witness. Last Friday she appeared in court with her young daughter, Evelyn, and was one of the most observed persons that sat facing the bench presided over by Federal Judge Van Fleet.

Mrs. Diggs and Mrs. Caminetti will be asked by the defense to tell of their knowledge of the relations between their husbands and Marsha Warrington and Lola Norris.

It is the contention of the attorneys for the defense that one of the reasons for the flight of Diggs and Caminetti to Reno with the two girls was that they believed their wives were about to have them prosecuted by the officials of the juvenile court of Sacramento. It is maintained by the defense that Mrs. Caminetti told her husband that she had complained to Judge Hughes, of the juvenile court of Sacramento, about Diggs and Caminetti in an effort to induce them to sever their relations with Miss Warrington and Miss Norris.

The Government contends that Diggs and Caminetti were reckless debauchers who had decided to go to Reno to desert their wives and induce the girls to lead immoral lives, n violation of the Mann act.

Promoter in Jail, Oil Wells Are Idle

GADSDEN, Aug. 18.—The conviction of E. C. Drew, the Fort Payne oil well promoter, will, it is believed, bring to a close the drilling for oil in DeKalb County.

Nobody appeared to have much faith in oil being found there except Drew. With five years in the penitentiary confronting him, Drew still contends that he will continue his drilling and that eventually he will find oil. But, no matter whether oil is found or not, Drew is held guilty of using the mails to defraud, first because the company in which he sought to sell stock was not regularly organized and second because he applied the money to other purposes than that for which it was intended.

Patten, Again in Pit, Cleans Up $500,000

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—James A. Patten, whose deals in grain and cotton in the last decade have attracted world-wide attention, is once more the central figure in a speculation that is causing the corn pit on the Board of Trade to boil with excitement.

Mr. Patten started to buy corn three weeks ago, when the first reports that hot weather and drought were damaging the crop began to come in. His paper profits at the present time are said to be at least $500,000.

'Cattle Queen' Freed Leases All 'Movies'

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS, COLO., Aug. 18.—In celebration of her acquittal on the charge of "rustling" cattle Anna Bernard, known as the "Cattle Queen," leased all the moving picture houses in the town for the night and treated her friends to screened thrills.

FAMOUS STARS NEW TO SOUTH BOOKED HERE

Manager George of the Atlanta Announces List—Season Opens With Musical Show Sept. 3.

The first harbinger of the new theatrical season has reached Atlanta in the person of Homer C. George, manager of the Atlanta Theater. Returning from his vacation, he stopped by the New York office of Klaw & Erlanger and crowded his grip with news of coming shows. The Shuberts and the Frohmans will be well represented.

The attractive playhouse will open with a predominance of musical shows as usual. According to Mr. George, the first breaths of fall that come with September nights are not sufficiently bracing for anything "heavy," and the first productions will be bright and breezy.

"Mary's Lamb" will be the opener, September 3. "Little Miss Fix-it," "who" caused much talk in New York, will be the second, and "The Merry Countess," one of the big hits of the Shuberts, will come third. An early big attraction will be Otis Harlan in a Savage production of "Little Boy Blue."

Favorites Are Coming.

In the galaxy of stars who are to perform to Atlanta audiences Mr. George points out a number of new ones to the South. Of course many favorites will return. To the trained theatergoer no announcement could produce a keener thrill than the statement that Rose Stahl, who delighted so many in the "Chorus Lady," will come early in her new play, "Maggie Pepper," and that William Faversham will appear in an all-star cast of "Julius Caesar."

But to take them as they come—Mr. George announces the tentative program in this wise:

Miss Annie Russell, three nights, the minstrels of Al G. Field, followed a month later by a reunion of the Dockstader and Primrose shows. In [illegible] come [illegible] George Evans and then Neil O'Brien.

Big Scenic Plays.

May Irwin is coming in November with her big Cohan Theater success of last season. Robert Hilliard will appear as Detective William J. Burns in a thrilling drama. Early in December Klaw & Erlanger will present that wonderful scenic play, "Ben Hur," for a week.

"Fine Feathers," a new Eugene Walters success, will be here in December, as well as the memorial players from Stratford-on-Avon, producing the drama as it was in Shakespeare's time.

And fascinating Mme. Nazimova is coming in "Bella Donna," and the wonderful Mme. Pavlowa, the Russian dancer, with "her special permit from the Czar" to leave that country.

Henry Miller is coming in "The Rainbow" and Otis Skinner in "Kismet," said to be his greatest success.

And one of the most important of all the announcements is that the unusual play, "Damaged Goods," by the famous French dramatist, Briex, will be shown. It probably created more comment than any play presented in New York last season, its first production being semi-private, under the auspices of a medical organization.

Other popular plays booked are: "Within the Law," "Ready Money," "Romance," "Peg o' My Heart," "The Conspiracy," "Little Women," "Blue Bird," "The Girl of My Dreams," "Broadway Jones," "The Governor's Lady," "Stop Thief," and others.

Adrianople Guarded By 400,000 Moslems

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 18.—War Minister Enver Bey is hurling an army of 400,000 men into Thrace to defend Adrianople against the Bulgarians. Representatives of the Porte to-day declared that Europe's demand that Turkey give up Adrianople to the Bulgarians will be rejected.

Turkish soldiers have obtained the port of Dedeaghatch.

PLAN ALL-DAY SINGING.

VIDALIA, Aug. 18.—The Toombs County singing convention leaders are making plans for a big all-day singing scheduled for the fifth Sunday in August.

Drawing for Last 2,000,000 Acres U.S. Lands Is Announced

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Two million acres, the best wheat land on earth, according to James J. Hill, will be distributed to settlers by the United States September 23 at a public drawing by number at Glasgow, Mont. The land consists of a tract 80 by 40 miles and is known as the Fort Peck Reservation. It is the last Government reservation to be divided by Uncle Sam.

The tract borders on the Missouri River and formerly was the property of the Sioux Indians. Of the acreage to be allotted 487,000 acres are agricultural land for which applicants will be charged a nominal price of from $5 to $7 an acre, and 738,000 acres is in grazing land, for which $2.50 to $3 will be charged. Applications for the land will be received from September 1 to 20.

Fear Kept Man Off Cars All His 83 Years

LIZTON, IND., Aug. 18.—William Northcutt, aged 85, is dead, after spending his whole life without ever once riding in a railroad train, automobile or street car.

He claimed they were too fast and too dangerous.

3 NEGROES SLAIN; 20 OTHERS JAILED

With three negroes killed and a fourth seriously wounded in free-for-all cutting scrapes Sunday, twenty negroes are under arrest at police headquarters, two charged with murder and the remainder charged with fighting, frequenting blind tigers, and a host of misdemeanors.

The two against whom the charge of murder has been placed are B. C. Smith and Ed Smith, alias Ed Campbell. The third murderer, who is still at large, is said by the police to be Phoney Johnson, a negro desperado with a long police record.

Ed Smith, while resisting arrest after shooting Peter Jackson at 72 James street, was shot in the hand by Officer Palmer. B. C. Smith was captured after a hard chase by Officers Davis and Fielder and Louis Castro.

Most of the trouble started in blind tigers throughout the city. Johnson, after getting drunk, went to the home of Munch Harris, 282 Butler street, and stabbed him to death. B. C. Smith killed John Henry Wilkerson at 80 Decatur street about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and half an hour later Peter Jackson was shot by Ed Smith.

SLIT SKIRT HEALTH AID, SAYS EXPERT

DENVER, Aug. 18.—Wilbur F. Cannon, former pure food commissioner, has rushed to the defense of the X-ray and slit skirts with these five reasons:

The X-ray and slit skirts permit circulation of air about the body.

The absence of many underskirts relieves the strain on the hips and prevents kidney trouble.

Absence of the usual amount of clothes makes frequent bathing necessary and frequent bathing opens the pores and makes the bath quite healthy.

Absence of many clothes makes the body movement freer, thus saving energy.

There is less labor required in the care of clothes, such as washing, ironing and mending.

VOTE ON COURT CHANGE.

JACKSON, Aug. 18.—The City Court of Jackson was amended by the last session of the general assembly, subject to a ratification of the people. The matter will be voted on September 3. As amended, the Solicitor will receive a salary instead of fees.

BIG CAMP MEETING CLOSES.

JACKSON, Aug. 18.—Sunday night marked the closing session of the Indian Springs Holiness camp meeting, and what was generally declared to have been the most successful meeting in the history of the association.

Lungs Were Affected; Now in Good Health

The makers of Eckman's Alterative, a remedy for Throat and Lung Troubles, do not claim that it will restore every one to perfect health, but so many have voluntarily testified it saved their lives that all who have this dread disease should investigate and try it. It should stop the night sweats, reduce fever, promote appetite and in very many cases prolong life. Read what it accomplished in this case:

Catherine Ave. and Ascot Place,
Queen's Court, L. I.

"Gentlemen: In the year 1908 I was taken with a heavy cold and a nasty cough and went to several doctors, including a specialist. Their medicines failed. My brother then recommended Eckman's Alterative to me very highly. It is now nearly two years since I first took it. I am now well and I dare say that I would have been buried long ago if it had not been for Eckman's Alterative. I wish to thank you for the Godsend to me. Wherever I go I highly recommend the Alterative, as I owe my life to it."

(Affidavit) JOS. J. TROESCHER.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all of Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

MAKE MONEY WITH POULTRY.

AMERICAN POULTRY is a magazine devoted entirely to helping earnest men and women make a financial success of poultry raising. Its staff of writers is composed entirely of those who have made a practical, instead of theoretical, success of poultry farming, and who are glad to pass on the results of their hard-earned experience to AMERICAN POULTRY readers. There are many pitfalls in the path of the novice which may be entirely avoided by those who will follow the teachings set forth in this magazine. It fully explains how to make a start, how to construct houses, coops, and other devices, how to get a large egg yield, how to cure and prevent disease, how to exhibit, how to get the top price for eggs, how to use incubators and hundreds of other points which every one wishes to know. It explains the famous secret system through which poultrymen have become rich and afterwards solid for hundreds of dollars. AMERICAN POULTRY is a large, handsomely illustrated, monthly journal, well printed on fine paper, and should be found on file in the home of every poultry lover. No beginner in the poultry business should think of being without it. It will save him many times the small subscription price. The advanced poultryman will also find it of great value; the articles being varied in their scope.

SPECIAL OFFER. The regular price of AMERICAN POULTRY is 50c per year, but in order to introduce it to several thousand new readers, we will, for a short time, give a large, 200-page poultry book, which is a complete guide in the poultry business, absolutely free to every one sending 50c for a yearly subscription or $1.00 for a three-year-subscription to AMERICAN POULTRY. A trial six months' subscription (without book) will be sent for 25c. Never has so much been offered for so small a sum. Advantage of this offer should be taken at once.

SEEDS AND POULTRY SUPPLIES.

BOTH PHONES 2568.

IF OUR CUSTOMERS living on the North and South Sides place their orders before 9 o'clock and the ones in Inman Park and West End before 2 o'clock, they will be delivered the same day the orders are given. We are trying to give the very best service possible, and if our customers will bear in mind the hours that our deliveries leave the store it will insure prompt service.

IT IS ABSOLUTELY necessary for chickens to have green food during the winter. This can easily be supplied if you will plant out a small patch of rye and rape. They both grow very rapidly and will furnish an abundance of green food all the winter. Now is the time to plant.

THIS IS THE MOULTING SEASON and that means that the hens should be fed a good tonic. Pratt's Poultry Regulator and Conkey's Laying Tonic insure a quick and complete moult, and that means plenty of eggs during the fall and winter, when they bring the high prices; 25c, 50c and $1 package.

Medium-Sized Acreage Tracts

ALL of us know the profit that is usually made from acreage.

It is almost a conceded fact that if a person owns good acreage, he has a sure profit in it sooner or later. When we think of acreage propositions, we think of lots of land, and naturally lots of money, because the usual acreage transaction involves a great deal of money. The demand for good, close-in acreage for subdivision purposes is increasing every day. A trip to the outskirts of the city in any direction you choose to take will convince you of this fact. We are going to offer a tract of about 100 acres, between Decatur and East Lake, which we have cut up into five, ten and fifteen-acre tracts. The price and terms on these tracts make it possible for almost anybody to handle them.

TEXAS WEATHER PUZZLES TRADE

Ring Unloads Cotton Freely on Lone Star State Rains—Big Interests Buy on Hot Weather.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Trading was extremely active at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 14 to 17 points lower than the closing quotations of Saturday. Reports were coming from private houses that light rains had occurred throughout Oklahoma and Texas late Saturday. This, coupled with extremely weak cables, was responsible for the lower opening. The market was without suport at the decline. The ring was apparently long and were throwing cotton over from the general selling that was going on. Wall Street and many of the large spot houses were also noticeable sellers. Liverpool was aid to be down on the rains reported from Texas and was sold from this side. After half an hour of trading prices showed further recessions of 3 to 5 points from the initial range.

During the forenoon the market developed a better tone through rather free buying from certain strong interests, based on special telegraphic reports on Texas rainfull and weather conditions, which was considered rather bullish. Price movement ranged a few points better than the opening range.

Strong sources fought the market on the high temperatures in Oklahoma and Texas and wires received reporting considerable damage by the continued drouth and extremely hot weather. The feeling altogether is far more bullish than it basis en for sometime past. Memphis is said to have been a good buyer in this market to-day also a good many other Southern points. Those inclined to the bear side are of the opinion that should good value come over the west that we may expect a considerable decline. Prices, however, were held within a narrow range during the afternoon session.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 10 to 13 points from the final quotations of Saturday.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: August, 11.53; October, 11.06; December, 11.04; January, 11.05.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 18.—Werther developments over Sunday were favorable, as there was precipitation in combination with cooler weather over the greater part of the western States, while rainfall was light in the eastern half of the belt. Publications are for further precipitation, particularly in the southern and western half of Texas. It will get cooler generally over the northern half of the belt. Weekly crop reports from Alabama are very good; all say complaints are very few; plant has maintained its vigor is well fruited, no unusual shedding, free movement expected about the first week in September.

Liverpool came in about 5 points lower than due. Spots 6 points lower; sales 7,000 bales. Cables continue to report slack business. First trades here were at a decline of about 16 points, encountering very good demand near 11c, which steadied prices. A disposition seems to prevail to reduce short lines on the opinion that relief in the way of rains too late to affect Bureau returns, and that it might be safer to wait around 11c for that publication and the storm period.

Westinghouse Electric Early Feature—Market Shows Considerable Strength.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Westinghouse showed the best gain at the opening of the stock market to-day, with an advance of 1⅞. After opening at 72½, this issue climbed to 74⅛. The tone was strong at the beginning and most stocks made gains. Among them were Amalgamated Copper ⅜, United States Steel common ½, Union Pacific ⅝, Southern Pacific ⅛, Missouri Pacific ¾, Canadian Pacific ⅝, Erie ½, St Paul ½, Chino Copper ½, American Telegraph and Telephone ⅛, American Can ¼.

Reading began at 168⅞ for a slight gain, but later receded. New York, New Haven and Hartford, which closed Saturday at par, opened at 95¾.

The curb market was steady.

Americans in London held above New York parity. Canadian Pacific in London gained on strength of reports that storms in the Northwest had not done so much damage to railroad property as first reported.

What Do You Suppose Interests Them on Board the Train?

National Affairs, Great Discoveries, News of Historical Inportance? Not at All—Something Simpler.

"It hath not yet been shown what we shall be" is a fine sounding sentence, descriptive of our future greatness. "It hath not yet been shown what petty, little human mice we are" is a sentence that would describe pretty well the human race of to-day.

You have only to observe the mental occupations of your fellow passengers on Pullman coaches running between Atlanta and New York to be convinced of the vacuity of human minds, their absence of thought, their aversion to study.

Here are men traveling nearly a thousand miles, propelled by force buried in the coal several million years ago.

They travel in rooms lighted with the electric power that flashes in the clouds, on rails and wheels of steel.

Their journey is the result of millions of years of the earth's development, and hundreds of thousands of years in the development of human intelligence, AND THEIR MINDS ARE ON GAMES OR AMUSEMENT OR FOLLIES OF ONE KIND OR ANOTHER.

You see solemn old men and distressed old women reading—novels usually vapid or vulgar—when they are not playing bridge or solitaire.

If you see someone interested in a newspaper, what do you suppose most attracts his attention? Let us look over his shoulder and see.

No, gentle or fierce reader, he has not been reading important news of the Balkan war.

He hasn't wondered whether the United States would spread as it should all the way down this continent and stop just south of the Panama canal—for the present.

He hasn't been reading bulletins of scientific discovery, or news of importance in the world and its history.

He has been reading the important fact that Sommers "pitched" and Graham "caught" for Chattanooga, while Dent "pitched" and Dunn "caught" for Atlanta.

He has been reading the numbers of runs, hits and errors—if you know what they are—and finding out who won in various games of baseball throughout the country.

The human race has not grown up to its possibilities.

It is a race of children, easily tired, incapable of concentrated, earnest thought.

It is a race of men who work like beavers, or ants, or prairie dogs through the day, each in his own little direction, indifferent to the others, and who unite in intellect in the evening, not upon any subject worthy of the brain of a man, but in intense interest in some poor little make-believe game.

These men, "heirs of all the ages," have their magnificent minds concentrated on a childish game that could have been played and was played in another form by the savages that lived here before language was perfected.

Many a weary century must pass before the human mice of the present day will be really MEN.

Woes of "Affinity" Earle's Soul-Mates.

The folly of certain "advanced ideas" on marriage, that rise, phoenix-like, from the ashes of dead loves, comes with fresh proof in a London cable telling of a suit for divorce by the third wife of Ferdinand Pinney Earle, the New York artist, who has been in the limelight for years because of his love affairs.

The unsophisticated daughter of an English architect, Mrs. Earle No. 3—"the loveliest, sweetest, dearest of them all"—said she knew nothing of the American "affinity" advocate when she married him, two months after their first meeting. Now the mother of his child, she seeks her freedom on the ground of cruelty. Thus it was with Emilie Fischbacher and Julia Kuttner, both of whom Earle married and later lost.

Advocates of a nondescript affection may conjure up new forms of wedlock as an improvement on the old-fashioned vows, but such theories are like "silly moths that singe their wings and fall into dust." Discord and strife are the invariable accompaniments of defiance of the laws of decency and honor.

It is a fact that monogamic races have made the greatest progress in civilization. It was the monogamic barbarians, the virtuous Saxon vandals, that drove the hardest bargains with the Roman emperors. They preserved their rugged, healthy state from the weakening vices of a decadent age.

Pioneers who have cut the hard granite, hewn the tall trees, conquered the wilderness and forwarded the arts and sciences—who have made America the greatest miracle in the annals of the nations—all have had a wholesome regard for the sanctity of the marriage covenant. They rarely entered lightly into wedlock. Enemies of the free love that feeds on empty promises of a superfine conjugality, they were ever loyal to the lesson of Cana in Galilee.

Artist Earle's marital misfortunes are the common lot of all so-called idealists who set their own opinions against the experiences of the centuries. The religious element of the marriage relation can not be ignored without bringing counter obligations that gall and bind the offenders with worse cords than those that fret the flesh.

PRESBYTERIAN DOCTRINE

Editor Georgian:

Your recent statement, "The Presbyterian teaching of infant damnation seems to us horrible," is a gross misrepresentation, to say the least of it. And it is up to you to quote authorities and prove it, or else retract it. If I knew that you were a Methodist, I would tell you it was John Wesley, and not John Calvin, who once held such a belief. I come of Presbyterian ancestry dating back about two centuries, and claim to know something of the denomination at large. But I have never read or heard of one Presbyterian of any note who so believed and taught.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox Writes on Unfit Mothers

Poverty Does Not Make Them So, as Many Are Rich. Criticism Committees Should Be Established Everywhere.

Written for The Atlanta Georgian

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

"THE unfitness of mothers of dependent children, complained of by 'organized charity' is in my opinion all caused by poverty.

"The Mothers' Pension law recently enacted by the legislatures of eighteen States will, to a great extent, make the unfit mother fit because the pension removes the cause of her unfitness, which is her poverty.

"It is the common observation that the very fine and very fit mother becomes comparatively unfit to take care of her children after a few years of hopeless struggle with poverty.

"The mistake of organized charity is their allowing good mothers of dependent children to be made unfit by the poison of poverty, the poison of hopelessness, the poison of overwork in trying to earn the living for their children at hard work and give proper care to their children at the same time.

"Organized charity contends that a mother should have her children taken away from her because poverty has made her temporarily unfit.

"The real friends of the poor, the advocates of mothers' pensions, believe that the mother should have the cause of her unfitness removed and not her children. HENRY NEIL."

Unfit Mothers Caused by Poverty Open to Doubt.

MOTHERS' pensions now extend from coast to coast. One can now travel from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean going through mothers' pension States only, starting on the coast of New Jersey and going through Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Utah, Nevada to the coast of California.

Other mothers' pension States are Washington, Oregon, Idaho, South Dakota, Minnesota, Massachusetts, New Hampshire—eighteen in all.

Three cities that have local mothers' pension laws are Kansas City, St. Louis and Milwaukee.

Meantime the statement of Mr. Neil that the unfit mothers are caused by poverty is open to doubt.

Some of the most unfit mothers to be found on earth are women of wealth.

Two little girls on board a large ocean liner were the daughters of a New York banker, and their mother was an educated woman, and their father was a man of parts; yet there were never seen on earth more insufferably disagreeable children than these. They were ill-mannered, impertinent, unkind and ungracious. The chief steward in the dining salon was obliged to rebuke them for their impertinence and their annoying treatment of other passengers.

The children she had should have been taken away from such parents and placed under wise and worthy instructors.

A woman who has been reared with excellent opportunities for culture is the mother of four children. There is no financial strain upon the family, yet the children have never been taught any of the gracious and lovely traits which help to build a worthy character and a pleasing personality.

Every School and Church Should Have a Criticism Committee.

Loud, harsh voices, flat contradictions, continual quarreling and the most disagreeable qualities distinguish this family.

Such parents are certainly unfit to bring up families.

A fund for the erection of a large scientific institution, such as Dr. Elmer Gates has always longed to see established, would be a benefit to the world, an institution where the brain cells of vulgar and disorderly children, as well as the perverted and viciously inclined, could be developed into constructive qualities.

Every school and church in the land ought to have a "criticism committee," such as existed in the Oneida community years ago.

To this committee every person who had a complaint to make of the manners or conduct of another member of the community went, and the committee called the offending person with the complainant, and the whole subject was calmly and thoroughly investigated. And reproof was administered where it belonged, and if it was proven that any personal or selfish or jealous feelings prompted the complainant, he was the one reproved and publicly placed under ban, and made to see how unworthy was his action.

An Institution for Brain Building Would Also Be Good.

Unselfishness was the religious keynote of the society, and had it let sex problems alone it would have been one of the greatest factors for bettering the world which ever existed in America.

If our schools and colleges and churches could adopt this excellent idea of the Oneida community and established the "Criticism committee" and then carry Dr. Elmer Gates' dream of a brain-building institution into realization, the children of the idle rich might stand as good a chance of becoming agreeable and useful citizens as do the children of the poor today.

: A DEAD FIRE :

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

WHERE some lean trapper lingered long ago
To make himself secure against the night,
It stays a scar whereon no blade will grow,
Its old, cold ashes sifting to and fro,
Its charred sticks black where once was leaping light.

All green and lovely lies the forest floor
Around this patch of ever-barren soil;
Nearby the pinks and daisies bloom once more
Abundantly as in the years before,
Watching the queer gray serpents writhe and coil.

In all the world of grim and ghostly sights
There is no sight more like to lasting pain,
Suggesting hopeless days and long, sad nights;
It is the ashen wraith of past delights—
It is the heart of one who loved in vain.

FRANK TAKES STAND

LEO M. FRANK AS HE TOLD HIS STORY ON WITNESS STAND

Frank appeared perfectly calm and collected as he went to the witness chair in his own behalf.

He apparently welcomed the opportunity to tell of the famous crime from his viewpoint.

The accused man urged his lawyers to let the Solicitor and his aides cross-question him freely.

HARRY THAW NOT CAUGHT; SENDS MOTHER NOTE

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Aug. 18.—A warrant charging Harry K. Thaw with conspiracy in connection with his escape from Matteawan was issued this afternoon to District Attorney Conger, of Dutchess County, who will attempt to use it as the basis of an indictment. If Thaw is captured in another State, said the District Attorney, an effort will be made to extradite him on the conspiracy charge. It was said that another warrant charging bribery would be demanded.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Harry K. Thaw, who escaped Sunday from the Matteawan Asylum for the criminal insane, to-day wrote to his mother, Mrs. William Copley Thaw, at the Hotel Gotham, in this city, saying he was well and that he would meet her at Elmhurst, the Thaw summer home at Cresson, Pa.

Mrs. Thaw said she would leave at 9:25 to-morrow morning for Elmhurst. Thaw's note was in an envelope, apparently addressed by one of the men who had aided him to escape. It had been mailed from Station O in this city at midnight Sunday.

Over the top Thaw had written: "Night letter. Fifty words. Twenty-five cents." He had evidently intended to send it by telegraph. The note was addressed to Mrs. William Thaw, Hotel Gotham, New York City, and read as follows:

All well; will take a rest before going to Elmhurst, as I might be asked for interviews and do not wish to refuse, yet do not care to make any statement. Hope H. and G. arrived safe and that you will go home together. Have sent short note to New York Evening Journal. H. T. K.

Thaw, together with a man believed to be Dr. W. B. Holden, of No. 220 West Ninety-eighth street, spent the night at the Lennox Hotel in Lennox, Mass., according to Richard A. Stanley, proprietor of a hotel there. About 8 o'clock a dust covered Palmer-Singer touring car containing two men drove up to the Lennox Hotel, which is a favorite stopping place for tourists in that section of New England. One man registered as W. B. Holden, of New York and the other as P. H. Sims.

They spent the night there, leaving about 6:30 o'clock this morning in the direction of Pittsfield. Their car had the appearance of hard usage and both men were stained and travel weary. Sims avoided other guests and refused to enter the dining room.

Identified by Picture.

This morning when newspapers bearing the picture of Thaw were received at the hotel, Stanley at once identified "Sims" as Thaw. Over the long distance telephone it was said by the clerk of the hotel both men left

TELLS HIS STORY TO MEN WHO HOLD FATE

In a courtroom held silent by the thrill of expectancy, Leo M. Frank, charged with the murder of Mary Phagan, began Monday afternoon, with a striking calmness that gave added weight to his words, his own defense.

Step by step he took up his movements that tragic April 26 and talking slowly and distinctly he sought to impress upon the jury the falsity of every charge against him and the utter impossibility of his having any connection with the attack and strangulation of the brave little worker whose fate stirred Georgia as it has seldom been stirred before.

To the twelve jurors who have his fate in their hands, Leo M. Frank, accused of slaying Mary Phagan, made his appeal for life and liberty.

It was a dramatic close to the presentation of the case in Frank's behalf. The statement was the crowning point of the entire trial and was hoped by the defendant's lawyers to clinch and strengthen all of the favorable testimony that had gone before.

With scarcely a sign of emotion on his features, he began his story fraught with importance and interest. Just before, he unconcernedly had assisted his attorneys in picking out a number of documents to be identified in the record of the case. The momentous import of the occasion did not appear to weigh upon him heavily.

Outside a large crowd clamored for admission. They resembled nothing so much as the spectacle before a theater at a popular-priced matinee where hundreds are waiting to purchase their gallery seats.

The throng formed itself into two lines extending in both directions from the front doors of the courthouse around the building into the alley on one side and the whole length of the courthouse on Hunter street on the other side.

His Mother a Tense Listener.

The courtroom filled up with a rush as soon as the doors were opened. After that only three or four at a time were permitted to push their way through the doors. The others waited patiently in the hot sun through the long afternoon.

Mrs. Rae Frank, who rushed from the courtroom, her fingers in her ears earlier in the day when she anticipated another attack upon her son's character by the Solicitor, was present when he went to the stand. The younger Mrs. Frank had been in court all day.

While outwardly calm, the two women were evidently under great nervous tension as the crisis of the trial was reached. A big law book dropped, hitting a cuspidor with a clatter. The defendant's young wife jumped as though she had been struck.

Frank started his appeal at 2:05 o'clock in rather low but distinct tones. Aside from a preparatory clearing of his throat and a scarcely perceptible catch in his voice as he began his story, he displayed no signs of nervousness or agitation.

Before Arnold started the questioning, Judge Roan said to Frank:

"I want to read you the law," and read:

"In all criminal trials, the defendant has the right to make any statement he sees fit. He is not under oath. He does not have to submit to any cross-examination and can decline to answer any question. He can say as much or as little as he pleases."

"Mr. Frank," continued Judge Roan, "make your statement."

Hapeville Episode Hinted by State.

That Frank rode on a street car to Hapeville with a girl the Saturday previous to the murder of Mary Phagan and repeatedly sought to persuade her to leave the car with him was the sensational testimony Solicitor Dorsey endeavored to get from Mrs. J. G. Wardlow Monday.

Anticipating the nature of the questions the Solicitor was about to ask, Mrs. Rae Frank, mother of the defendant, stopped her ears with her fingers and then rushed from the room. Attorneys for Frank at first objected to the questions and the jury was excused. It was at this moment that Mrs. Frank made her dramatic exit. She was evidently fearful of repeating her outburst of a few days ago.

Mrs. Wardlaw denied that she ever knew of such a circumstance. She denied as well that she had been told of it by Harmes Stanton or H. G. Baker, street car men.

Another sensation was created when the defense called to the stand Miss Emmeline Mayfield, the young woman whom the State maintains was in the dressing room when Frank looked in at one time. Miss Mayfield denied this was true.

Paving the way for the eagerly awaited statement of Frank, the lawyers for the defendant devoted Monday morning to the gathering up of the story ends of their case, most of the time being occupied with the testimony of character witnesses.

More than a score of women and girls employed in the National Pencil Company were called to tell what they knew of Frank's character and what they had observed of his conduct about the factory. All asserted that they never had known personally of any misconduct on the part of the superintendent and never had heard of any.

Explains Looking Into Dressing Room.

Mrs. Mattie Thompson proved one of the most important of the character witnesses. After testifying to Frank's good character, Mrs. Thompson declared that the girls on the fourth floor were in the habit at one time of flirting from the windows of the dressing room. She said that the practice became a matter of comment among the elder women on the fourth floor and that she finally took it upon herself to report it. Whereupon orders were issued against it.

The testimony of Mrs. Thompson was produced to provide a basis for the contention of the defense that Frank had opened the dressing room door on several occasions solely for the purpose of determining if his orders were being carried out.

Miss M. E. Fleming, a stenographer, said that she worked in Frank's office from April to December, 1912, and that she never had observed any misconduct on the superintendent's part nor had seen women visiting his office.

Godfrey Winecoff, superintendent of the lead plant of the National Pencil Company, testified that it was his custom to visit the pencil factory office every other Saturday afternoon about 3 o'clock. He said he always found Frank or Schiff, Frank's assistant—frequently both—working in the office. He asserted he never saw any women there.

A large crowd was attracted to the courtroom by the probability that the prisoner would tell his story Monday, and the keenest expectancy prevailed. It was problematical whether there would be any cross-examination. Ordinarily, of course, the accused in a murder case merely makes his statement and the jury can believe it or discard it entirely as it chooses. It is said, however, that Frank has earnestly urged his lawyers to allow the Solicitor to cross-examine him.

When court reopened Monday Solicitor Dorsey took up the cross-examination of Harlee Branch, a reporter for The Atlanta Journal.

Took Conley 15 Minutes To Tell Crime Details.

Branch was asked:

"Can you give any estimate of the time taken in conversation in Conley's re-enactment of the crime?" He replied that it took about fifteen minutes.

Q. You never said it was about half the total time, did you?—A. I don't recall.

Attorney Arnold took the witness.

Q. You said it took about fifteen minutes to cover the time lost in conversation?—A. Yes.

Q. He began at 12:18 and you left at 1:08? That would be about 56 minutes that you were there?—A. Yes

Q. How long was he writing the notes?—A. Two minutes at the most. He did not write fast or slow?

Q. How long did he stay in the wardrobe?—A. About one minute.

Q. Did you see Conley in the newspapermen's room here in this courthouse reading a newspaper since this trial began?—A. I saw him looking at one as though he was reading it.

Mr. Branch was excused and Lou Castro, former ball player and at present fight promoter, was called as a witness by the defense to testify to time it took to walk certain distances.

Q. Did you walk from Marietta and Forsyth streets to the second floor of the pencil factory?—A. Yes.

Q. How long did it take you?—A. Four and one-half minutes.

Q. Did you walk from the National Pencil Company to the corner of Whitehall and Alabama streets?—A. I did.

Q. How long did it take you?—A. Three minutes and twenty seconds.

Q. Did you walk from Broad and Hunter streets to the Pencil Factory?—A. Yes.

Q. How long did it take you?—A. One and one-half minutes.

The witness was excused.

Employees of Factory Character Witnesses.

Miss M. E. Fleming was the next witness called. She is one of Frank's former stenographers. She testified on direct examination that Frank's character was good. Dorsey cross-questioned her.

Q. Were you ever there on Saturday afternoon?—A. No, I was off then.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Frank work on the financial sheet Saturday mornings?—A. Yes, I saw him work on it a little.

Miss Fleming was excused and Godfrey Winecoff, superintendent of the lead plant of the pencil factory, took the stand.

Q. Did you visit the National Pencil factory on Saturdays between July 1, 1912 and May 1, 1913?—A. Yes.

Q. What time?—A. Three to 5 o'clock.

Q. How often?—A. Almost every Saturday.

Q. Did you ever see women there in Frank's office?—A. No.

Q. Who was there?—A. Frank, Holloway, Schiff and the office boy.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Are you sure Holloway was there at 3 o'clock?—A. Yes.

The witness was excused, and Mrs. Mattie Thompson, an employee of the factory working on the fourth floor took the stand and testified as to Frank's good character. Arnold questioned her.

Q. Do you know anything about that dressing room on the fourth floor and the conduct of the girls there?—A. I made a complaint about the girls flirting out of the window.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Who has talked to you in the last few days about what you were to swear on the stand here?—A. Mr. Haas talked to me.

Registered Complaint About Girls Flirting.

Q. What did you tell him?—A. About some of those flippy girls flirting out of the window. I have talked it over with Mrs. Carson and we decided to complain to Mr. Darley.

Q. Who was flirting?—A. I don't know. It was only talked about the floor.

Q. Who was talking about it?—A. Several of the girls were talking about it.

The witness was excused and Miss Annie Howard, who has worked at the factory for fourteen months; Miss Lillie May Goodman, an employee on the second floor for over a year; Miss Cora Cowan, an employee for four years, and Miss B. D. Smith, an employee of four years' standing, testified to Frank's good character. Miss Jimmie Mayfield, another employee of the factory, said she was not familiar enough with Frank's character to testify.

Miss Irene Carson, a factory employee, testified to Frank's good character. She declared that she was with her sister Rebecca and saw Frank on Whitehall street Saturday, April 26. She was not cross-examined.

Miss Lizzie Word, an employee of the pencil factory; Miss Ida Holmes, who has worked at the factory more than four years; Miss Willie Hatchett, Miss Mary Hatchett, Mrs. O. Johns, an employee at the factory for four and one-half years, and Miss Georgia Denham, formerly an employee for two years, all testified as to Frank's good character.

Girl Employees Give Frank a Good Name.

Miss Bessie White also testified in behalf of Frank's character. Mrs. Lizzie Florence declared she only knew Frank by sight and was not acquainted with his character. Mrs. Zilley Spivey, an employee of the pencil factory for more than four years, said Frank's character was good as far as she knew. Mrs. Minnie Smith and Miss Grace Atherton testified to Frank's good character. Both are employees of the pencil factory.

Miss Ethel Barber, a young girl, said she had worked at the pencil factory for several years and she did not know Frank's character.

Miss Velvey Holland, a pencil factory employee, said she knew nothing of Frank's character.

Miss Marjorie McCord, another employee, said Frank's character was good. Dorsey cross-examined her.

Q. What do you understand by his general character?—A. He was always a perfect gentleman.

Q. Are you talking about what you heard or what you know?—I am talking about what I know.

The witnesse was excused and R. P. Butler, shipping clerk at the factory, was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Are the doors leading into the metal room of glass or wood?—A. They are wooden with glass 15 by 18 inches in them.

Q. Can a man of ordinary heighth see through the glass?—A. Yes.

Q. Is Mr. Frank's character good or bad?—A. Good.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. How wide are these doors?—A. Six feet.

Q. Did you measure them?—A. I did.

Q. They are down a long narrow passage way with boxes on both sides, are they not?—A. The passageway is 10 feet wide except at one point.

Q. Right at the door it is very dark, isn't it?—A. Not so very dark.

Q. Do those doors usually stay open or closed?—A. Open.

Q. If any one was to sit to the right or left of those doors he could not be seen, could he?—A. A person would have to be at least one foot to either one side or the other.

Rabbi Marx Recalled But Not Questioned.

The witness was excused and Rabbi David Marx was recalled to the stand to explain the functions of the B'nai B'rith. After conferring with the attorneys for the State, Mr. Arnold said he knew the evidence was irrelevant and he would send the jury out if the State desired.

The State objected.

Hooper: "To relieve Mr. Arnold's mind, I will state that it is already definite that it is a charity organziation."

Judge Roan ruled that the details of the organization were inadmissible. Attorney Rosser, with the consent of Solicitor Dorsey, then dictated to the stenographer without the jury hearing what he wanted to prove by Dr. Marx. Dr. Marx was then excused.

Mrs. S. A. Wilson testified that Frank's character was good. On cross-examination she stated that she had never heard anything against him.

Miss Lena McMurtrey, a girl in short dresses, said she had only worked at the factory for a short time and did not know Frank's character.

Mrs. Mary Bolton said she worked at the factory for six months about four years ago and that she had found Frank to be a perfect gentleman. She returned to work at the factory June 1.

Attorney Arnold remarked that he did not think the witness entirely qualified. Mrs. J. Johnson testified to Frank's good character. Charles Lee, a young man employed in the factory, said Frank's character was good. Lee said he had heard nothing against him.

Dorsey cross-examined him.

Q. You said the other day you gave a written statement about Duffy getting hurt?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you seen that statement to refresh your memory?—A. Yes.

Q. You signed it?—A. I never said I signed it.

Q. Did you give a written statement and never signed it?—A. It was written on a typewriter.

Q. What did you tell them that they put in that statement?—A. I told them how he got cut on the right forefinger.

Q. Was there anything in the statement about him getting cut while putting on a brass roll?—A. No, because I put that on myself.

Mrs. J. G. Wardlaw, formerly Miss Lula McDonald, an employee in the pencil factroy for four years, testified to Frank's good character.

Dorsey—I want to ask this lady some questions which counsel for the defense have already indicated they object to.

The jury was sent from the courtroom. Mrs. Rae Frank, mother of the defendant, held her hands over her ears to keep from hearing. After the jury went out she also retired. Mrs. Leo Frank retained her seat by her husband.

Never Heard of Frank On Car With Girl.

Q. You say you have never heard anything bad about Mr. Frank?—A. No.

Q. You're sure you never talked to H. Stanton and H. M. Baker, in charge of a car, that Frank had a little girl with him and tried to get her to get on the car with him, and that he had his arm around her?—A. No.

Judge Roan ruled the questions were admissible, and when the jury returned Solicitor Dorsey repeated the questions and received the same reply. The witness was excused.

Frank Siganke, an employee of the pencil company; N. V. Darley, assistant superintendent, and E. F. Holloway, the day watchman, testified to Frank's good character.

Miss Emmeline Mayfield, one of the girls who was said to have been in the dressing room at the time Frank looked in, was caleld to the stand. Arnold questioned her.

Q. Were you ever in the dressing room when Mr. Frank came in and looked at you?—A. No.

Q. Were you ever in there undressed when he came in?—A. No.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Do you know Miss Mamie Kitchens?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know Miss Irene Jackson?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall Frank coming into the dressing room one day when either one of these young ladies were in there with you?—A. No.

The witness was excused, and the defense then introduced documentary evidence, including the financial sheet and the model of the pencil factory. Attorney Arnold stated to a Georgian reporter that as soon as this was introduced Frank would go upon the stand.

The following documentary evidence was offered: All of the financial sheets of the National Pencil Company from June 1, 1912, to April 24, 1913; the letter from Leo Frank, dated April 23, 1913, to his uncle, M. Frank, in New York; the data from which the financial sheet of April 26 was made; twelve requisitions identified by Herbert Schiff as being made out in the handwriting of Leo Frank; ten orders dated April 26; ten carbon copies identified by Miss Hattie Hall as having been taken down and written by her Saturday morning, April 26; eleven orders recorded on the house order book April 26; page 195 of the cash book of the National Pencil Company, covering entries from April 21 to April 26, 1913; four affidavits of Jim Conley; specimens of cabbage presented by Dr. Hancock; records of various convictions of C. B. Dalton. (The indictment pending against him was ruled out on the protest of Solicitor Dorsey.) Part of the testimony of Newt Lee before the Coroner when he explained the meeting between Gantt and Frank on the afternoon of the murder.

Dorsey Plans To Use Defense's Witnesses.

Solicitor Dorsey, successful Saturday in introducing testimony as to the actual time it required for Jim Conley to enact his story of the disposal of Mary Phagan's body at the National Pencil Factory, prepared Monday to continue his examination of the defense's own witnesses along this line and later to put on witnesses for the State further to discredit the reliability of the test made by Dr. William D. Owens and three other men.

The Solicitor made a hard fight to get the evidence in. He made as hard a fight to keep out the testimony of Dr. Owens, but failed. When Harllee Branch, one of the newspaper men who made the trip through the factory with Conley, was called to the stand by the defense to testify in regard to an interview with the negro, Dorsey, as soon as the direct examination was concluded, started to question the witness as to his estimate of the time it required Conley to go through the factory May 30 and illustrate his version of the manner in which the Phagan girl's body was taken into the basement.

An instant and strenuous objection came from the lawyers for the defense. They protested taking the time that it required Conley to go through with the details he had described on the ground that he knowing the possibility that he might later be charged with the crime itself, might probably have hurried through with it so as to leave the impression that the deed could have been done within the time that Frank was in the factory between 12:56 and the time he left for home.

Dorsey argued that the judge had let in an experiment by persons who knew of the alleged events of the day only by hearsay, so why not let in an experiment by a person who actually had taken a part in them. His argument won, but the testimony which followed was distinctly favorable to the defense.

The State has more than a score of character witnesses to be used in the rebuttal of the testimony given by persons who have sworn to the good character of the young factory superintendent. It is known that a number of them have sensational stories to disclose. What part of their testimony will be permitted to go on the record is problematical.

The defense has fought strenuously the introduction of testimony by which the State has sought to show that Frank has been guilty of grossly immoral conduct.

Solicitor Dorsey Hammering Down Point for State

Frank's lawyers brand these stories as slanderous and untrue. They are able to refute them, they say, by the word of scores of reputable citizens but they asesrt that Frank is not being tried on any other charge than that of murder and that, therefore, the testimony in regard to alleged acts of immorality is utterly irrelevant, immaterial and illegal.

Other papers introduced were the testimony of Harry Scott before the Coroner's inquest and the report of Scott to the Pinkerton detective agency on Monday, April 28. In introducing this Attorney Rosser said that he wanted to introduce it for the purpose of showing that in his first interview with Frank that Frank stated in reply to an inquiry regarding the metal's arrival: "No," and that on the stand Scott quoted Frank as saying "I don't know" in reply to the same question. That part of Scott's testimony in which he said he was working for the pencil factory to ferret out the murderer and his evidence regarding the interview Frank had with Newt Lee at the police station Tuesday, April 29, was tendered; also the proceedings under which Jim Conley was released from the county jail; the testimony of Policeman Anderson about seeing the girl's body from where Newt Lee was sitting in the basement.

Lee's Testimony About Tape Submitted.

The testimony in which Newt Lee declared that it took Frank twice as long to put the tape in the time clock the Sunday morning the body was found that it did the first time he was seen to put it in, together with Lee's testimony on the same point before the Coroner, was also tendered. The defense submitted the plats, the one in which the Selig home is shown and a diagram of all floors of the National Pencil Company building, and the plat from which the measurements for the paper model were taken, together with photographs of the Selig home. All went in without objection on the part of the State.

The personal check book of the defendant was introduced to show that Frank did not have $200 in his possession the day of the crime. Dorsey objected on the ground that the check book would not prove that fact and that the book had not been identified. Attorney Rosser announced he would have to call witnesses to identify it after the noon recess.

Court then adjourned until 2 o'clock.

Shadow of Death on Mary Phagan's Home.

The shadow of death was on the home of Mary Phagan Monday morning. Her grandmother, Mrs. A. E. Benton, of Marietta, died late Sunday night after having a vision in which she saw the slain girl alive and happy. Mrs. Benton had been visiting the Coleman home, No. 704 Ashby street since the trial of Leo Frank began. She was confined to bed the second day of the trial when the details of the finding of the body were rehearsed.

"After my mother was confined to her bed her one hope was that she would live until the end of the trial," said Mrs. Coleman. Poor little Mary was her favorite grandchild and she never ceased talking about her."

Mrs. Benton is survived by two daughters, Mrs. J. W. Coleman and Mrs. J. W. Barmore, of Marietta, and four sons, Jack Benton, of Riverside, and Hardy, Thomas and Durell Benton, of Atlanta. The funeral arrangements have not been completed.

Phagan Jurors Dwell Together in Harmony.

The jury in the Frank case is an ideal one so far as their personalities are concerned, according to Chief Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner.

"These men are considerate of each other and there has not been a single kick yet," said the deputy. "They retire at practically the same time and arise in the same manner. This is different from most juries, on which there are oftentimes cranks. One man will retire at 7 and the next one at 1 o'clock. One man will want a room on the first floor and the other one will want to sleep on the roof.

"They are a cheerful lot, and there is never any discussion as to what they will do. If one wants to go for a walk, all are ready. There has been no kick on the food or the censorship of their mail and reading matter. If these men are as ideal at home as they are on the jury, all must have happy homes."

Diver Hits Bottom At Lakewood and Is Seriously Hurt

For the second time in five weeks, a bather at Lakewood Sunday dived from the bathhouse platform into three feet of water and was rendered unconscious by striking his head on the bottom of the lake.

Five weeks ago Martin Cornellison, of the Southern Bell Telephone Company, remained under water fifteen minutes. R. H. Smith, 32 years old, of No. 184 South Forsyth street, yesterday was at the bottom of the lake ten minutes before his plight was discovered.

Captain B. H. Schlomberg rescued both bathers. He pulled Smith out after the young man failed to come to the surgace, and worked over him for twenty minutes, assisted by Life-Savers George L. Dantzler and Fred Norris. Later Smith was taken to the Tabernacle Hospital. It is not thought that any serious results will follow.

LONDON, Aug. 18.—Henry C. Frick, who is staying at the West End Hotel, broke his rule of never giving an interview in favor of the Hearst papers.

"Whom do you regard as the late Pierpont Morgan's successor in the financial world?" he was asked.

"I think his son," answered Mr. Frick." He is a most able man, a highly conscientious, great worker. In taking over the reins he has certainly risen to the occasion, and situation. I have the utmost confidence in him and believe he will wear his father's mantle with the greatest credit to himself and to the country generally."

"What do you think of the general business conditions in America?"

"I am an optimist. I am always a firm believer in our country. I see absolutely no reason for alarm at the present moment. A general feeling of hopefulness seems prevalent. The crops promise well, and good, average crops should give a strong impetus to trade and insure continued prosperity."

"What, in your opinion, is most needed to give business a boost?"

"The one greatest need is for a let-up in Governmental lawsuits and interference which continually threaten capital and inevitably create a atmosphere of general uncertainty and mistrust."

"What do you think of the effects of the tariff bill?"

"I don't believe it will lead to any great business disturbance. Its effects have been largely discounted, and our country is big and prosperous enough to quickly shake off any unexpected evil result."

"Can you say anything about the new currency bill?"

"I have not made a special study of it, but I believe it must, in any event, be an improvement on the present system."

Wilson's Appointee Attacked in Senate

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—It is understood the nomination of Preston McGoodwin, of Kentucky, to be Minister to Venezuela will be rejected by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Democrats oppose him on the ground that he is not a Democrat Republican members say they care nothing about his politics, but the nominee is not fitted for the post.

Steamboat Burns At Memphis Wharf

MEMPHIS, TENN., Aug. 18.—The Mississippi River packet Bob Lee, Jr., operating between Memphis and Ashport, was burned early to-day at the Memphis wharf.

J. S. Parker, steward, was burned seriously. Part of the crew jumped into the river and waded ashore.

VILALIA, Aug. 18.—The Toombs County soil and climate are ideal for sweet potatoes was clearly demonstrated by Farmer Joe Todd, who has just disposed of his experimental acre of potatoes at $1.25 per bushel, which price nets him about $187.50 on the acre.

RACE FOR $1,000 GOLD ATTRACTS LOCAL CLUBS

Want Ad Man's Office Is Filled With Interested Contestants. Enthusiasm Evident.

The Want Ad Man is about the busiest worker in Atlanta to-day, and his office promises to resemble a bargain sale rush for several weeks to come. For the Want Ad Contest is waking up the people and they are growing enthusiastic over the outlook.

Several organizations are going in for that $1,000 in gold first prize. One of the best-known churches in the city, one of the most popular gentlemen's clubs, a secret order of highest standing and several other organizations have entered and are grooming for the race.

The Want Ad Man's offices, on the fourth floor of the Foote & Davies Building, are crowded with contestants and prospective workers inquiring about details of the campaign, receiving information as to the work, gaining useful hints on how to produce results. The contest manager is giving every contestant every aid possible, showing no favor giving every one an equal opportunity.

But the organization contest, though drawing many workers into the competition, has by no means overshadowed the individual contest, for which a five-passenger automobile is first prize. Individuals do not compete with organizations, and there are enough prizes offered to give every contestant a splendid chance to win.

The contest is just beginning—there is still time for everybody to come in and get a fair start. It isn't every year an opportunity like this one is offered, and the opportunity is worth looking into.

LEO FRANK'S OWN STORY TO ADD FINAL TOUCH TO STATE'S GREATEST TRIAL

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

It is rather an extraordinary thing that on this Monday, the beginning of the fourth week of the most remarkable murder trial ever held in Georgia, the interest should be in nowise abated or lessened, and that the opening of court to-day saw the biggest, hungriest and most insistent crowd of curious spectators yet on hand at the opening of court.

Far from letting go the Phagan mystery, the public to-day seems to be gripping it even more eagerly than ever before.

Opinion still is widely divided as to the guilt or innocence of Leo Frank, and there have been many switches of conclusion and reversals of theory, pro and con, within the past week, and no doubt there is much more of the same sort of thing to come.

People to-day believe Frank guilty who started out believing him innocent, and the rule is working right around the other way, moreover!

Despite the many things that have been said and the countless things that have been written of the Frank trial and all that led up to it, it remains, on the threshold of its fourth week, the most absorbing melodrama ever enacted in Atlanta—the most bitterly fought and the most uncompromisingly contested trial known to the criminal history of the State of Georgia.

The principal parties to the case are, of course, Mary Phagan, the dead girl; Leo Frank, defendant at bar, and Jim Conley, the grimly accusing negro.

Four months ago no one of these people was known to many Georgians.

Mary Phagan, a sweet little working girl, had a circle of perhaps a hundred friends—not 1 per cent of the population of Atlanta ever had heard of her.

Frank Little Known.

Leo Frank, the superintendent of the National Pencil Factory, was hardly known by very many more people—he had a business and college acquaintance, and a limited circle of social intimates. Not more than 2 or 3 per cent of Atlanta's population ever had heard of him.

Jim Conley, the negro, more than well known in police circles, along the way of the "Butt In" bar in Peters street, and a familiar figure enough along Darkest Decatur, numbered among his respectable acquaintances not more than 50 people—if nearly so many—perhaps.

Now—less than four months after the terrible deed enacted in the pencil factory on Saturday, April 26—there is not a hamlet or crossroads store or a country or city home in all Georgia that has not heard of every party to the sordid story, and that has not discussed everyone of them, together and singular, from every point of view imaginable!

It is more than morbid curiosity upon the part of people that prompts this great and never-flagging interest in the Phagan case—it is more than the mere fascination of crime that links the heart and mind of the people to it.

In the case of Leo Frank there is that indescribable element we call "human interest," that vague and elusive thing that tugs at the heart-strings and nags at the conscience—there is the knowledge upon the part of the public that a monstrous crime has been committed, and that responsibility for it must be fixed, no matter the cost and no matter the effort!

The public does not clamor for Leo Frank's life so much, nor for Jim Conley's—it demands that responsibility for Mary Phagan's brutal murder be fixed, and it will not be satisfied until that responsibility IS fixed.

At the same time, I believe—and I have believed all along—that the public wants to see justice done and fair play indulged in.

If Frank is not guilty he has been punished already beyond reason or reparation. He should be turned loose, with every amend decency and mistaken zeal may summon to their embarrassed effort at righting a frightful wrong.

If, however, he is guilty, and that is shown, then the inconvenience and discomfort accorded him thus far will matter little, if anything.

It is a tremendously big game the lawyers are playing in the stuffy little courtroom in the old City Hall Building.

On one side is the majesty of the law of the land, that must be maintained at any and all cost—that majesty of the law that may be invoked in behalf of the humblest no less than the highest. On the other hand is the defendant—an abstract thing in the sight of the law.

On one side is the great State of Georgia, calling for a "tooth for a tooth and an eye for an eye"—on the other side are those guaranteed rights of citizens embodied in Frank, that must not be challenged lightly or without complete and compelling reason.

It Is a Big Game.

It is a big game—it involves that most precious of all gifts of God, a human life, and a human reputation, a home and the happiness thereof. It is a game, nevertheless, that involves on the contrary a sinister charge of utter unworthiness upon the part of the man who still protests his rights to these precious gifts, jealously given of a Divine Power, and as jealously guarded by His laws, no less than by the laws of human beings.

One can not get away from the conclusion, cited many times, that, after all is said and done, Frank's character will determine the verdict in the case now on trial.

His character will be found to be his greatest asset and his most sure dependence, in this his hour of pressing peril—as his lack of it, if shown, must prove to be his final and everlasting damnation.

Frank, by injecting his character in issue, has challenged the worst upon the part of the State.

He has cited scores of witnesses to uphold it—he has made a brave, and maybe an abundant, showing.

The State, however, says it will break down that character—that it will show Frank's unspeakable depravity, even as charged glibly and smugly by the negro, Conley, as yet uncorroborated by any person the most abandoned would care to believe.

If the State can do this thing——

Can it be possible that Frank, through all these years, has been leading a double life?

Can it be true that he has, while professing to be an honorable and upright man, a faithful husband, a dutiful and worthy son, a deserving and decent friend among his neighbors and his kind, nevertheless been, really, a moral degenerate, an ignoble and deceitful creature—and can it be that these things, so long and so cleverly concealed, at last led him to murder?

The State's Contention.

The State holds that his family circle, his intimate social acquaintances, and his business associates, would, as a matter of fact, be the last people in the world to know the truth of Frank's double life—for, say they, Frank would employ every artifice and summon to his aid every possible device to keep those very people from discovering the truth concerning him.

This, so the State contends, is precisely what Frank did do—and in that way they justify his alleged intimacy with Conley and his quick calling upon Conley for help, when eventually he found himself with the blood of a human being on his guilty hands.

The State is asking a good deal when it asks the public to believe this of Frank, in the light of the evidence of his good character tendered last week, and it hardly is possible that the public WILL believe it, unless the State makes its charges crystal clear.

Men will ask themselves—and will ask themselves wisely—whose reputation is safe, if it may be brushed away and broken down by the uncorroborated word of such a creature as Conley?

But, Conley uncorroborated in one thing—while Conley corroborated is quite and altogether another!

The State is yet to be heard in rebuttal of Frank's character witnesses—and so judgement must be suspended pending their revelations.

The only point is—and it has been an evident point so long that to reemphasize it seems trite—the State must make good on its sinister charge of perversion and degeneracy upon the part of Frank, or its case will be greatly weakened, perhaps beyond repair.

I have an idea that Frank's statement on the stand may weigh heavily in the minds of the jury.

Frank the Star.

Indeed, it is not improbable that the very best jury speech and jury argument put forth in defense of Frank, with all due appreciation and respect of and for Mr. Rosser and Mr. Arnold, will be made by Leo Frank himself!

His statement, although not sworn to, will carry an appeal that hardly can be framed of other lips—either that, or it will fall flat and stale and of no consequence whatever.

The trial long ago resolved itself into a matter of Frank vs. Conley.

It is the defendant's word against the negro's.

Both have self interest in the verdict—the life of one or the other must pay the forfeit of Mary Phagan's murder.

The forthcoming statement of Frank, and the rebuttal of the character witnesses, constitute the two events ahead that may, within themselves, make or mar this case, as one may come to view it eventually.

And it is this situation, no doubt, that holds up the interest to-day, as the fourth week begins—for, despite all that has gone before, the case is not yet nearly ended, and there still remains many things undetermined.

PASTOR TRIES TO SAVE M'NAUGHTON

Savannah Minister Declares That Flanders, Alleged Victim, Died From Natural Causes.

SAVANNAH, GA., Aug. 18.—The Rev. John S. Wilder, pastor of the South Side Baptist Church, has returned from Atlanta, where he appeared before the State Prison Commission in behalf of Dr. W. J. McNaughton, the Emanuel County physician who is in jail under sentence of death in September for the alleged murder of Fred Flanders.

All of the evidence has now been presented to the Prison Commission with the exception of one or two affidavits, which will be sent to Atlanta early next week. The commission is expected to act on the case on the first Monday in September. Immediately after the decision of the commission is rendered the matter will be taken up with the Governor. Everything will have to be done during the first week in September, because September 5 is the date set for the execution.

"I feel that nothing short of a pardon would vindicate an innocent man and correct one of the greatest mistakes ever made in Georgia," said Mr. Wilder, who expresses the utmost confidence that Dr. McNaughton will not be allowed to hang. "I have always contended that Flanders was not murdered, but died from natural causes. I think this has now been indisputably established. We have the sworn statements of seventeen of the most prominent physicians in Georgia, including an expert who gives more arsenic possibly than any other physician in the Southern States, all of them agreeing that Flanders did not have the symptoms of arsenic poisoning, but the symptoms of nephritis, or Bright's disease. If these medical authorities are correct, then no murder has been committed, and Dr. McNaughton should go free."

Patient Dies After 300 Neck Operations

BALTIMORE, Aug. 18.—After undergoing more than 300 operations during three years for the removal of a growth in his throat, George McDowell, 31 years old, formerly of Spartanburg, S. C., died in a hospital here while surgeons were making a last attempt to save his life.

For the last eighteen months McDowell breathed through a silver tube inserted in his throat. He had been under so many operations that he became immune to the effects of cocaine.

Autos Can't Speed At Five Points, Says Recorder Preston

Recorder Pro Tem. Preston Monday morning stressed the dangers of pedestrians at Five Points.

C. W. Green, a chauffeur, was on trial at the time for running his car against Herman Lichtenstein, a merchant, Saturday afternoon and jamming him against a trolley car. Traffic Officer Burnett and several witnesses testified that Green had speeded the car in an effort to beat the trolley car. Lichtenstein was in the act of boarding the car when struck. He was only slightly hurt. Green was fined $15.75, and Judge Preston warned that autoists must run slowly and use the greatest of care at Five Points.

THE PLAY THIS WEEK

Sailors in Movie Romance.

"Victory," a wonderful motion picture in five reels, will be the attraction all of this week at the Grand, daily matinee at 2:30 and night at 8:30.

The picture was made in Cuba by a company which had the aid and the permission of the United States Navy. It is a story of love and war. It shows exactly what the navy does in peace and what might happen in war. The Battleship Utah plays a most prominent part, and in the land and sea battles hundreds of sailors and marines are used.

After the picture was exhibited privately in Washington last month, Acting Secretary of the Navy Franklin Roosevelt gave the owners a strong letter of indorsement.

Many Surprises at Forsyth.

Pleasant surprises feature the bill at the Forsyth this week, taking the place of some of the acts announced to appear. In one case sickness prevented a feature coming on from New York and an accident broke the promise of another of the acts. However, these two happenings made it possible to secure Toots Paka and her Hawaiian dancers and musicians, and brings the famous Castillions, in their wonderful novelty act to Atlanta. The bill is going to be better than originally announced.

Willie Weston will appear in character songs and recitations. The other numbers on the bill will be Clayton Kennedy and Mattie Rooney in a piano playing, singing and dancing novelty; Forster and Lovette in a comedy idea; the Nikko Troupe of Japanese, the best in the profession, and Grace Demar, a pretty and entertaining comedienne.

INSTITUTIONS PUT ON HALF RATIONS

Factional Fight in the Tennessee General Assembly Hits That State's Wards.

NASHVILLE, Aug. 18.—The Tennessee General Assembly is scheduled to reassemble Tuesday so that the appropriation bill may be passed and prevent suffering in some of the charitable institutions of the State.

With the fall months approaching and some of the State institutions subsisting on half rations, the question grows serious with them when winter supplies must soon be purchased and the available means now being far less than the required sums for the summer months.

The institutions mostly in need of aid are the State Industrial School, the School for the Mutes, the Blind School and the Boys' Reformatory.

Notwithstanding these appeals that have come from trustees of these institutions, there is grave doubt as to whether the prolonged session of the General Assembly may be gotten in working order at any time soon because of the intense feeling that exists over the fight between the Democrats and the Fusionists.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 18.—Burglars cleaned out Herrman's jewelry store during the night. The loss is estimated at between $7,000 and $10,000.

M'KEE READY TO LET PEOPLE BE HIS JUDGES

Atlanta Postmaster, Whose Resignation Is Demanded, Says They Can Point to His Efficiency.

"I will leave it to the people of Atlanta to decide whether or not my administration as Postmaster of Atlanta, is inefficient. The patrons of the office I consider more competent to judge than the Postoffice Department officials in Washington," said Postmaster Hugh McKee Monday, following the receipt of a communication from First Assistant Postmaster General Roper Sunday demanding his resignation within the shortest time possible.

"Further than this I do not wish to discuss the subject at this time," declared the Postmaster. "Within a few days I will prepare a reply to the letter received by me from my superior officer. I am not inclined to exploit my grievances with the Government in the public press."

"If there is inefficiency in the Atlanta Postoffice I repeat that I do not know it. While the time I have yet to serve is short, my term expiring in January, to the best of my knowledge I am guilty of no violation of departmental rules and see no reason why I should not serve out my full term.

"The report of the Postoffice Inspectors which was reported to have been submitted to the head of the department several months ago, it has been stated, contained all sorts of charges against me. I have never seen the report and do not know that there was one prepared, hence I am still in the dark."

Organist Would Bar Babies at Recitals

Eugene Wyatt, famous English organist, was of the opinion Monday that if he performed a second time at the Auditorium-Armory he would of a necessity exclude infants in arms from his audience.

His recital Sunday afternoon was frequently interrupted by the ambitious wails of prospective Carusos, Gardens and an occasional Scotti. Professor Wyatt is the first of a number of organists to be presented by the Music Festival Association before an official city organist is selected. He made a fine impression on a large audience.

Widow of Wealth 'Turkey Trots' at 78

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., Aug. 18.—In proceedings to test the competency of Mrs. Mary N. Gray to manage her $50,000 estate, it was testified that the 78-year-old widow had these fads:

without eating any breakfast, Sims driving the car.

At Dr. Holden's office it was said that he is out of town making an automobile tour. He was last heard from near Saratoga, it was said, when his automobile had broken down.

Dr. Holden's asisstant denied that the doctor knew Harry Thaw.

The news from Lennox effectually stopped a search of the seas by wireless, as it was evident that the clews to the effect that Thaw sailed from South Norwalk, Conn., in a yacht with a yellow funnel were false.

He had also been reported from Danbury, Conn., and Newport, R. I. but the authorities threw aside all clews and theories save the Lennox

e District Attorneys have begun for the detention of Thaw if he und in another State. An effort be made to hold Thaw on the ge that he bribed officials at Mat-ran.

Evelyn Nesbit Fears Thaw.

velyn Nesbit Thaw, estranged of the fugitive, has hired private ectives to guard her.

Harry Thaw is just as likely to ear at the corner of Broadway and rty-second street and demand a-ttance to the theater where I am ying as he is to go anywhere else," id Mrs. Thaw. "He is dangerous and sperate and I fear him. So do his latives fear him. When I woke up is morning the first thing I did was thank God that I had been spared y life the night Harry was free. Harry can not be quieted over 24 hours. If he is on a yacht I will feel safer, but he has all the cunning of a maniac and it would be just like him to throw off his pursuers by pretending to sail for some foreign country. Thaw's escape proves that if one has money he can do anything."

Charging conspiracy in helping Thaw to escape, warrants were issued at Poughkeepsie to-day by Justice Morschauser for Richard Butler, Thomas Flood, Eugene Duffy, Michael O'Keefe and Roger Thompson.

On complaint of District Attorney Conger, Asylum Guard Howard H. Barnum, who saw Thaw escape, was held on charges of bribery and neglect as a public officer. It was Barnum who was at the asylum gates as Thaw fled.

Thaw's Escape Dramatic.

Thaws escape by plot after five years of futile fighting in the New York courts combine all the romantic and sensational elements of fiction. From the moment that he dashed through the gates, eluding Keeper H. H. Barnum, while milk was being delivered at the institution, Thaw disappeared as completely as though the earth had swallowed him up.

District Attorney Whitman says Thaw can not be extradited if located.

"There is no indictment pending against Thaw in New York and he can not be brought back because he was legally adjudged insane after being acquitted of murder," said Mr. Whitman.

A rigid investigation is going on at the Matteawan Institution following ugly hints that Thaw had collusion inside the institition to aid his escape. Barnum was grilled so unmercifully that he nearly broke down. Time after time he declared that he used every means in his power to keep the prisoners safely. It was said that application would be made both to Governor Sulzer and Lieutenant Governor Glynn at Albany for a State investigation.

The only satisfactory method of finding Thaw, according to the police, is to fix the identity of the men who were waiting for him outside the institution with two automobiles. Something is known of these men. Ten days ago two men, calling themselves Richard J. Butler and Michael O'Keefe, appeared at the Holland Hotel in Beacon, or Fishkill Landing as it was formerly known. They spent money freely and devoted considerable time to scouting about the country.

In answer to queries they said they were preparing to locate for the summer and wanted to find a quiet, restful spot. Friday evening they returned in an eighty-horsepower automobile. The size and strength of the car also caused much curiosity. They had with them men who registered as Roger Thompson and Eugene Duffy. A little later the party was joined by a fifth man, who registered as Thomas Flood. It was he who took the launch to Beacon. Flood was afterward identified as the reckless driver of the touring car who took Thaw across the Connecticutt State line at 70 miles an hour. He was the most reckless of the party.

Saturday morning the men left the Holland early and were not seen at the Holland Hotel, said: "It was his business to help good fellows."

Reward of $500 Offered.

Following the escape, Superintendent Raymond F. C. Kleb, of Matteawan Asylum, offered a reward of $500 for Thaw's arrest as a "dangerous fugivtive."

Dr. Kleb's belief is that Thaw made his way around Long Island and is now bound for Europe. Dr. Kleb feels that his personal reputation and integrity as a public official are at stake, and has personally hired a private detective agency to trail Thaw.

So closely has Roger O'Mara, the Pittsburg private detective, been connected with Thaw since the shooting of White that some persons jumped to th conclusion that O'Mara was concernd in some way with Thaw's escape. This was heightened by the fact that one of the men at the Holland Hotel slightly resembled him. Another posed as "Roger" Thompson. A Pittsburg telegram states, however, that O'Mara was in Pittsburg yesterday.

Mrs. Mary Thaw, mother of Harry K. Thaw, who has spent nearly a milli nodollars in trying to restore his liberty, was surprised to learn of her son's escape. She said she had come here in response to a requst from Harry that she pay him a visit.

The New York police department is keenly interested in the search for Thaw and have sento ut a general alarm with a description of the fugitive. The detective bureau will flood the country with circulars bearing Thaw's picture.

Escape Made Without Hitch.

The escape of Thaw was planned with the utmost precision and went through without a hitch. Thaw arose at his usual hour Sunday. After he had taken his breakfast he went into the storeroom, where he has been employed to do odd jobs. After spending a few minutes there, he went into the exercising yard. He wore a straw hat, which was usual for him, and he was otherwise attired for the outside. Keeper Barnum was in the yard at the time.

In a listless voice Thaw bid the keeper good-morning and remarked about the heat.

Then he took several turns up and down the inclosure and leaned against the gate. For many months Thaw had assumed the same attitude at the same spot and Barnum paid no particular attention to him. At 7:45 the milkman who supplied the institution with milk drove up and rang the gong. Barnum looked through the peephole, saw who it was and opened the gate. No sooner had the milkman entered than Thaw galvanized into activity. With the spring of a panther he was through the gate.

Just a short time before a roadster apparently had broken down outside the asylum's gate. The driver got down beneath the machine and was tinkering with it when the milk wagon drove up.

As soon as the institution's gate opened the repairs apparently were made, for the driver climbed into the machine and was just about to start when Thaw bounded through the gate.

Wild Race for Liberty.

The fugitive leaped into the machine, instantly the power was turned on and the machine sprang forward, about a mile farther on the roadster overtook the 80-horsepower touring car which had been seen at the hotel and Thaw was transferred.

Then began one of the wildest and most spectacular automobile rides in history. At Stormville, ten miles east of Matteawan, persons declared that five men surrounded Thaw in the touring car and that each clasped a revolver in his hand, evidently prepared to shoot down anyone who interfered with the car's progress. Pedestrians and carriage drivers east of Stormville said the touring car was going nearly 80 miles an hour. Many persons were nearly run down and killed.

Patrick Buckley, who was in charge of the storeroom yesterday at Matteawan, said that Thaw gave no indication of excitement.

"He came into the storeroom about 9 o'clock," said Buckley. "He said good morning, Mr. Buckley." I replied, 'Good morning, Mr. Thaw; how do you feel this morning?' He walked among the tables for a few minutes. His manner was just the same as it had always been. He was perfectly calm."

In fact, but two employees of the institution did see Thaw gain his liberty. They were Keeper Barnum and Mrs. James Maher, a laundress, who was in a high tower overlooking the exercise grounds and the roadway.

According to Mrs. Maher's story, two automobiles, one a touring car, and another a roadster, passed the hospital shortly after 7 o'clock. The roadster stopped in front of the gate while the big six-cylinder car sped on to the foot of Lowery's Hill, almost a mile beyond the hospital.

There it stopped and the doors on both sides were opened for quick action. Mrs. Maher kept her eyes on the machine outside the gates. Although the driver got out and began to tinker with the mechanism, the motor kept humming and there were many loud explosions from the exhaust.

William Hickey's milk cart rumbled up to the gate while the roadster's motor was humming and thumping. Mrs. Maher said that as Thaw dashed through the gate he waved his arms and cried, "Go, go! For God's sake, go!"

Keeper Barnum was stunned for a moment by the quickness of the escape. Then he notified Superintendent Keb, who called up the Sheriff and notified police headquarters in this city.

Thaw got fully ten minutes start on his pursuers, being headed straight for Connecticut.

An early theory that Thaw was heading for South America had many things to strengthen it. For some time he has been reading books on South American travel, and Sunday morning before he arose he read parts of "Over the Andes," and James Bryce's "Observations on South America" in bed.

Studied Dr. Cook's Maps.

Maps of the route followed by Dr. Frederick Cook, when he went to South America to avoid detection, were found in Thaw's room. Cook went to Chile, but Thaw seemed to have a predilection for Brazel.

After being put through the "third degree," Keeper Barnum was placed under arrest and taken to Poughkeepsie for arraignment before Judge Hasbrouck to-day.

"It would have been easy for a man of Thaw's wealth to have corrupted some of the attendants here," said Dr. Kleb. "I fear he has done so."

The escape created a tremendous sensation because of the variety and stations of persons who have been involved in the "Thaw case" in one way or another. Dr. Carlos MacDonald, the famous alienist, who was an expert witness for the State in the habeas corpus proceedings instituted by Thaw last year, declared that Thaw is a public menace.

"My belief is that he will return to his old vices," said Dr. MacDonald.

HARRY THAW AND HIS NOTED WIFE

Harry Thaw Joins John A. Chaloner's 'Who's Looney' Club

Harry Kendall Thaw now is eligible for membership in the "Who's Looney Now?" Club of which John Armstrong Chaloner is charter and only member up to date.

The cases of Thaw and Chaloner are remarkable in their similarity. Each of them is officially insane in New York. Neither of them are insane, officially, anywhere else.

Chaloner escaped from Bloomingdale Asylum, where he had been imprisoned by relatives, in a gasoline launch.

Thaw escaped from Matteawan Asylum, where he had been imprisoned by the State, in an automobile and yacht.

Both men are of immensely women who had attained prominwealthy families. Both married nence before their marriage. Amelie Rives, Chaloner's wife, was noted as a novelist. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw's wife, had achieved fame as a stage beauty and artist's model.

BIG SENDOFF IS GIVEN PATHFINDERS AS THEY START ON WAY TO PACIFIC

Cheered by hundreds of lusty-voiced good roads rooters and with the martial strains of the Fifth Regiment band and the hearty good wishes and godspeeds of scores of Atlanta's most prominent citizens and officials ringing in his ears, E. L. Ferguson, official "pathfinder" for the all-Southern open-the-year-round transcontinental highway, Monday morning glided up Alabama street to Peachtree for the start of the long auto-hike to San Francisco.

Mr. Ferguson's "official" family consisted of Mrs. Ferguson, two little Fergusons and Hugh Grant, representing The Sunday American, inaugurator of the monster campaign, who will accompany the party as far as Birmingham.

There seldom has been a warmer "sendoff" than that prepared for "Pathfinder" Ferguson and party on Monday morning. All were in readiness—those entered in the last week, including the Mayor, the chief of police and the fire chief—and scores of other prominent citizens and autoists besides.

Makeup of the Parade.

First came the Fifth Regiment band, followed by the trans-continental car occupied by Mr. Ferguson and party and in the order named, Mayor Woodward, in his private car; Chief Beavers, Fire Chief Cummings and other city officials, in addition to scores of cars piloted by the drivers who compete from time to time at the 'Drome. A number of motorcyclists were also in the line of march.

Stretched out on long, snaky Peachtree, after the departure from The Georgian-American office on East Alabama street, the parade assumed an imposing appearance, much to the delight and admiration of enthusiastic citizens.

The crowd caught the "drift" of the affair. This was no mere parade. Here was a man, without a peer in the art of "trail blazing," starting out for far-away San Francisco, from Atlanta—obviously a monster project in which Atlantans should take particular pride and one filled with all sorts of possibilities, not only for the Gate City of the South, but the entire Southland, including the great Southwest, and the Pacific Coast country.

Big Papers Behind Project.

With these things in mind they gave this man Ferguson a send-off which will be heralded all the way to 'Frisco, through the medium of a score of leading Southern newspapers, including The Georgian and American, The Birmingham News, The Montgomery Advertiser, The New Orleans Item, The Dallas Times-Herald and The Houston Daily Post.

Mr. Ferguson left Atlanta with virtually every detail of the first lap to Birmingham complete. Traveling almost due west from Atlanta, the party will reach the Georgia-Alabama line at Tallapoosa late Monday afternoon. Here the party will spend the night, resuming the journey early Tuesday morning in company with President John Craft, of the Alabama Good Roads Association, and State Highway Commissioner Keller, who will make the entire trip through Alabama.

Arriving at Anniston early Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Ferguson and party will be received officially by the Mayor, the president of the Chamber of Commerce and other prominent citizens and officials. The Alabama city, it is understood, has planned a big reception for the tourists following a lively campaign conducted recently in the interest of good roads between Anniston and Birmingham.

Birmingham Plans Greeting.

In line with tentative plans, as a result of a choice of two routes between Anniston and Birmingham, Mr. Ferguson probably will decide to spend Tuesday night in Anniston, leaving there Wednesday morning. Pell City and Riverside will be reached in the order named; Wednesday night will be passed en route, and Birmingham, the end of the first lap of the long journey, will be reached shortly before noon Thursday.

If reports are accurate, the Magic City good roads boosters will give the transcontinental tourists a reception and send-off never before equaled in the Alabama metropolis. Prominent officials of the Alabama Good Roads Association, city and county officials, representatives of The Birmingham News and others, headed by Nappi's Band, will meet the party several miles outside of the city and escort it downtown, where a monster demonstration has been planned.

From Birmingham the tourists will go direct to Montgomery, where Governor O'Neal, a good roads enthusiast, will receive them officially.

The remainder of the route will include Mobile, New Orleans, Dallas, Houston, El Paso, Phoenix, San Diego, Los Angeles and San Francisco. Mr. Ferguson expects to make San Francisco by October 1, perhaps sooner, after which he will return to Atlanta to begin a second trip to check up the results obtained on the first.

Apprehension as to possible blowouts, with resulting delays along the long route, were allayed Monday morning through the generosity of J. H. Kelly, of the Republic Rubber Company, who has offered to furnish Mr. Ferguson any number of Staggard-Tread tires throughout the entire trip.

Pathfinders Get Big Welcome at Austell.

AUSTELL, Aug. 18.—Pathfinder E. L. Ferguson and party arrived in Austell at 12:30 o'clock Monday afternoon on the first stage of The Hearst Sunday American transcontinental tour, and found a royal welcome awaiting them by Austell and Douglasville citizens. A few miles out from Austell they were met by a Douglasville delegation, who escorted them into Austell and on to Douglasville. The party was scheduled to reach Douglasville at 1:30 o'clock, where a reception and a dinner awaited them.

The trip from Atlanta to Austell was made in good shape. Four miles out from Atlanta a halt was made and the group of Atlanta escorts enjoyed a watermelon cutting. Talks were made by Mayor Woodward and Chief of Police Beavers, and everyone wished the pathfinding party good luck.

From Atlanta to the Chattahoochee River the tourists passed over a magnificent road, while the dirt road from the river to Austell was in fairly good shape. Reports here are that a good road will be found all the way to Tallapoosa, where the stop for the night will be made.

The Douglasville delegation was led by Mayor L. C. Upshaw, President J. T. Dake, of the Douglasville Commercial Club; R. E. Edwards, banker; J. F. Long, superintendent of the Douglasville Cotton Mill; J. M. Banks, merchant, and J. T. Lee and A. L. Gresham, County Commissioners.

Sunday American Lauded for Project

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 18.—To the Editor Hearst's Sunday American:

Hearty congratulations to you for enterprise and constructive effort shown by your interest in Southern transcontinental highway project and good roads movement. Glad to be associated with you in this work.

We believe this aids the development of automobile industry, increases communication between the rural districts and cities and insures consequent increases in realty values and prosperity in general.

BOTH GLYNN AND SULZER TRY TO RUN STATE

Each Sends Representative to Open Bids on $1,000,000 Capitol Construction Contract.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 18.—Forces were marshaled to-day for another week of bitter warfare in the fight between Governor William Sulzer, the impeached Executive of this State, and Lieutenant Governor Martin H. Glynn, for possession of the gubernatorial prerogatives pending Mr. Sulzer's trial on charges of high crimes and misdemeanors next month.

A physical clash between the two aspirants was expected to-day at a meeting of the Trustees of Public Buildings, which was scheduled to open bids for $1,000,000 worth of work on the burned portion of the Capitol. Under the law the secretary of the Governor is a member of the Trustees of the Public Buildings. Chester C. Platt, private secretary to Mr. Sulzer, was designated to go to the meeting and receive the bids turned in by State Architect Pilcher.

One of Many Tangles.

Lieutenant Governor Glynn, who claims to be the constitutional acting Governor, directed his secretary, Frank A. Tierney, to get the bids and to prevent them from falling into Platt's hands.

This was just one of the incidents in the tie-up of the State machinery which involves millions of dollars in various ways.

Governor Sulzer, accompanied by his bodyguard, arrived at the State Capitol at 10:30 o'clock and entered the executive suite. The Governor found a number of friends to greet him. He said he was feeling good and that Mrs. Sulzer, who had been suffering from a nervous collapse brought on by the political struggle, seemed in good spirits.

Not to Weaken, He Declares.

He said he had no intention of weakening in the fight to hold his office, although he did not want to precipitate an unseemly contest which might hurt the State's dignity in the eyes of the nation.

It is learned that the Sulzer array of counsel, headed by Judge D-Cady Herrick, are planning to base their defense of Sulzer's claims to the Governor's chair upon an article in New York's Constitution which provides that "no judicial officer of the State shall serve during impeachment proceedings." The Sulzer lawyers construe this to mean that all State officers may serve from the time they are impeached until actually convicted.

Many members of the Legislature arrived for a big conference of Tammany men, at which plans will be made for further warfare upon Governor Sulzer in the Legislature which meets to-morrow.

Tom Lawson Backs Anti-Tammany War.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 18.—A national campaign against Tammany, backed by a $2,000,000 fund and directed by a country-wide committee, was indicated to-day in telegrams exchanged between Thomas W. Lawson and Lyn J. Arnold, president of the Knickerbocker Press, of this city.

Lawson, who promised a few days ago to give $100,0000 and to undertake the raising of twenty times that sum for fighting the Tamany organization, says New York City and State is under control of "the system" and that Sulzer's impeachment can be made an opportunity "to let daylight into the black cave where works the system's machinery."

"I believe," he adds, "if publicity is set to work rightly, as it can be with right men and money, hell will be to pay for the system before the Sulzer trial is half over."

Arnold replied, also by wire, that his paper to-morrow morning will call upon patriotic men to form a committee to receive cotributions and perfect an organization in Sulzer's behalf.

Prisoners in Coupe Until it Runs Down

HUNTINGTON, IND., Aug. 18.—J. W. Caswell, president of the Huntington Commercial Association, and his family of four children were prisoners last night in a rapidly moving electric coupe which Caswell could not stop.

For six hours the family rode about the streets of Huntington and made excursions out into the country, unable to halt the car. Early to-day the car stopped, its batteries exhausted, on the outskirts of the city and the Caswells walked home.

Birmingham Plans To Close Tenderloin

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 18.—Notice has been given again to occupants of houses in the segregated district of Birmingham that the tenderloin is to be abolished October 1.

While no positive statement has been made, it is understood that the section of the city heretofore designated as the segregated district will be used as a wholesale or jobbing section.

Flyer Falls Into Sea In English Air Contest

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

YARMOUTH, ENGLAND, Aug. 18. The around Great Britain flight begun by H. D. Hawker at Southampton Sunday and continued by Aviator Sydney Pickles, was again up in the air to-day when the aeroplane fell into the sea. Pickles took Hawker's place because of serious illness which beset the latter and planned to finish the 2,000-mile journey from Yarmouth.

Pickles arose at 5 o'clock and soared out over the sea, but his motor stopped and the aeroplane dropped. Neither Pickles nor the car was hurt and another effort will be made to resume the flight Wednesday.

Hitch Arises in Plan For Race With Lipton

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—As a result of a hitch in the negotiations between the present holders of the America cup and Sir Thomas Lipton it is considered likely that the 1914 contest yet may be called off.

It is learned that the point of variance is the old one regarding the size of the defending vessel. Sir Thomas wants the New York Yacht Club to say it will select a boat of the same size as the challenger to defend the trophy.

Atlanta-Made Show Goes to Vote Tuesday

The final outcome of the proposed permanent exhibit of Atlanta-made goods will be determined at the luncheon to be given the manufacturers of Atlanta by the Chamber of Commerce at the Hotel Ansley at 1 o'clock Tuesday. Nearly two of the four floors allotted for the exhibit are yet unsold.

Over 150 guests have been invited, and several prominent business men will speak.

Booster Bulletins Put Out Broadcast

The industrial and statistical bureau recently added to the Chamber of Commerce is preparing a bulletin of information about Atlanta's various manufacturing enterprises; also facts of interest to prospective manufacturers. These bulletins will be put out every two months, and will be distributed all over the country.

W. H. Leahy, who has charge of the bureau, says the bulletins are expected to bring a number of new concerns to Atlanta.

Wins Race to Dying Husband's Bedside

MEMPHIS, TENN., Aug. 18.—Mrs. R. P. Moore, wife of an insurance man of Jackson, Miss., arrived here to-day in time to take her husband's hand and hear his last words.

She came on a special Illinois Central train, an automobile hurried her from the special and she ran up three flights of stairs. Her husband grasped her hand feebly and said: "My dear, I have waited for you, good-bye," then fell back on his pillow dead.

Pin in Fondler's Dress Stabs Baby

Little Mary Lola Morris, 18-months-old daughter of W. T. Morris, secretary to Chief Beavers, was painfully injured Sunday when a dress pin was accidentally plunged into her arm to the bone.

The little girl was being fondled by a woman caller when the pin, which had become unfastened, stuck into her arm.

Rains Lift Water Famine in Kansas

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 18.—More than half of Kansas was covered by rains to-day and it is believed the heat and drouth has been effectively routed. Little benefit to corn was contained in the belated rains, but forage and alfalfa were helped.

Pools that had dried were refilled and live stock was relieved. The highest mark reached by the thermometer in Kansas City yesterday was 92.

LOCAL DRUGGIST MAKES STATEMENT

Says Dodson's Liver Tone Is the Best Remedy for Constipation and Shirking Liver He Has Ever Sold.

Every person who has tried Dodson's Liver Tone and knows how surely and gently it starts the liver to working and relieves billousness will bear out the druggist's statement about Dodson's Liver Tone.

"It is a purely vegetable liquid, that entirely takes the place of calomel, harmless and pleasant to the taste, that has proven itself the most satisfactory remedy for a slow-working liver that most of our customers have ever tried. A large bottle sells for 50 cents and we do not hesitate to give the money back to any person who tries a bottle on the strength of this statement, and is not satisfied with the result."

In these days of doubtful medicines and dangerous drugs, a statement like the above is a pleasant assurance that Dodson's Liver Tone is a reliable remedy for both children and grown-ups. In buying a bottle for immediate or future use it is well to make sure you are getting the genuine Dodson's Liver Tone and not some spurious imitation that has copied our claims but do not stand back of their guarantee. You may be certain of getting the genuine if you go to any druggist for it.

JUDGE SLAIN, HIS BRIDE WOUNDED BY EX-WIFE

W. S. Godbee Shot to Death by Divorcee in the Streets of Millen, Ga.

MILLEN, GA., Aug. 18.—Judge W. S. Godbee is dead and his wife fatally wounded from shots fired by Mrs. Edna Godbee, the divorced wife of Judge Godbee.

Five years ago Mrs. Edna Godbee sued for and obtained a divorce. Less than a year ago Judge Godbee married Miss Florence Boyer, of Williamsport, Pa. They lived at the Estelle Hotel here.

This morning about 9 o'clock Mrs. Edna Godbee walked into the postoffice just as Judge Godbee and his wife were leaving. She immediately began shooting them in the back.

The judge was killed outright and his bride has only a slight chance to live.

Mrs. Edna Godbee walked to her home and has not been arrested yet.

Judge Godbee was a member of the Board of County Commissioners and a large landowner. Mrs. Edna Godbee comes from one of the oldest and most respected families in this section. She was a Miss Perkins, daughter of Mills Perkins.

The shooting created intense excitement, many persons being on the street at the time.

Sees Wrath of Lord In Drouth in Kansas

ZION CITY, ILL., Aug. 18.—"Kansas and adjoining States have reaped a harvest of wrath of the Lord. It will do them no good to pray for rain. The drouth which has affected the land there has been the Lord's direct answer and warning that he will not send rain to grow hogs to pollute the people."

This explanation of the drouth in Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri and Nebraska where corn crops were ruined, was offered by Wilbur Glenn Voliva, successor of John Alexander Dowie, as the head of Zion City.

ACWORTH CELEBRATES.

ACWORTH, Aug 18.—Among the distinguished speakers who will make addresses at Acworth home-coming day exercises Wednesday, will be W. S. Coleman, past grand master of Odd Fellows of Georgia, of Atlanta; General A. J. West, commander Georgia division Confederate Veterans, of Atlanta; Hon. J. G. Camp, of Atlanta; Col. S. W. Wilkes, of Atlanta; Rev. A. J. Morgan, of Acworth.

PARALYZED BY FALL.

EUFAULA, ALA., Aug. 18.—As the result of falling and striking her head upon a lounge this morning Mrs. John Tucker is unable to walk. It is thought that a nerve center was affected by the fall.

THE SOCIAL WORLD

The dinner dance at the Piedmont Club Saturday evening was the occasion of a number of small dinner parties.

Miss Nina Gentry entertained four friends in compliment to Mrs. Ben Noble, of Birmingham. Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Ransom and Mr., and Mrs. Edward Dougherty had dinner together.

In another party were Miss Gladys Dunson, Mr. and Mrs. Julius Magill, Messrs. Walter Nash, James Ragan and Joseph Colquitt.

Dr. J. E. Sommerville gave a stag party at the dinner dance.

Others present were Misses Gladys Hanson, Gladys LeVin, Constance Knowles, Caroline Muse, Jennie D. Harris, Leone Ladson, Annie Akers, Messrs. Strother Flemming, Madison Bell, Bowie Martin, Neil Reed, Hunter Perry, Lynn Werner, James Harris, Charles Sciple, Jr., Dr. J. D. Bell-Swenson.

At the First Presbyterian Church in Birmingham Saturday morning Mr. Joseph J. Swenson and Miss Genae Bell, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Bell, were married. The invitations were limited to a few friends, who gathered at the appointed hour to witness the ceremony, with Dr. J. S. Foster officiating.

The bride wore a traveling suit of blue cloth. Her maid of honor was Miss Josephine Aldrich, of Aldrich, who also wore a becoming tailored suit, and both carried shower bouquets of roses and valley lilies. The bridegroom met the bride at the altar, accompanied by his best man, Mr. Henry J. Noble.

The bride is a member of one of Birmingham's pioneer families. The bridegroom is connected with one of the largest industrial corporations in the district. They will make their home at North Haven after their wedding journey.

Out-of-town guests at the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. Jordan, of Atlanta; Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Aldrich, of Rajah Lodge; Miss Helen Robertson, of Atlanta; Miss Mary Robertson, of Atlanta; Miss Mary Robertson, of El Paso, Texas; Mrs. Swenson, mother of the bridegroom, from Atlanta, and the Misses Easley, of Anniston.

Miss Tucker Hostess.

Miss Helen Tucker entertained at an informal party Saturday afternoon at her home in Juniper street.

The game of "up-jinks" was played. Miss Nellie Dodd won the first prize, a pair of white silk hose, and Miss Cornelia Walker cut the consolation, a silver picture frame.

Among the guests were Misses Emily Robinson, Nellie Dodd, Martha McGill, Rebecca Harrold, Hallie Crawford, Elizabeth Crawford, Virginia Walker, Cornelia Walker, Marion Dean, Carrilu Born, Emily West, Ludie Speer, Almeta Jackson, Irene Thrower, Catherine Hook, Eleanor Hook, Nina McCleskey, Flavine Connally, Ruth Yarbrough and Marie Stoddard.

D. A. R. Scholarship Notice.

Applicants for the Bessie Chandler scholarship in the Washington Seminary, which will be awarded by the Atlanta Chapter, D. A. R., are requested to send in their applications at once to Mrs. McDowell Wolff, No. 9 Peachtree place, where they will have immediate attention and conditions for scholarship will be explained. Competitive examination will not be necessary, as heretofore given out. The time for application will expire September 3, and those wishing to get a full four-year course should apply at once to Mrs. Wolff, who is chairman of the educational committee of the Atlanta Chapter, which is giving the scholarship free.

St. Anthony's Guild.

St. Anthony's Guild of St. Anthony's Church will give a lawn party Wednesday afternoon and evening from 4 to 10 o'clock on the church lawn.

Sack races, potato races and all kinds of games will be played, for which prizes will be given. In the evening there will be a musical program to interest the grown-ups.

Father Jackson has returned from his vacation.

Miss Beatie Honor Guest.

Miss Josephine Smith will entertain at a spend-the-day party Tuesday in honor of her guest, Miss Eva Beatie, of New York. Those invited are Misses Edwina Harper, Emily Wimpy, Lula Ponder, Kathleen Law, Julia Dunning, Marie Norris and Eva Beatie.

Miss Edwina Harper will entertain at a bridge luncheon Wednesday morning in honor of Miss Eva Beatie, of New York.

Akridge-Muirhead.

The wedding of Miss Genevieve Akridge to Mr. W. E. Muirhead took place Saturday afternoon, August 16, at the home of the bride, No. 124 Mangum street, the Rev. A. C. Ward officiating.

Watson-Lagerquist.

Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Watson, of Albany, Ga., announce the engagement of their daughter, Emily Irene, to Mr. Frederick Wilson Lagerquist, of Albany, the wedding to take place September 26.

Wilson's Own Dentist In Navy, Mann Charge

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18. — The charge that "the navy is making a farce" of the retirement age law, and the further disclosure that President Wilson has appointed his personal dentist to the reserve corps are made by Minority Leader Mann.

"While the retirement age in the navy is 62," said Mr. Mann, one of thees new dental surgeons is now over seventy-six. But he happens to come from the same town as the Secretary of the Navy. One of the surgeons is 62 years and another who is 42, was the personal dentist of the President."

Mob at Gadsden Is Thwarted by Sheriff

GADSDEN, ALA., Aug. 18.—Dave Tarvin, a former inmate of the Georgia Asylum for the Insane, was rushed from here to Anniston last night to escape a mob after he had attacked a young white girl of this city.

Sheriff Lister had information that a mob was forming and with the prisoner in an automobile ran through a crowd of several hundred persons that was rushing toward the jail to storm it.

Tarvin's victim is reported to be dying.

Cool Days Promised As Breezes Return

The breezes, which had been on a strike for the past few days, were back at work Monday, keeping Atlanta's business section cool. The thermometer registered 70 degrees at dawn, after a night cool enough to make a blanket appreciated.

Although September is usually one of the hottest months in Atlanta, Forecaster VonHerrmann says it will be an unusually cool month this year.

Fair weather Monday night and Tuesday is predicted by the local bureau.

Savannah Expects Big Seaboard Offices

SAVANNAH, Aug. 18.—In connection with the removal of the division headquarters of the Seaboard Air Line Railroad from Savannah to Americus, effective Saturday, there is a report that the Seaboard system contemplates the removal of its general headquarters from Portsmouth, Va., to Savannah.

The rumor has it that the Seaboard contemplates the erection of an eight-story building in Savannah upon the property recently acquired by that road, in which its general headquarters will be installed.

Bryan's Peace Dove War Eagle in Action

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—Bryan's dove of peace is a war eagle—at least the treaty seal of the State Department so represents it.

The seal's design is an ancient coin representing a war eagle preparing to attack its prey and a figure of the war god, Zeus. The martial emblems are placed on all treaties signed by the Secretary.

Brass and Iron Beds At "Blue Tag" Prices

The "Blue Tag" Furniture Sale is a big, broad-gauged affair, bringing savings on all the furniture (except contract price furniture) in this big five-floor furniture store.

To-day's news is of brass and iron beds. The list below serves only as a guide to what you may expect—it is by no means complete. Not one of these beds is a specially bought sale bed, but rather of that dependable soundness and worth that characterize all Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose merchandise at regular prices and "blue-tagged" regardless.

It is worthy of note that the lacquering on even the most inexpensive brass bed that we carry is the best.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

YOU MUST DECIDE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am in love with a young man who lives in the same neighborhood and is of a very high standard. He has told me he loves me and would like me to become his wife, but as he is a Hebrew and I am a Christian would like your advice, for I can not live without him. G. M. S.

This is a matter too serious for a third party to determine. Marriages of this nature are sometimes happy, but the risk is great. When it means an estrangement from one's family and friends, I would throw my influence against it.

BE PERSISTENT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 19 and deeply in love with a young lady one year my senior. One day I proposed to her and she said her parents would not permit the marriage because of the difference in nationality.

Please let me know what to do, for I love her. HEARTBROKEN.

You are too young to marry even though you had their consent, so do not feel discouraged. Go on loving her; attend to your business duties faithfully; develop yourself mentally, and don't despair or worry. Make yourself such a desirable suitor their objections will vanish.

DON'T MAKE THE EFFORT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a girl of 18 and in love with a man one year my senior. We have never kept company. He tells everyone he loves me, but while he is in my presence I fail to see it. How may I find out if he is true to me? I. H.

The man who tells "everyone" he loves a girl, and gives her no evidence, doesn't love her very much.

Unless you have made mutual vows of love, he can not be untrue to you. A man must make vows before he can break them. Do not fret yourself about him. Time for that when you are engaged.

YOU ARE A LITTLE EXACTING.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18, and for the past four months have been keeping steady company with a young man of 20. When I first became acquainted with this young man he was making a nice salary, but I told him that if he wanted to go with me he must change his profession, which he did, therefore starting at the bottom of the ladder again. It is also understood that he will not care to be married before three years, to which my parents and myself agree, provided we become engaged in about a month from now, which he absolutely refuses to do, claiming that he does not want to become engaged before next year. My parents have therefore forbidden my going with him under any other conditions.

Now, do you think that if he really loves me, as he claims he does, he would allow a matter of a few months to break our keeping company? The only reason he gives for not wanting to be engaged is that he is making a small salary, but if I and my folks are satisfied, I don't see why he should object. IN DOUBT.

He gave up his profession for you, starting at the bottom of the ladder again. I think he has conceded his share, and, under the circumstances, you should not nag him into an engagement until he is ready. Love is worth too much to risk it by the exacting attitude which I am afraid you are taking.

Two Birds—One Stone.

Norah had arrived from Erin's isle a week before, and was with difficulty being "broken in" to the routine of an English household. Cleanliness was not a very strong point with her, and her cooking, apart from "spuds," was hardly all that could be desired.

"If you are not quite sure on any point, come and ask me at once," said her mistress.

Dinner was just about to be served when there was a clatter along the hall, and the breathless Norah poked her head around the dining room door.

"Please, ma'am," she asked, "an' how will I be knowin' when the puddin' is done enough?"

"Stick a knife into it," said her mistress, with a resigned air. "If the knife comes out clean, the pudding is ready to serve."

"Yes, ma'am," said Norah; "and I'll be after that crathur that's boilin' over."

"And, oh, Norah"—the mistress had an after-thought—"if the knife does not come out clean, you might stick all the rest of the knives into the pudding."

In a Nutshell

By MINNA IRVING.

We heard with equanimity
That coal was soaring high,
We bore it when the price of meat
Went kiting to the sky;
When eggs and butter followed suit
We stood it like a sport,
But, lo, the worst has come at last—
The peanut crop is short.

Oh, what is summer time without
The tuber of delight?
We ought to bust the peanut trust,
We ought to make a fight;
We ought to put our woe in print,
We ought to go to court,
We ought to take the warpath when
The peanut crop is short.

The Mistakes of Jennie .:. By HAL COFFMAN

Being a Series of Chapters in the Life of a Southern Girl in the Big City

"No, no, my boy; I could not be so selfish."

CHAPTER XXV.

AFTER the row Jennie had with the installment man, she still owed $28 for her clothes. The man had come for his weekly payment on the clothes, which Tom had to pay to keep the man from literally tearing them off Jennie's back, for Jennie didn't have the money to pay him, and if Tom hadn't been there at the time Jennie would probably have had to do like other girls have done in such an emergency—gone out and GOT the money, never mind HOW.

When Jennie told Tom she still owed $28 for her clothes—that she foolishly bought and did not need—Tom left Jennie in the front room, saying he wanted to go in and talk to her mother a while.

Jennie's mother was lying in bed, and, sick as she was, managed a cheery smile at seeing Tom and told him she always regarded him as her boy, and that she had always hoped that some day he would marry Jennie. Tom did not tell Jennie's mother how much Jennie still owed on her clothes, for he knew that she had trouble enough without worrying any more. Instead, he told her that he had a little money saved up—for the time that Jennie would consent to marry him—and that he wanted her to take it and to go down to the beach somewhere, take a good rest, get well again and take Jennie with her.

At this the good woman cried and said over and over, as she patted Tom's hand:

"No, no, my boy. I could not be so selfish as to take your money that was meant for yours and Jennie's happiness."

A VERY NEAR THING .:. A Complete Short Story

VANSITTART was going to smash. At least, it looked ominously like it. Nobody said it openly. Nominally, nobody was supposed to even suspect that it was likely. But men whispered it to one another in the city; and when men whisper about a thing it is oftener far more serious than if they talked about it in their loudest voices.

"There's about one chance in a million for me!" he told himself. "If the Oriental Bank floats, I'm safe; if it closes down, I'm finished. And it will close down unless a miracle happens, and—Lily will know that the gods have given her her revenge!"

Vansittart's world would have been astonished, perhaps cynically amused, had it seen him now. After locking the door of his room from the inside, to render intrusion impossible, he opened a secret drawer in his desk by touching a spring, and took from it a bundle of letters and a photograph.

The letters were love letters, and the photograph that of a girl.

A fair-haired girl, with a pretty face, without Vansittart's pitiless power, but brave and patient, with love and faith in her eyes. And the letters had been written by a girl to the man to whom she had given her heart, whose wife she expected to be.

"By jove!" muttered Vansittart, as he put the letters down, "she's had to wait for her revenge, but it looks as if Fate is going to give it to her at last."

It had been an ordinary, commonplace story of a man's selfishness and falsity and a girl's outraged trust and love. Vansittart had been engaged to Lily Gordon, a girl clerk in the city, before he had begun to rise, and had left her without a word to fight life's battle for herself as soon as he began to grow rich.

Too Late.

"I was a cur, a mean cur!" he muttered. "But it's too late to think of it now. If I go down she'll know. Will she be glad, I wonder?"

He tried to laugh, but there was a harsh discordance in the sound. Replacing the latters and the photograph in the desk, he went out.

He felt he could not sit there waiting for ruin to come.

There was a man in the city, another speculator, named James Harper, whom Athol Vansittart had helped many times, by whose side he had stood in more than one threatening crisis. Harper had not the power to save him in his turn, but Vansittart felt that he must talk to someone if something in his brain were not to snap.

So he went to him now.

Harper was a keen-featured man, with a trick of half curving his lips in what promised to be a smile and never became one. He was alone in his office when Vansittart entered and grasped his hand cordially.

"You've come to talk over things, old chap?" he said. "I'm glad of it. I'd like to cheer you up. But wait a minute."

He closed the inner door.

"Anything wrong?"

"Oh, no; only a new girl I've got to help with my letters, and I don't want her to hear too much of our talk. Business is one thing, but a confidential chat between friends is another. I hope it's not so bad with you as some fools are making out?"

"I'm afraid some fools are rather wise," returned Vansittart, grimly. "It is no use blinking things. I'm done for if the Oriental closes down."

Harper's tone was sympathetic, but he was pretending to pick up something he had dropped on the floor and his eyes were very eager.

"Look here, Harper," Vansittard said with an effort; "I've come to you because I believe you're the only true friend I've got. As I said, I shall pull through if the bank stands firm. But I don't think it can. It's in a bad way itself, and if it can't raise a big loan practically at once it will close its doors. And if it does that I can't face the music."

"Surely, it's not so bad as that?"

Very Desperate.

"I tell you it is!" Vansittard answered, fiercely. "I shall owe more than I can pay. I shall be disgraced as well as ruined. But I'm not going to stop to face it. Harper, if—if anything happens to me, do your best to prevent too much mud being thrown on my name. It's all you can do."

There was a threat of self-destruction in his tense expression, if not on his lips. Harper knew it, but he did not endeavor to stop him or to argue with him. He only gripped his hand once more, with a few conventional words of sympathy.

And when Vansittart had gone Harper laughed.

Laughed, and then sat considering and frowning, until he suddenly struck his hand on his desk with a low, triumphant exclamation, as though he had hit on a way of accomplishing something that had seemed impossible before.

He left his office hastily, and when he had gone the inner door opened and there came out a girl, with love and terror on her colorless face.

It was late before Vansittart went home. He had gone back to his office and waited for news, but none had come. He left the place at last with a morbid conviction strong on him that he would never return to it. He hailed a hansom, but the man had to ask him twice before he was told where to drive him.

It seemed to Vansittart a matter of indifference where he went. It was not that he had abandoned all hope. He clung to the gambler's belief that there is always a last chance. But he was too restless and excited to fix his mind on anything except the news he was waiting for.

Ah, what was that?

The Crash.

The street was quiet, all but deserted. There was a gas lamp opposite Vansittart's door, and the illumination was gleaming on a pink something. It was the placard of an evening newspaper which a hawker was offering for sale.

He hastened toward it. In bold, merciless letters, the words stared at him:

"FAILURE OF THE ORIENTAL BANK."

He bought a paper, oblivious that he gave a sovereign for it. In the space reserved for late news were two smudged lines, stating that the Oriental Bank had closed its doors that evening and posted a notice outside that they would not reopen on the morrow.

So it was all over. It was useless to hope against hope any longer. His career was finished. He was a ruined man, with disgrace awaiting him if he lived.

He let himself into his house with a latch key, and went straight to the library, where he had been in the habit of working. At first he switched the electric light on full, but at once lowered it to a tiny shimmer. No need of much light for what he was going to do!

A revolver was ready to hand when he opened a drawer. There was nothing else for him to do.

* * * * * * *

"No, no! Listen to me, Athol. I've come to tell you—I've come to tell you it's a lie."

Lily was beside him, struggling with him to get the revolver away. He stared at her stupidly.

"A lie?"

"The placard. The bank was not stopped. Mr. Harper had the false placard and the two lines of false news put in one copy of the paper. I have proof of it; I have found the man who printed it!"

The Plot.

He was hard to convince. But she told him how she had been in the inner office while he was talking to Harper, and how, after he was gone, Harper's manner had been so suspicious that she had followed him to see what he meant to do. He had gone to a printer. It was not for a long time after he had left the shop, however, that she half forced and half frightened the printer to confess that Harper had paid him handsomely to turn out the sham placard and insert the two lines in the paper. He had said it was for a joke, but the girl had not believed it. She had guessed that he intended to use the placard and doctored newspaper to drive Vansittart to desperation by leading him to believe that all was lost.

"So I came here to tell you," she said, "I saw you come in, but you did not see me. So I had to knock, and when the servant opened the door I ran past her. I had seen the light flash from the window into the street, and that helped me to find my way to you. The placard is a lie!"

Vansittart looked at her; there was

.:. One Woman's Story .:.

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XXII.

SO agitated had Mrs. Danforth been at the news of Mary's break with Gordon Craig that she lay down on the couch in the tiny parlor until the dishes were washed and put away. This task the daughter performed quickly and noiselessly. She was thankful that her mother had asked no more questions just then, for she felt that she had not the courage to reply to them. Her work done, she glanced nervously at the clock. It was now a quarter past eight. Bert Fletcher would be here soon. She must prepare her mother for the call. She went into the parlor and, drawing a chair close to the couch, took the pale and worn woman's hand in hers.

She Started Nervously.

"Mother, dear," she said, "I think you ought to go to bed now, for you do not feel well enough to see company."

Mrs. Danforth started nervously. "Company!" she exclaimed. "Why, what company could you be expecting?"

Mary smiled bitterly at the suggestion implied by the question.

"That's true, mother," she said, a hard ring in her voice. "I am not troubled with friends or guests, am I? But this evening will be an exception, for I am expecting a caller—Mr. Fletcher."

Her mother sat up and eyed her keenly. "Mr. Fletcher?" she asked. "Is he the man who was so nice to you one evening last winter?" There was eagerness in the tone, and as she noted this the girl appreciated that her loving, gentle mother was actually anxious to have her marry if it would mean freedom from care for herself and the girl.

"Mary, why don't you answer me?" demanded Mrs. Danforth.

Mary started guiltily. "I beg your pardon, mother," she said. "Did you ask me a question? I must have been absorbed in my own thoughts. What did you ask, dear?"

"Only if this Mr. Fletcher is the man who brought you home one night in a cab when it was stormy?"

"Yes," assented Mary, "that is the man."

"Well, I remember that you once said he was very kind," remarked her mother, watching the girl's face.

"Yes," said Mary, "he is kind—even if he is not a cultured gentleman and does murder the king's English. But, after all, truth and fidelity are more than education and manners. I have had enough of men of culture and of nothing else." She tried to change her sharp speech into a laugh that her mother might not suspect how sore her heart was.

Mary Remembered.

The widow replied with one of her sighs, but this time the sound was indicative of hope and satisfaction.

"He evidently knows that you are a lady, and he treats you as if you were. So he must be something of a gentleman himself. I am ready to like him if he is good to you. Oh, my child," lifting one of her daughter's hands to her pale lips and holding it there, "nobody, not even you, knows what I have gone through in seeing you overworked and in trying to save and manage here at home. There have been times when but for you I would have prayed to die."

Mary remembered how, less than two hours ago, she had said to herself: "If it were not for mother I would want to die." But she smiled reassurance into her mother's face.

"Since we need each other, mother," she said, jestingly, "let us both determine to live for each other. And there's a better time coming for us both."

The mother looked at her anxiously. "You mean that, Mary? You are not keeping the truth from me or trying to pacify me by seeming hopeful when you are not, are you, dear?"

"No, mother," replied the girl. "I am speaking the truth when I say that I believe there is a better time coming for you."

She did not add "and for me." Perhaps she did not think of it.

"I do not like to seem inquisitive," Mrs. Danforth went on, "but I am wondering how long ago you broke your engagement to Gordon—Mr. Craig, I mean."

The girl hesitated a moment before replying, and she avoided her mother's gaze.

"Not so long ago," she said indifferently. "You know I always think that when people find they are not suited to each other it is best for them to agree to disagree with as little fuss and talk as possible."

There was so much finality in her manner that the elderly woman ventured to say no more about the Texan. Yet she was not satisfied, and soon asked timidly:

"This—this Mr. Fletcher—do you like him very much, Mary, my dear?"

"I have told you, mother," said the girl, "that he is a kind man, and has been good to me—so why should I not like him?"

Her mother began another question, but a ring at the bell checked it.

"Good Night, Dear."

"Good night, dear," she said, rising hastily and hurrying into her own room.

When the door had closed behind her mother, Mary stood, her hands over her eyes. Perhaps she was praying, perhaps trying to collect her thoughts. But as the bell sounded forth a second summons she went slowly into the kitchen and pressed the button releasing the catch of the lower front door. For another minute she stood poised as if now, at this last moment before her guest's arrival, she would escape him, would avoid receiving him. Then, recovering her self-control and courage, she passed out into the narrow hall, opened her front door and stood waiting for the man whose footsteps she heard on the stairs ascending toward her.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THE most restful way for spending one's vacation is to watch one's neighbors. If they are idle, it makes the one on a vacation just indignant enough to make his blood circulate, and if they are working, the sight of their labors makes his own idleness soothing in contrast.

The man who lived next door interested himself with the Lysander John Appleton family, who were occupying their summer home. He watched them the day they moved in: Two women of regal bearing, a boy with a forehead like a Mansard roof, and a meek-looking man who might be a servant, the Appleton family being an ideal American family.

It was the women who interested the idle man the most. They were of such queenly bearing and had such perfect figures he longed for the fingers and skill of a Rodin. "I never," he murmured, "saw more perfectly-formed women."

They entered the house, closed the door, and for a half hour there was no outward evidence of occupancy, and then the man on the side porch saw a woman emerge from the back door the sight of whom made him throw back his head and laugh.

She had a figure like that of a featherbed, and if she had ever had a waist line it had long ago moved up and become lost in the foothills of her mountainous bosom. She shook and quivered as she walked like a bowl of calves'-foot jelly, and while he gazed at her in bewilderment the door opened again and there emerged a younger woman so thin that she looked the same coming as going.

For a week he saw two women with perfect figures enter and emerge at the front door, and a feather bed and a bean pole from which garments drooped like a flag at half mast emerge and enter at the back door. Then one evening when he saw Lysander John sitting alone on the porch in front he walked across the lawn and asked for an explanation.

"They are the same women," said Lysander John sadly. "If you are interested, I will show you the means of the transformation."

He led the way upstairs to a dressing room where two long, vise-like garments hung over the back of a chair.

"The modern magician's wand," he said, pointing to two corsets."

The Ten Commandments of the Summer Wife

By DOROTHY DIX.

ARISE, sister, gird up thy straight front, put glad raiment upon thyself and take thy vacation; yea, take it though thou hast to fight for it with tooth and nail, for she that hath wrestled with the robber that lieth in wait in the butcher shop and the despoiler who abideth in the grocery store, and who hath provided the wherewithal her family is fed three times a day for three hundred and sixty-five days, needeth to slip the yoke for a space while the galled place healeth.

2. When thou takest thy vacation, go it alone. Be not as those foolish wives who say, "I have never been parted from my husband, and lo, where he goeth there will I go also," for belike thou hast gotten on thy husband's nerves and he would fain have a rest from thee.

3. Reflect that nine months of the year can a man rejoice and be exceeding glad to be married. Ten months can he steel his heart with fortitude to endure it, but on the twelfth month he noticeth that his wife's nose is crooked, and he knocketh her cooking. Therefore get thee hence on the twelfth month, and when thou shalt return to him he will make a feast at thy coming.

They shall mock thee.

4. Stay not too long, though, on thy vacation, for it is not good that a husband should be left alone to his own devices until he can find the secret spot wherein the clean shirt hideth itself and the fresh collars are secreted. Verily it was written in the Book of the Prophets that a little absence maketh the heart grow fonder, but too much absence inclineth it to another skirt.

5. When thou rockest in the chair that swayeth back and forth on the Summer hotel gallery, boast not thyself of thine automobile, and thy butler, and thy social prestige, and the diamonds thou hast left behind thee in thy husband's safe; for the women thou braggest to art the Daughters of Missouri, that even require to be shown, and they shall mock thee behind thy back as a liar.

Go it alone.

He is as a phonograph.

6. Tell not the secret of thy life. Reveal not the weaknesses of thy husband, and pull not forth from thy closet the skeleton where it is hidden because thou happenest to stroll in the twilight with a sympathetic sister, for lo she shall tell the tale to another, and she shall repeat it to still another, and scandal shall be heaped upon thy name.

7. When thou playest bridge, get thee a strangle hold upon thy purse, for peradventure the society dames with whom thou sportest shall shear thee even as a lamb is sheared on Wall Street, and thou shalt have to write home for more money.

8. Take not the lone Summer man away from the maidens when he fleest to thee as to a temple of refuge, because thou already hast a husband and cannot expect him to marry thee. Flirt not with such an one, but stand thou to one side and give the virgins their chance, for lo in these days a husband is scarce and hard to come at.

9. Listen not to the man who wandereth on the beach with thee in the moonlight and who sayeth, "Would God I had met thee in time," for behold he is but as a phonograph with one record, and hath already said the same thing to 981,735 other women. Also he draweth but twenty-five bones per in a department store, whilst thy husband hath skill with the shekels, so that thou adornest thyself in purple and fine linen and split skirts therewithal.

10. Forget not that gossip stalketh through the halls of a Summer hotel, seeking whom it may destroy; therefore bear thyself as though thou possest in a moving picture film and converse as though thou consortest with a dictagraph. So shalt thou meet thy husband with a glad smile when he cometh down on the Saturday afternoon train, and thy heart shall not quake with fear when thou thinkest of what one of the old cats who knit pink sweaters in the hotel lobby may reveal unto him.

Selah.

'Tain't No Use.

The tramp approached the proud citizen and asked for alms.

"'Go to the ant, thou sluggard.'"

"'Tain't no use, mister. Me aunt's jist as tight-fisted as me uncle an' all de rest uv me relashuns. I fear I'll have to go to work at last."

Childlife.

"Come, Willie," said his mother, "don't be so selfish. Let your little brother play with your marbles a while."

"But," protested Willie, "he means to keep them always."

"Oh, I think not."

"I say, 'Yes,' 'cause he's swallowed two of them already."

.:. The Coralbank Case .:.

By MATTHEW JAMES.

ONE of the smarest little robberies that has ever come under my notice," said Detective Hunter, of Scotland Yard, as he musingly lit his first cigar one night recently at my rooms in Portman Square, "was that perpetrated in the autumn of last year upon a Mr. Silas Jay, then residing in a pretty little house known as "Coralbank" and situated about half a mile beyond Windsor."

I was on the alert in an instant, for there were few things I like better than listening to one of Detective Hunter's professional experiences.

"Perhaps," he said, after a few moments' reflection, "I had better give you the particulars as they were narrated to me by Mr. Silas Jay himself, since I personally had nothing to do with the case."

The story ran as follows:

First, I must explain that Mr. Jay, who was a bachelor, was a man of many prejudices. He suspected everybody, and regarded all recognized and established institutions with unqualified distrust. Those that were national were torpid, and therefore mere shams, while those that were not were established chiefly for the fattening of financiers by any process, honest or otherwise, but more generally otherwise.

The existing police system held a prominent position in the former category, while banking houses figured no less conspicuously in the latter. This last opinion induced him to distribute his capital among six or seven banks, in order that, should any one of them fail and swindle him out of his money, his fortune would not be very materially impaired. Well, among these banking houses was one situated in Windsor, which, for the sake of convenience, he always used when at home, and in this bank the sum of $60,000 was deposited.

The Rumor Spreads.

How the rumor reached him I was never able to discover, but one day in October he presented himself in great excitement at the offices of the bank in question, declaring that he had heard it whispered they contemplated suspending payment, and demanding an immediate surrender of his credit balance of $60,000.

The manager indignantly repudiated the suspicion, but the old gentleman was thoroughly frightened, and finally the money was handed to him over the counter in the shape of a hundred $500 and two hundred $50 notes. These, as he afterwards explained to me, he intended depositing the following day in another of the local banks. But this intention was frustrated.

Early the next morning it was discovered that during the night an entry had been effected into the house, and the alarmed Mr. Jay, descending hastily to the library, discovered, to his mortification, that the larger of the two parcels of bank notes, of the value of £10,000, had been abstracted from the drawer in which he had locked it. The smaller but more valuable parcel he had placed, for greater security, in a secret compartment of his secretary, and this, to his intense relief, he found to be intact. The ingeniousness of the contrivance had baffled the thief, who had been forced to retire without securing the bulk of the money.

Mr. Jay dispatched a servant with a telegram, which he had himself indited requesting the authorities at Scotland Yard to send down a detective at the "earliest possible opportunity."

Half an hour later the servant returned without having dispatched the telegram and accompanied by a tall, shrewd-looking, businesslike man of about thirty-five. He was immediately conducted to the library, where, without loss of time, he introduced both himself and his errand to the astonished Mr. Jay. He spoke with a quick, intelligent precision that was not without its effect on his listener.

"Mr. Walter Craft."

"Mr. Silas Jay, I believe?" he said, briskly. "I chanced to be in the telegraph office when your servant entered, and, observing the direction of the message he was about to dispatch, took the liberty of interrupting it until I had seen you. But first allow me to introduce myself."

He took a card from his pocket and laid it on the table. Mr. Jay picked it up and read the name, "Mr. Walter Craft, detective inspector, Scotland Yard."

"As you see," resumed the stranger in a matter-of-fact tone, "I am connected with the establishment to which your telegram was directed, and, this being so, I took the further liberty of making myself acquainted with its contents. The closing words, 'earliest possible opportunity,' particularly appealed to my professional recognition, of the value of time; so, being on the spot, I have come straight to you to offer my services in discovering the perpetrator or perpetrators of the robbery which took place here last night, the chief particulars of which I have already elicited from your servant."

Mr. Jay rose from his chair, "I am glad you came," he said.

The detective bowed, and then, resuming his brisk, businesslike air, which appeared to afford his listener no small satisfaction, said:

"Then let us begin at once."

"Had you any other money in the house?" His keen, gray eyes searched Mr. Jay's face.

The latter hesitated. He was at all times a suspicious man. But the detective's keen insight into the position of things had strongly prepossessed himself in its favor, while his character was no doubt unimpeachable. So, after a moment's consideration, he told the story of the untouched parcel of bank notes, even going so far, in the exuberance of his spirits at the thief's failure, as to touch the secret spring which opened the hidden compartment and reveal to the detective the notes within. As he did so, however, he appeared to regret the action, for he made a movement as if to reclose the compartment, but the detective stopped him.

"Pardon me," he said quickly, "but did I understand you to say that you drew these notes from the bank with those that are missing?"

Silas Jay nodded.

"In that case," said the detective, emphatically, "I must ask you to allow me to examine these notes. A great deal may depend on my doing so."

The Suspicion.

Silas Jay reluctantly drew them from their hiding place and handed them to the detective. The latter turned them over, one by one, his fingers lingering long over the task. Then, with a half-suppressed sigh, he handed them back to their owner and watched that gentleman as he once more replaced them in the secret compartment of the secretaire, and heard the sharp, metallic click of the spring as it flew into position.

When this was done he asked to be allowed to see the servants, and one by one they were called into the library. He said but little to them, however, chiefly impressing upon them the necessity for silence on the subject of the robbery, and dismissed them once more to their respective duties. Then he turned to Mr. Jay.

"Now," he said briskly. "I think I may confide to you the fact that my investigations so far have not been without their reward. To-morrow morning I shall return and shall probably require to again examine—and, if may be necessary to photograph—the notes still in your possession. I will now bid you good-day, as there are several things that need to be done in the meantime."

At half-past ten the following morning there was a loud pealing of the front door bell, and a few minutes later a servant announced that two police constables in uniform requested to see Mr. Jay on a matter of considerable importance. They were shown into the library, and awkwardly touched their helmets to the master of the house. They were typical country policemen—thickset, stolid-looking individuals, who might certainly form part of the arm of the law, but possessed no iota of its brains.

"Are you Mr. Silas Jay?" inquired one, in a slow, expressionless voice.

Mr. Jay admitted that such was the case.

"Well," explained the constable "we're in search of a feller who's wanted up in Brummagem for a little lob o' 'ousebreakin'. From information received"—he coughed to emphasize the professional phrase—"we know he's in this district, and we are hinformed that a man answerin' to his description was seen a-comin' into your 'ouse yesterday afternoon."

Silas Jay turned pale as a horrible suspicion crossed his mind. With a quick movement he pressed the secret spring of his secretaire, and a sigh of unutterable relief escaped his lips as he beheld the precious bank notes lying safely within their ingenious hiding place. Then, closing the compartment, he turned abruptly to the constables, who were watching him in evident curiosity, and said:

"He promised to be here at eleven this morning, and it barely wants a quarter to that now."

Instantly the men were on their feet. "I wonder if he'll come?" said one. "If he does," replied the other, "we've got 'im, and then we're safe for a stripe or two."

Eluded.

Simultaneously they moved to the window and stood looking out down the gravel paths that skirted the lawn and across the tall gates that led on the road. As for Silas Jay he was too bewildered even to think coherently and sat, with his chin resting on his hands, staring straight before him. An exclamation from one of the constables roused him.

"Here 'e is!" exclaimed the man.

Mr. Jay leaped to his feet and ran to the window. At the same instant a man who had just turned in at the gate came to a standstill and glanced irresolutely in the direction of the house.

"You infernal fools!" exclaimed Mr. Jay, with all his old disgust for the police returning in full force. "The fellow has seen your confounded uniforms through the window and has taken the alarm!"

It certainly looked as if this was actually the case, for at that instant the man turned and swiftly retreated through the gates and out on to the road, where he was immediately lost to view behind the tall hedge which shut in the lawn. With a smothered oath, Silas Jay threw up the widow and, climbing out as quickly as his age would allow, started in hot pursuit. One of the constables followed his example, and, being a younger man, soon outstripped Mr. Jay.

When the latter reached the gate and looked down the road he beheld the bogus detective far away in the distance, speeding along through a cloud of dust, mounted on a bicycle. He was getting up a good pace, and, upon seeing Mr. Jay, waved his hand in token of his determination to catch the now rapidly disappearing thief. When Mr. Jay returned to the house he found that the other policeman had taken himself off.

The next day he was so restless that he could bear the house no longer, so he determined, as there was nothing to hinder him from doing so, to take the hundred $500 notes into Windsor and there deposit them in one of the local banks. He touched the concealed spring of his secretaire and the secret compartment flew noiselessly open. And then, with a wild cry, he staggered back against the wall and fell in a heap upon the floor. The bank notes were gone!

As soon as he recovered he rushed into Windsor and wired to Scotland Yard, and the chief sent me down to investigate. Both detective and his confederates, the country constables, were unknown—in that capacity, at least—to the authorities. When I communicated this information to Mr. Silas Jay I thought he would have a fit.

"What are you going to do?" he asked.

"I am afraid," I said, "there is but little left for me to do. I have been to the bank, and find that, owing to the ridiculous discussion which took place, the manager, in handing you the notes, omitted the customary precaution of taking down their numbers. All we can do, therefore, is to endeavor to trace the criminals by means of their description. But this is a tedious process, and not always crowned with success."

He handed me the card which the bogus detective had given him.

"An alias, I suppose," I said. "And Walter Craft is not an inappropriate name for one of his calling."

A gleam of something like self-contempt shone in the old man's eyes.

"Scarcely as appropriate as my own," he exclaimed savagely, "for if any man richly deserves the name of Jay, I am certainly he!"

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

Happiness the Real Secret, Says One of the Stage's Prettiest Girls

"Being happy is the secret of being well, looking well and feeling well."

This is Miss Lois Josephine's recipe for obtaining and maintaining a beautiful face and figure.

Miss Lois Josephine in two poses.

"I AM determined to be happy," said Lois Josephine to me, smiling the while with the wistful sweetness that is the heritage of Irish blood. "I think that being happy is the secret of being well, and doing your work well, and looking well, and feeling well! Well, with all these wells to be acquired, my search for happiness is going to be untiring."

"Just how does one go about being happy—deliberately happy?" I asked. The blue-bird of happiness is an elusive-winged creature, and even when he is found at last at your own fireside he flies away as you clasp him in the welcoming circle of your hands.

"To be happy," answered Miss Josephine, with a tiny shadow of a smile that ought to lure happiness right to her side, never to depart, "to be happy, you like all the things you have to do, you trust your friends, you love all the beauty of nature around you—and you avoid unnecessary contact with tasks that you can not teach yourself to like. Oh, truly, I think that if you are happy you will be healthy and wealthy and wise and—and, yes, beautiful!"

Now, Miss Josephine is the Sunshine Girl in "The Passing Show of 1913" up at the Winter Garden in New York, and most charmingly does she and her partner, Wellington Cross, dispense gayety and sunshine as they dance their "joy of living" steps for you. Perhaps it is here that Miss Josephine found her inspiration to be a sunshiny girl in everyday life, but to be happy seems to me to be a most excellent way to acquire beauty.

Her Program.

"I am going to be so happy and contented with life that I will just naturally attract sunshine instead of shadow," went on the dainty girl whose picture delights you to-day. "I am going to be so pleased with my life and work that my expression can never be bitter or discontented, but instead must be sweet and friendly.

"Bitterness, discontent, envy, worry, anger, malice—I am going to banish them from my mind more and more earnestly as I get more and more power to pursue a search for happiness. If only girls knew what foes to beauty these evil feelings were they would all join me in a happiness hunt and get such sweet expressions that every one would be exclaiming: 'Well, I declare, if Mamie Jones isn't getting to be a beauty—she has the most attractive expression!' "

Suddenly Miss Josephine trilled out a merry laugh.

"Want to see one practical detail of my hunt for happiness? Well, I am making my feet happy, too! I wear flat-soled tennis shoes with buck instead of tennis soles, since rubber draws the feet, and so rest and relax the muscles and tendons of my feet. Narrow, tight, high-heeled shoes do not make your feet comfortable; they actually hurt your health, and they do great harm to the serenity of your face. You know the desperate expression you often see on the face of a girl whose shoes are too tight or are pitching her forward, with the strain coming heavily on already tired muscles. Well, an expression like that may carve its way in ugly lines right into a face. So I recommend making your feet happy if you want your face to look happy!

Ventral Courtesy.

"I am very polite to my digestion. I don't ask its overtaxed organs to handle heavy meats and rich sauces all through the hot summer. Instead, I eat vegetables and salads and the lighter meats, and give my system tonic food, instead of task food, in summer. An ideal summer program is to have meat on your dinner menu only two or three times a week. For instance: Chicken on Sunday, steak on Tuesday, lamb on Thursday, fish on Friday, and on the other three days try soup and a few extra vegetables for your dinner. Simple menus will give your 'digestery' a rested, happy feeling that will tell in a happy, rested-looking face.

"If you like it as well as I do, you will be delighted to drink three glasses of buttermilk during the day, and on rising and on retiring you will enjoy a bit of watercress with salt. Fine tonics for the system—both of these. Then to make your skin and muscles rejoice in the general prosperity, try a morning and evening rub with equal parts of alcohol and witch hazel. That will add a fine glow to the general beauty-dealing feeling of happiness you want to acquire. Oh, it is great fun working out a system whereby you will acquire happiness and all its attendant blessings of beauty and health and power to advance in the world."

As we left Miss Josephine's pretty home on a cross street, just west of Broadway, a friend called to the little blue linen-suited figure: "Hello, little bluebird!" And the bluebird is for happiness, you know.

LILIAN LAUFERTY.

Its Virtue.

President A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard, said at a dinner in his honor in Chicago:

"Early marriages are the best. It is neither good for the man nor for the community that he should wait until he is 28 years old before marrying."

President Lowell paused a moment and then, smiling, he continued:

"Another trouble about late marriages is that the man's habits—his bad habits—are formed, and it's hard to break him of them. You know, perhaps, the story of the cigarette?

"A man of the old fashioned 'manly man' type—the soft, full-stomached type that drinks too much, belongs to too many lodges, and must be superior to woman in everything—this man took umbrage over his wife's cigarette, the one modest cigarette that she took after dinner, though he, of course, smoked like a chimney all day long. And so he said, one evening:

"'I believe you think more of that nasty, poisonous cigarette than you do of me, your husband.'

"'Well, dear,' his wife replied, smiling and blowing a cloud, 'I can keep my cigarette, you know, from going out.'"

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Mildred Farley was a dressmaker," this gentleman went on. "If you read the newspapers you know that, and also know that she worked hard at her duties for some weeks before her death. But what is very strange in her connection, and, together with some other reasons unnecessary to state here makes it difficult for the police to settle down to the belief that her death was the simple suicide it at first seemed, is that no one has succeeded in discovering for whom she worked, and to what home she carried the various dresses she finished in that time. For though it may not be material to know this, and may not help the affair forward one jot toward its rightful issue, yet because it is a mystery and an unsolved one, those whose business it is to see every doubtful case made clear, have sent me to this house to see if some light can not be thrown by you upon it."

He paused and looked at Genevieve. She at once raised her eyes and surveyed him steadily.

"You think, then, that I knew Mildred Farley?" was her question, clearly and coldly uttered.

At Loggerheads.

"Did you not?" he inquired.

Her lips broke into a smile. "Ask Dr. Cameron," she suggested, and seemed to think she had answered his question.

Their visitor glanced at the doctor, met only a dubious shake of the head, and continued in a more formal tone.

"If you did not know Miss Farley, it is strange she should have made the dresses of your trousseau, Mrs. Cameron."

"I don't understand you," was that lady's reply. "My dresses were made by any one but that girl. This I can assure you most positively, sir."

"You can. We are then brought round to my first question: who was it that did make your dresses, Mrs. Cameron?"

It was smilingly said, but it caused her to flush with great indignation.

"Is it necessary that I should tell you?" she somewhat haughtily inquired.

"If you do not, I cannot prevent certain people I know from thinking it was Mildred Farley."

"And why?" Dr. Cameron now broke in. "What reasons have they or any one to connect my wife with that poor unfortunate?"

"Only a very material one which I leave to Mrs. Cameron to explain. In the room of that dead girl were found scraps and ends of silk and velvet, which were preserved by the police as pieces of the goods she had been lately making up into dresses. Among these was a morsel of trimming—here it is—and as this trimming or some just like it was seen by chance upon a dress worn by Mrs. Cameron, it struck one of our agents that she was in all probability the lady who had profited by this poor girl's handiwork."

"The conclusion of a man!" exclaimed Mrs. Cameron, with chill sarcasm. "I suppose there are in this city to-day, twenty ladies with just that trimming on their gowns."

"And with this gray velvet for a dress? And this—I do not know how to call it—for another? And this soft white silk so suitable for a bride's adorning, and"——

"Enough, enough," cried Mrs. Cameron, putting up her hands merrily as a half dozen samples of various goods and colors fell in a shower into her lap. "I own to these, but I do not own to Mildred Farley. You waste your time; you will never find that she did any sewing for me, however she came into possession of these pieces." And with a half careless, half disdainful smile, she flirted the bits aside, looking so imperious and so charming, that for a moment her visitor seemed a trifle abashed and half rose as if to go. "You see if I had anything to tell, I would," she murmured, graciously. "But I have not. I cannot explain any more than you how these samples from my dresses should have been found where they were. I can only look at them and wonder. Is that enough, sir?"

"Hardly," his look seemed to say, but he rose. "And you will not tell me where your dresses were made?" he smiled.

She shook her head, laughed and rose with an arch air.

The Back Porch.

"It is a secret I have kept even from my husband, but if you must have it, you must. And rising on tiptoe with a look of merry defiance at the doctor, she whispered something in the visitor's ear.

He listened, stared at her a moment and broke into a genial laugh.

"And so this is your secret," he cried. "Well, I know how to respect the secrets of a lady when such respect does not interfere with my duty."

And with a gallant bow he took his leave, expressing the hope that he had not made his call to lengthy.

After he was gone Dr. Cameron turned to his wife.

"And what did you whisper in that big man's ear to calm him so suddenly?"

"Ah, you want to know my secret too," she laughed. "Well, I told him that the work which has been so much admired had been done by no woman. That in my vanity and desire for originality I had had the poor taste to employ a man, and that I was secretly ashamed of it."

"She told you that?" cried Mr. Gryce. "And you believed here? Humph!"

"She spoke the truth," asserted his companion—the gentleman whose name we purposely suppressed in the last chapter."

"You think so?"

"I do. There was something in her tone, whisper though it was, which brought conviction. I do not question her word in the least."

"Well, we will see; I did not hear her and so may be pardoned for having my doubts. I will talk with you again, sir. The play may not be worth the candle, and it may; a few days more will determine."

"And Molesworth?"

"Is very well as he is."

This conversation, fragmentary though it is, will show something of the stand which Mr. Gryce was taking in this matter. He had Molesworth under his eye and as good as under arrest, and yet he was not satisfied. Something—was it instinct or experience?—told him that this affair possessed complications of no ordinary nature, and that to a conscientious man like himself there were doubts to be solved and possibilities to be sounded, before he would dare proceed against the doctor as against a presumably guilty man.

But with the kindred remembrance of what the woman in Mrs. Olney's boarding house had said about Mildred Farley's frequent comings and goings with her great box, he did not consider it so foolish now, and only wished he had probed the subject deeper at the time. It was not so late yet, however, but that proper inquiries in the right places would settle the question as to whether these two girls were the same. He had only to pass a word or two with the complaisant butler at Mr. Gretorex's house, to learn enough to have the laugh, to say the least, on his somewhat credulous superior. To Mr. Gretorex's house he therefore went, and to Mr. Gretorex's butler he at once addressed himself.

He found this person quite ready to talk in his easy, French way.

The Butler.

"Zat girl? I—none of ze help know somezing bout zat girl, only Mees Gretorex always was at home when she come. A veil for ze face? Oui, so zick you no can see if she was black or white. But she was ver pretty—look good, Sacre! She walk good—proud like a comtesse. She no look at me. One time Pierre try, I try to speak wiz her. It was no good. If she was much deaf she do just so; for she look not to me, she look not to Pierre."

"You're right, Count," laughed a voice over their shoulders, "and one of us ain't a bad looking man, either."

It was Peter, who liked a bit of gossip as well as his neighbor, and who now came forward smiling.

"I feel ze compliment, M. Pierre, and it is ver much good for you to say so," retorted the "Count" with a grandiose bow. "It is ze opinion of ze ladies in ze house."

The butler then winked slyly at Gryce, and satisfied that he had effectually discomfited the footman, proceeded to put questions to the detective as to his reasons for the interest he showed in this girl, which that functionary had wit and experience enough to successfully parry.

Peter helped him; for Peter was a rival of the butler's in more than one field, and in his good-natured way invariably took part against him in any controversy, and it was from Peter that Mr. Gryce finally got the acknowledgment that this young woman, or lady, as he persisted in calling her, usually wore a long, black ulster and made her appearance in the evening.

Now this was satisfactory. In the closet of Mildred Farley at Mrs. Olney's house there was a long, black ulster, and she, as we know, was accustomed to take her work home evenings.

"But she didn't have the ulster on the last time she came, oh, no," continued Peter. "I don't know what it was made the difference, but she looked foine. O, now! well I'm tellin' ye I wouldn't have known her at all, at all, but for her ould brown veil and little handbag. Them wur the same as before and so was the air of her. Not a word nor the divil of a look for one of us; but being the night o' the wedding, she got out o' me head, for sure I had enough else to moind."

Her Handbag.

This last admission was a surprise, but Mr. Gryce was accustomed to surprises, so he kept quite still; the more so that he saw the butler was about to speak, and he always preferred to glean his facts through the questions of other people rather than his own.

"Zat girl here on Miss Gretorex's wedding night? I zink you was mistake, Pierre."

"Mistaken is it I am! when these two hands let her in meself at the back door. It wasn't only here she was, but it's helpin' Miss Gretorex to dress she was, and divil a minute she had to spare, aither, being just in the nick of time to be of any help at all, at all, to her. I didn't see her leave, though."

Mr. Gryce felt his interest cool. Reason told him how improbable it was that his person with all her mysteries, could have been the runaway bride of Julius Molesworth. Even if this house had not been miles distant from the C—— Hotel where he had himself seen her at 7 o'clock of that same night, the great improbability of her fleeing from her own nuptials to assist in this very humble capacity at those of another, was too manifest for his consideration even. Yet because habit was strong in him and habit forbade him to leave a subject till he had exhausted it, he put in a word which he thought must settle the matter.

EVANS DECLARES CLOUDY DAY IS BEST FOR GOLF

By Chick Evans.

TO my mind a gray day gives the ideal golfing weather. This sort of a day frequently precedes or follows rain and there is something in the moist freshness of the atmosphere and absence of glare that is wholly delightful. The clubs at such a time seem unusually light and if they are your own there is a wonderful balance and the blades appear to lie supremely well. The grip also seems perfect because the moisture of the air gets into the leather and gives that feeling of absolute security to the grip. While this feeling in damp weather is true of all grips, it is particularly true of the oiled leather kind.

For some reason, whether it is a quality of the atmosphere or because one's clubs feel so good, the flight of the ball seems steadier and the picture of the little white globe floating in a true and steady line against a dull gray background of sky is a sight to warm the heart of every golfer.

Sun's Glare Hampers Player.

On a bright, warm day the glare from the sun is often distressing to the eyes of the golfer, and a round of golf under a midsummer sun leaves him exhausted. But an overcast day is a comfort to the eyes and a strengthening tonic to the whole physique. One's game itself is better, too, for the moist greens hold the iron shots and permit accurate placing.

The game of golf evolved under gray skies, along wide, moist, grassy places by the sea. In Great Britain there are hundreds and hundreds of overcast days. Then, on these matchless courses, in sight and sound of the waves, with the smell of the sea and the moist freshness of its breath in one's nostrils, the game is enjoyed in all of its natural flavor.

Prairie Courses Harder.

We miss, perhaps, a good deal of this subtle enjoyment of the game on our sun-baked courses. When the greens are like lightning and the fairway cracked and seamed iron shots will not stay where put and fine points of the game are impossible of application. But while we miss much, we are spared that frequent British affliction—a downpour of rain in the midst of an interesting match.

I love an overcast day for golf, the gray sky and moist breeze are like an inspiring draught, but heaven preserve me from a rainy day upon the links.

Sports and Such

FAMOUS IN SPORT—VII.

The Fight Manager.

THE FIGHT MANAGER IS AN ever-present example of the value of human endeavor, so long as you can get somebody else to do the endeavoring. It is the mission of the Fight Manager to live by the toil of other men, and, so far as we are a judge, he does his duty. We never heard of one who starved to death.

Managing fighters has all of the advantages of managing a bank, with none of the risks. When a bank gets in bad you can not shake it and pick up another one; but the average Fight Manager continues to blow expensive cigar smoke into the eye of the Sporting Editor long after dozens of fighters he has managed have gone back to sparring for pork chops in the outskirts of Detroit and Cincinnati.

Lest you be thus encouraged to rush blindly into the business, it is our duty to warn you that certain natural gifts are essential. The successful Fight Manager must have tireless vocal chords, a barb-proof hide, a property smile and the imagination of a mining-stock salesman. Also, the gall of a policeman.

It is by no means necessary that he have a fighter. Many men have tried to get by with merely a fighter and have failed. It is much better to tow around some muscular misfit with a ten-ounce brain and by persistent talking and "gettin' in with the right guys" convince the public that he is a fighter. A real fighter usually has enough intelligence to want to audit accounts every now and then, and this is a serious handicap to real success in this profession.

But for the kind of man that fits into the profession it is certainly the kind of profession for him to fit into. Two or three thousand per cent profits are common. For instance, Lute McCarty won $4,000 in his last fight, and when every one had gotten his there was $26 left for the estate. That's a business.

Tuesday Society Night at 'Drome

R.F. Maddox Sweepstakes Feature

TUESDAY night has been selected as "society night" at the Motordrome, and a special card has been arranged to delight the large attendance that is expected to witness the events.

The feature event on the program is to be the Robert F. Maddox Sweepstakes, to be run in three heats of six riders each. The award will be on points.

Then there is a three-cornered race among Jock McNeil, Harry Glenn and Harry Swartz, which also promises a lot of excitement.

Here is the program:

Motordrome Purse.

(Heats, 1 mile, final, 2 miles; winner in each heat and second man in fastest heat.)

First Heat—Graves, Swartz and Lockner.

Second Heat—Richards, Luther and Renel.

Third Heat—McNeil, Lewis and Glenn.

Three-Cornered Match Race.

(Three heats, 1 mile, 2 miles and 3 miles.)

First Heat—Glenn, McNeil and Swartz. One mile.

Final Motordrome Purse, two miles.

Second Heat — Three-cornered match race, two miles.

R. F. Maddox Sweepstakes.

(French point system, 10 for first, 6 for second and 2 for third; three heats, 2, 4 and 6 miles.)

First Heat—Two miles: Graves, Richards, Luther, Lewis, Renel and Lockner.

Third Heat—Three-cornered match race, three miles.

Second Heat—Maddox Sweepstakes, four miles.

Third heat—Maddox Sweepstakes, six miles.

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

TWO MINUS ONE.

(Paraphrasing a well-known author.)

Two things greater than all things are,
One is a bush league baseball star
Who smites the ball with a heart of vim
And earns the kale they have paid for him.

P.S.—The other thing doesn't count.

It is said Fred Merkle is the lad who smote John McGraw on the jowl. This shows that ivory never melts.

In golf, which Mr. Merkle is alleged to play every morn, the slogan is: "Keep your eye on the ball." In baseball, which Mr. Merkle is alleged to play every afternoon, the slogan is: "Keep your eye on the base."

Charlie Ebbets is said to be figuring on a new manager, thus showing that he is willing to go to any expense to get something new to dedicate.

One is not surprised to read that Miller Huggins wants an entirely new team. But one might be surprised to read that he is satisfied with the team he has.

Occasionally a youth from California gets a trimming in a tennis tournament. We said occasionally.

Ban Johnson announces that the world's series will open on October 6. The announcement is received with great enthusiasm among ticket speculators.

It is claimed that tickets speculation on the world series has been reduced to a minimum. Figuring thusly, a maximum would be approximately 175 per cent of the gate receipts.

The report that Clark Griffith has offered $100,000 for Ty Cobb leads one to suspect that he is hitting .400 in the hop league.

We note in the newspapers that one Ar Chung, a Chinese lightweight, made one Pat McCarty quit. The A. O. H. will now proceed to start a libel suit.

It is rumored that Freddie Welch has saved $100,000 out of his earnings. This reveals the fact that his earnings were $100,000.05.

THIS PARAGRAPH IS WRITTEN TO IMMORTALIZE ONE HUMID KALLA PASHA, AN HONEST WRESTLER. HUMID IS HONEST ENOUGH TO ADMIT THAT THERE AIN'T NO SUCH THING.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Tommy Walsh, of New Orleans, who looks after the affairs of Joe Mandot, has also taken George "Knockout" Brown, the Chicago middleweight, under his management. He has matched Brown to meet Jack Dillon, the Indianapolis fighter, in a ten-round bout at a show to be brought off at Terre Haute, Ind., on Labor Day.

* * *

Tom McCarey, the fight promoter, has offered to assist Jim Coffroth, the San Francisco promoter, in getting a star bout for his show on Labor Day afternoon. As Champion Willie Ritchie has agreed to fight Freddie Welch at Vancouver on that day, Coffroth has been left without an attraction. McCarey is willing to let Coffroth have Johnny Dundee, Ad Wolgast or any fighter that is under contract to him.

* * *

Jimmy Clabby, the veteran middleweight, is in San Francisco trying to get a match with Bob McAllister. Jim Coffroth is trying to match the pair for a September date. Clabby is one of the real marvels of the boxing game and should be a big hit on the coast.

* * *

Charley Miller, who defeated Frank Whitney here last week, will meet Johnny Griffiths in a twelve-round bout at Akron, Ohio, on Labor Day. Griffiths recently defeated Young Saylor and also knocked out Phil Brock in three rounds. After this scrap White may go to the coast for a set-to with Harlem Tommy Murphy.

* * *

The San Langford-Joe Jeannette match, which has been hanging fire for some time, is now a settled affair. Tom McCarey has received assurances from both fighters that they will be ready to go the marathon route on October 7.

* * *

If the proposed match between Willie Ritchie and Freddie Welch goes through it will be the first international contest for the lightweight championship since George Lavigne and Dick Burge fought in England a number of years ago.

* * *

It is impossible to any longer overlook Gunboat Smith as a candidate for the heavyweight championship honors. Smith has gone right along whipping every man he has been matched with. His latest victory over Jim Flynn has certainly added a big feather in his cap.

TOMMY LONG AND CHAPMAN PLAY TO-DAY

HERE'S a grain of comfort. The Crackers will be able to send their regular line-up against the Barons this afternoon, when the first game of the series begins at 3:30 o'clock—note the change in the time.

Manager Smith said this morning that Tommy Long had about got over his severe cold and would be in left field this afternoon. Chapman's wrenched ankle has come around in good shape and Harry will be back of the wood.

As to the first slabman to get a whack at the Moles, Bill is going to try out the Gil Price jinx again. Gil has had something on the Barons all season; they haven't seemed able to make a start against the big left-hander, and Gil himself is eager to tackle them in the jump game.

A report from Birmingham announces the purchase of Ed Ery, leading pitcher of the Georgia-Alabama League, who is to report here to-day. "Rube" Evans, the big left-hander, has been suspended for failure to keep in condition, and Bill Prough was called away from the club by a sister's illness, so Molesworth's slab staff is badly in need of bolstering.

The Barons' manager said this morning that Prough was expected on almost any train from the direction of Athens, Ala., and that Ery was being looked for hourly, also. McGilvray is out of the line-up, too. Hardgrove is scheduled to pitch this afternoon.

Crackers Sign 'Goat' Holliday For Next Season

"Goat Holliday, the former crack first baseman of Tech, to-day signed a contract to play with the Crackers next season. He will report next spring.

Holliday was one of the greatest college first sackers in the South two years ago and should prove a good man for the local representatives in the Southern League.

As Joe Agler has been sold to the Jersey City club of the International League, the Crackers will have to unearth a worthy man for the first sack. Holliday may prove the right man.

Thousands at Burial Of Mine War Victims

CALUMET, MICH., Aug. 18.—A big public funeral for the two copper strikers killed in a fight Thursday night between Deputy Sheriffs and strikers was held here yesterday. A special train brought the bodies here from the Champion mine and thousands of strikers from every part of the copper district attended the services.

HANLON GETS PLAYERS.

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—E. J. Hanlon, president of the Sioux City Western League club, obtained from the Detroit Americans the outfielder and pitcher he needed for his team, it was learned today. Hanlon's visit here was brief and he did not give out the names of his new players.

JEFFRIES 'DOPE STORY' GAINS NEW HEARING

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—The direct statement that James J. Jeffries, after his defeat by Jack Johnson at Reno, sought and secured proof that he had been drugged before the battle with the negro was made in a signed article written by a New York sporting editor and published in an evening paper to-day.

The statement follows, in part:

"Jeffries hired one of the greatest detective agencies in the world to run down the facts. The details he gathered make up a complete story of the most sordid plot that ever turned fair sport into a sure-thing gamble. Possibly Johnson would have won in any case, but the clique that handled the betting made it a certainty by drugging Jeffries with the help of men who were in his confidence and who had the run of his camp. They cleaned up a fortune through betting commissioners stationed in many cities. In Paris alone they wagered $24,000 and won $40,000. In Reno and San Francisco and Los Angeles and New York their gains went into the hundreds of thousands.

"The 'tip' for the big killing was received by the waiting commissioners less than 24 hours before the fight when the gamblers knew that Jeffries was 'safe.'

"The grist plot was broached in a back room; the last man necessary to its success accented his part in a meeting in a Reno alley two nights before the fight, after having learned that he could make no more money with Jeffries and that he could win thousands by turning Judas. One man whose available cash was also secretly wagered on Johnson smilingly posed as a friendly adviser of Jeffries during the fight."

FRANK GOTCH RETIRES AGAIN FOR STEENTH TIME

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Aug. 18.—Frank Gotch, greatest of all wrestlers, is through with the mat forever. In a letter to the sporting editor of The Minneapolis Daily News, received today, Gotch says:

"While the Minnesota State fair people made me an excellent offer to wrestle Zbyszko on September 5, I have turned it down, as I will all other propositions to return to the game.

"I have enough money, am happily married, and will spend the balance of my days with the people of Humboldt, Iowa, which means more to me than living in a mansion in New York City or in a castle in England. I shall always be an interested follower of the wrestling game, but will be satisfied to sit on the outside of the ring in the future."

Organize Dixie League Club Here

New Circuit Planned for South

APPLICATION for a charter for the Atlanta Baseball Club of the Dixie League was filed this morning in the office of the County Clerk, the petition being signed by the following incorporators:

Guy Hawkins and M. C. Kiser, of Atlanta; Carl Camp, of Fulton County, and Judge W. J. Bacon and H. N. Pharr, of Memphis.

W. W. Hood, local attorney for the club, which now is in the process of organization, spoke very highly of the prospects and aims of the new league.

"It has the proper men back of it, for one thing," Mr. Hood said. "Then it has the cream of the Southern cities. Here is the list: Atlanta, Memphis, New Orleans, Birmingham, Chattanooga, Nashville, Little Rock and Shreveport.

"With the exception of the last two cities, all now are members of the Southern League, with established rating as baseball towns. Little Rock and Shreveport have held Southern League franchises, and are eager to get regular league baseball again."

Besides being an incorporator of the Atlanta club, Judge Bacon is president of the new league. He is a man of much prominence and influence in Tennessee, and states plainly that the league has ample financial backing to launch its circuit next season without the need of placing any stock with outsiders, though it is thought best that each club shall be controlled by men living in its own city.

Application is to be made to the National Commission for affiliation under the present national agreement, which would give the new league a recognized standing at once. If that is denied, however, the league will proceed just the same.

In a statement issued to-day, Judge Bacon asserted that it was not the plan of the Dixie League to fight the Southern, but rather to arrange its schedule so as to furnish continuous baseball in the six cities which would have two clubs. At the end of each season an All-Southern championship is suggested, similar to the world's series, between the champion club of the Southern and that of the Dixie League.

Another meeting of the directors of the league will be called within 30 days, by which time the various local clubs are expected to be well organized.

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

Intense rivalry in Empire League cities is in evidence now in every game played. Charges and counter charges are being hurled at first one team, then another, while the president of the league gets his full share, too.

* * *

Babe Wilder, the wonder of the league, has lost the last three games he pitched for Cordele. The losses were not his fault, as errors behind him let his opponents score enough to win.

* * *

Brouthers, playing in the field for Americus, came mighty near pulling off a fatal play for his team recently. He tried to get a stone in center field, thinking it was the ball which had just been hit safely. A fellow fielder saw the mistake and nipped the real article up in time to save a run.

* * *

Left Fielder Powers, of the Waycross team, has returned to Jacksonville. He was declared ineligible and Waycross had nothing to do but let him go. He is a fleet fielder and has made a neat record during his stay with Waycross.

* * *

Ten victories to one defeat is the pitching record held by Ducey, of the Americus team. He was signed originally as a fielder but has developed into a pitcher as good as the best in the league.

* * *

Outfielder Schuyler, of the Brunswick team, is climbing rapidly in batting. He hits the ball hard regularly.

* * *

Day came back strong against the Valdosta team after they knocked him out of the box and won his game with ease for Thomasville. His shut-out record in the Empire is a goodsone.

* * *

Otto Jordan seems good on picking up good players. He has landed Wise, a catcher, and from the way the fellow plays he is slated for faster company. Gordon and Vaughan, pitchers, will both land in the Sally and perhaps higher. Gordon has already gone to Macon and ought to make good. And the Valdosta team has others just as reliable.

* * *

Empire baiting in the league has ruined a number of games recently and the fans generally are in hopes of changes before another season arrives that will make this impossible. Attacks on umpires by players have received only minor treatment.

* * *

By winning four straight games, two from the league leaders, Waycross climbed out of the cellar position for the first time since early in July, when the second half of the season started.

* * *

Added to his fielding ability Doc Fenton, playing center for Waycross, has started hitting at a terrific clip. He got two home runs in succession and four hits in succession the next day. His put-out record is eight for one game, and has no equal in the league.

* * *

Red Stiles, who started the season with Waycross and went to Thomasville when he was released, has been suspended for the balance of the season at his own request.

* * *

"Handy" Anderson, who is playing third for Waycross, has developed into a remarkably fine player for a youngster. He joined Waycross from a school team, and made good with a rush. He plays short splendidly and is at home in the field. His bunting is a feature and he seldom fails to reach first when he gets one placed to his notion.

* * *

Stewart, the new pitcher with Brunswick, has a cross-fire ball that is mighty hard to hit. He has worked it with success on the best batters and fooled them every time. His brother, playing with Americus, is also able to work some deceptive balls over the plate.

TINKER READY TO QUIT JOB AS REDS' MANAGER

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—The repeated rumors that all was not well in the affairs of the Cincinnati camp and that the days of Joe Tinker as manager were numbered, were partly confirmed to-day.

The hustling leader of the Reds admitted he was ready to quit. The policies of Garry Herrmann, president of the club, does not jibe with his own, he said, and unless his superior was willing to reconstruct some of his pet theories the team would soon be under a new leader.

Tinker's declaration to-day was caused by the receipt of a telegram from Herrmann notifying Joe that he had "violated baseball law" by airing their differences.

• • •

"I REALIZE that I must take a stand with regard to the management of the club, or step down and out," said the Red manager. "The showing of the team has been a great disappointment to all concerned and I have held off because I felt that I am not a success myself, so far as I have gone. Since the club has not been making money I felt that it was up to me to stand for some things that I would not otherwise have endured."

• • •

THE selling outright of his players to minor leagues was what caused the break, according to Tinker, who felt that he should be allowed to make profitable trades with the other National League teams.

"I would rather go out to my fruit farm in Oregon," he added, "than to try to handle a club when I am not backed up by the owners. I shall not let another player go unless I know just what the deal is."

GRAND CIRCUIT MEET OPENS AT CHARLESTON NEXT WEEK

CHARLESTON, ILL., Aug. 18.—The Eastern Illinois Grand Racing Circuit opens the season with a program at Charleston next week, the dates being August 19 to 23. There will be three events of $1,000 purses each and ten events of $400 purses, assuring an attractive program. The second week of this circuit was awarded to Urbana, the dates being August 26 to 29. Entries to both meetings have been satisfactory.

PITCHER COMSTOCK SOLD TO DETROIT FOR $5,000

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Aug. 18.—Pitcher Ralph Comstock, of Minneapolis, who has been doing sensational work in the American Association, to-day was sold to the Detroit Americans for $5,000, Catcher Rondeau and a pitcher to be named later. Comstock had been reported sold to Comiskey's club, but there was some hitch in the deal.

Barons Loaded for Grouch Fight

Next Series an Elimination Bout

By O. B. Keeler.

BESTOWING a parting and futile imprecation upon the Pepper Kids, Atlanta fandom will now direct its clamorous attention to the advancing Barons, here for three games.

Indications point to another grouch fight.

Moley still might be considered a pennant contender, if you are good at considering. The reason Moley isn't more of a p. c. is because the Crackers licked him a straight series in Slagville recently.

So you may see quite easily the esteem and affection Moley would hold for our crowd, who also can be considered a pennant possibility—granting for the second time that the consideration faculty is working well.

• • •

THE approaching combat, therefore, takes on the status of an elimination bout for the Hope Championship. If the Barons obtain the measure of revenge they naturally are seeking, the stuff is absolutely off for us, barring miracles.

And miracles do not happen in baseball as frequently as one might suppose.

On the other hand, if Messrs. Moley, Prough, et al, again fail to come through, M. P. & Co. are entirely to the frittz, so far as 1913 is concerned.

And as for our own little outlook, that depends very largely on what is happening to the Gulls.

• • •

OF course, as long as Mique Finn can keep his justly celebrated $30 ball club steaming along at anything approaching its present clip, it really doesn't make a blamed bit of difference whether the Crackers win double-headers and things or lose them.

That is the strategic disadvantage of being seven or eight laps back of the pacemaker.

ON the whole, we are beginning to frog up a little stuff about the prospects for 1914—proclaiming loudly, nevertheless, our entire willingness to die game on the platform as adopted by the 1913 convention.

• • •

THAT Chattanooga series, now, fell in on us at a thoroughly unfortunate place.

Chapman was injured and the services of the speedy and hard-hitting Tommy Long were lost after the first indecisive struggle.

• • •

That of itself would make an acceptable alibi, if this were the open season for alibis.

Except, in that case, the Pepper Kids could put witnesses on the stand to testify to their own dismemberment and the fact that they had so few pitchers that the huge Pole had to be unloaded three times in one series.

That, however, is strictly an alibi with a flareback. If the full staff of Chattanooga hurlers could have been sent against the Crackers in order, and the Pole left in the lumber pile, it would have been an agreeable surprise for the Town Boys.

That's the kind of a pest the Pole is.

WELL, here are the Barons, and, as stated somewhere up ahead near the baggage car of this alleged train of thought, the meeting is in the nature of a grouch fight.

That usually makes business good—also baseball. No man full of red corpuscles cares to see a baseball game played as if between roommates.

Then, too, Bill Smith's birthday comes along next Wednesday, and there is going to be a little party at Ponce DeLeon in his honor. There will be a band, and about nine thousands guests are expected—if it doesn't rain.

This will be a good chance for the great body of fans who like Bill and his work to come out and let him know about it.

LARGE CROWD SEES YOUNG AND WILLARD WORK OUT

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 18.—Packed to capacity training camp crowds saw "White Hope" Jess Willard and "Bull" Young, matched to box twenty rounds before the Pacific A. C. at Vernon next Friday night, go through with their work-outs yesterday afternoon.

Leach Cross, matched to box Mexican Joe Rivers on Labor Day, returned from Catalina Island yesterday and will immediately open his camp at Doyle's resort, Vernon. Rivers will start work to-morrow. The local boy is to select a camp site at one of the beaches.

EARLY BASEBALL MEETING.

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—The annual meeting of the baseball league will be held here in October instead of December, according to B. B. Johnson. The earlier date was chosen on account of the world tour of the Chicago club.

A. A. C. WILL HAVE WATER SPORTS NEXT SATURDAY

There will be a lot of splashing, plain and fancy, at East Lake next Saturday when the second annual "water sports day" is to be observed by the Atlanta Athletic Club.

The water sports committee now is at work on the program, on which there are to be nine events, including swimming, canoeing, boat racing and fancy diving.

A dinner-dance will top off the afternoon's diversions.

JEANETTE AND LANGFORD TO CLASH IN 10-ROUND GO

NEW YORK, Aug 18.—Sam Lanford, the Bostan "Tar Baby" and Joe Jeannette, the Hoboken heavyweight, have signed article to box ten rounds at Madison Square Garden the latter part of September. The match was closed yesterday.

FEW REFEREES HAVE COMMAND OF RING MEN

By Otto C. Floto.

IT may be "old stuff," this harping and dwelling on the duties and action of a referee in the ring, yet it is always a timely subject to those interested in fights and fighting. Not so long ago, in an Eastern city, the writer sat at the ringside and watched two huskies clinching each other and holding on for dear life. The referee, only a man of average strength, was exhausting himself prying them apart—and quite an unsuccessful job he made of it. The thought then struck me how easily all this violation of the rules could be remedied. The referee has but to live up the meaning of the code as promulgated for 50 years or so and all trouble is quickly eliminated.

In the first place, there is no rule which tolerates clinching; neither is there a rule strenuously forbidding it. But there is a rule which says positively there must be no holding. A man battling in the ring can keep on hitting an opponent just as long as he has both or one arm free and providing also that he is not holding his opponent while striking him. No matter how much one man holds, the other man can keep on whaling away if his arms are free.

The trouble with the average referee is that he has absolutely no command of the fighters. They simply do as they please, regardless of his commands. I have seen many officiate in the ring, but I can recall only one who never yet has gone between the men to separate them. This man is Billy Roche. Somehow or other he manages to separate the men whenever he walks to them and says, "Break!" I have seen other referees do this a hundred times and no attention paid to it, but I have never yet heard Roche say it that the men didn't part.

RITCHIE-WELCH MATCH POSTPONED TILL SEPT. 20

VANCOUVER, B. C., Aug. 18.—The Welsh-Ritchie bout, scheduled to be fought here on Labor Day, has been postponed until September 20. Welsh is suffering from a sprained ankle. Ritchie will stay here and meet the best available local man on Labor Day. Ritchie showed a very fair spirit when the accident occurred, and instead of calling off the match readily agreed to the postponement.

BROOKLYN MAKING CHANGES.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Aug. 18.—The Brooklyn club yesterday announced the unconditional release of Outfielder Scheer. Catcher Edwin was sent to Toronto. The club has exercised its claim on Outfielder Hub Northern of Toronto and relinquished its claims on Pitcher Williams of Nashville and Pitcher Echardt of Indianapolis.

KETCHEL GETS LONG SCRAP WITH EDDIE JOHNSON

DENVER, COL., Aug. 18.—Steve Ketchel's manager, Larry Lichenstein, to-day accepted the terms of Jimmie Fitzpatrick to have the Englewood lightweight star meet Eddie Johnson, the "fighting Dane," before the Pueblo Athletic Club, September 15. This contest is scheduled to take place during "State Fair Week" and the fighters will go twenty rounds, weight to be 133 pounds at 3 o'clock.

NATIONAL COMMISSION PUTS KEOKUK IN GOOD

CINCINNATI, OHIO, Aug. 18.—The National Baseball Commission yesterday restored the Keokuk club, of the Central Association, to good standing, the club having paid an award of $175 to Player R. A. Madigan. The National Commission revoked its order of August 6, which put the Keokuk club outside the provisions of the national agreement for failure to pay the player as authorized.

Player James Vaughn complained that Ray Caldwell, of the New York American club, refused to pay a loan of $16 which he alleged was borrowed from him by Caldwell in the spring of 1912. The Commission held that Caldwell had made no defense after a copy of the petition had been forwarded to him, and declared Caldwell ineligible to play unless the debt is settled through the office of the New York club within five days of the finding.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Al Palzer, the big Iowa farmer, plans to celebrate his return to form again with a bout with Frank Moran of Pittsburg, at the St. Nicholas Club here on September 3. The Puttsburg heavy has improved steadily of late and believes he can give the mastodonic Western a very interesting evening.

Both fighters expect to start training shortly for the bout.

CHAMPAIGN WINS FLAG IN ILLINOIS-MISSOURI LEAGUE

CHAMPAIGN, ILL., Aug. 18.—Champaign won the pennant of the four-club race of the Illinois-Missouri League, after a brush with Lincoln, which was only decided by the final game of the season. As Lincoln won the six-club race last year a post-season series will be played between Champaign and Lincoln. Champaign played a doubleheader with Streator as the season's windup, winning both games, 6 to 1 and 2-1.

DUNDEE AND AD WILL NOT BOX BEFORE THEIR BOUT

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 18.—Ad Wolgast and Johnny Dundee have telegraphed that they will live up to their articles of agreement with Promoter T. J. McCarey and will not enter the ring until they face each other here on admission day.

Dundee returned from San Francisco yesterday morning and Wolgast is to follow inside the next few days.

"My alleged match with Tommy Murphy was only to bluff Wolgast out of fighting young Azevedo," said Manager "Scotty" Monteith. "We had no intention of breaking our contract. We do not want anybody else to get a chance at Ad before us. Dundee will stop Wolgast inside the twenty round limit."

MEAT IS GOING UP AND UP AND UP

Experts Say Country Will Have Worst Shortage of Beef in Its History.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18—This country will experience next winter the greatest shortage of beef in its history. Prices, which already have advanced 25 to 50 per cent in a year, are to be 10 to 13 per cent higher by January 1. Meat will sell at unheard of figures.

The representative of a big packer in Chicago said yesterday: "Forty cents a pound for the choice cuts seem a certainty, 45 cents in a probability, and even 50 cents a possibility before spring."

George L. McCarthy, proprietor of The National Provisioner, said today that the stock population in the United States is more depleted at present than it has been at any previous time in ten years. That in itself, Mr. McCarthy said, is sufficient cause for very high retail prices. But the drought in Kansas, Oklahoma and the Southwest has aggravated the situation bad before, till it may now be called alarming.

Sky-High Prices by Midwinter.

The expert buyer for Richard Webber, a butcher with an extensive business in New York, didn't hesitate to say that prices are going sky-high by midwinter. The average price paid by the laborer for beef to-day, he said, is 16 cents a pound. The same cuts will cost 18 cents or more in a few months.

The same authority predicted that the average price of sirloin steaks will creep up 3 cents in as many months, while the average price of porterhouse steaks will advance 4 to 5 cents in the same period.

The corn-killing drought in Kansas and neighboring States has deprived the cattle-raising sections of feed for their stock. Fodder remains, but the corn itself, necessary to fatten the steers for market, will have to be shipped into sections of country naturally grain exporters, at an expense that will preclude the idea of satisfactory profit by cattle raisers at anything near the present prices.

For ten days a steady rush of cattle to the big stock markets of the Middle West has been in progress. The raisers can't afford to hold and feed the cattle. In many instances, cows are being sent to market in such numbers that the generation of calves due next spring will be much less than the average.

Rushed to the Slaughter Houses.

Cattle receipts in the Western markets first rose above the normal when the hot weather killed the pasturage. Carload after carload of steers went to Chicago and Kansas City. The general movement to the slaughter houses is still in progress. In the first three days of the present week 129,000 cattle were received at the Western markets, nearly as many as in the entire week a year ago.

The same condition to a certain extent holds true in the hog market, and receipts have been nearly doubled since the drought.

The general situation is about as bad in the East. Mr. McCarthy said that farmers over a great part of the East are selling cattle just now that they would be holding had the hay crop been up to the standard.

Live stock prices are naturally slumping while the markets are loaded with stock. But in spite of the fact that steers and hogs are costing the packers less than at any time for several months no reduction in the wholesale price of meats is announced, and the housewife has obtained no benefits because of the present abnormal conditions in the markets.

The drought, according to stock men, will result in immense profits for the packers because of their ability to buy now and when the cattle raisers are at a disadvantage and to set prices this winter when there is a scarcity in the cattle receipts.

To The Young Expectant Mother

Women of Experience Advise the Use of Mother's Friend.

There is a certain degree of trepidation in the minds of most women in regard to the subject of motherhood. The anticipating to possess is often contradicted by the inherent fear of a period of distress.

But there need be no such dread in view of the fact that we have a most noble remedy in what is known as Mother's Friend. This is an external application that has a wonderful influence and control over the muscular tissues of the abdomen. By its daily use the muscles, cords, tendons and ligaments all gently expand without the slightest strain; there is no pain, no nausea, no nervousness; what was dreaded as a severe physical ordeal becomes a calm, serene, joyful anticipation that has its impress such as our foremost teachers of Eugenics are striving to drill into the minds of the present generation.

In almost every community there are women who have used Mother's Friend, and they are the ones that recovered quickly, conserved their health and strength to thus preside over families destined by every rule of physiology and the history of successful men and women to repeat the story of greater achievement.

Mother's Friend is prepared after the formula of a noted family doctor by the Bradfield Regulator Co., 138 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Write them for their instructive book to expectant mothers. You will find Mother's Friend on sale by all drug stores at $1.00 a bottle.

Burglars Get $600 Worth of Jewelry In Home; Rob Store

Burglars broke into the home of J. W. Russell, No. 3 Lafayette Drive, Ansley Park, Saturday night and stole $600 worth of jewelry. The department store of Morris Brothers, No. 137 Decatur street, was entered through the skylight and a large amount of clothing was stolen.

The robbery at the Russell home was discovered about 11 o'clock, when the family returned. The rooms on the upper floor had been ransacked. Entrance had been gained through a window. Among the stolen articles was Mrs. Russell's wedding ring and two fine watches.

In breaking into the Morris store the burglars were compelled to cross the roofs of seven buildings. They gained access to the roof of the first one from the Washington street viaduct.

New Boll Worm Invades Carolina

GREENVILLE, S. C., Aug. 18.—From Dunklin Township, in this county, come alarming reports of the invasion in that section of a small worm which is said to be playing havoc by devouring cotton bolls.

Large fields of cotton, it is said, are infested with the worm, and the farmers are greatly exercised. They are unable to account for the presence of the worms, and they say they are the first of the kind ever seen in this section.

The worms are rapidly spreading over the lower section of the county, and it is feared that unless something is quickly done to stop the ravages of the pest the crop in that section will be seriously damaged.

Underwood Urged to Run for the Senate

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 18.—Friends of Congressman Oscar W. Underwood, leader in the House of Representatives, are urging him to become a candidate for the United States Senate in the elections of next year, to take effect in 1915.

Even with the positive announcement that he is going to run to the very last, made by Congressman Richmond Pearson Hobson, who has been in the canvass for some time and is still running, it is believed that it would come to pass that Congressman Underwood would have no opposition.

Broker Tries Suicide; Saved by Pulmotor

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Harry Lattimer Bloodgood, broker and society man, attempted suicide by gas, but was saved from death by the use of a pulmotor.

Bloodgood was found in his home with his face covered by a large tin funnel attached to the end of a tube through which gas was flowing. He was seemingly lifeless. The pulmotor soon revived him.

Bloodgood is a brother-in-law of Clara Bloodgood, the actress who killed herself in Baltimore a few years ago.

Mount Zion Plans Big Camp Meeting

GRIFFIN, Aug. 18.—A coming event for the next week that is attracting unusual attention is the opening of the annual camp meeting at the old historic Mount Zion camp ground next Friday night.

Camp meetings have been held annually at that camp ground since 1832, excepting the years of the Civil War.

U. S. Gunboat Nearly Wrecked by Typhoon

SHANGHAI, Aug. 18.—The United States gunboat Wilmington had a narrow escape from destruction in the harbor here to-day during a typhoon. Her anchor began to drag and was going toward shore when rescued by a powerful tug.

The storm did great damage to shipping.

Negro Slayer Taken To Macon for Safety

MACON, Aug. 18.—Doc Mathis, a negro charged with having shot and killed R. L. Jossey, a prominent Lee County planter, was brought to Macon yesterday and lodged in the Bibb County jail for safekeeping. Threats of lynching had been made.

He was trapped at his home at Williamsburg, and fired at the arresting officers several times while they were approaching his house.

OBITUARY

The funeral of William F. Robinson, who died at a hospital Sunday, will be held at the residence, 339 Greenwich avenue, West End, at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon. He was 56 years old, and is survived by his wife, five sons, R. L., W. B., C. H., Angus and John Robinson; four daughters, Mrs. J. J. Ennomoser, Misses Mae and Luelle Robinson, of Atlanta, and Mrs. E. C. Henderson, of Jacksonville, Fla.; his mother, Mrs. Martha A. Powell, of Central, S. C.; one sister, Mrs. F. B. Morgan, of the same place, and two brothers, T. A. Robinson, of Winslow, Ala., and J. F. Robinson, of Atlanta. Interment at Westview.

J. S. Brooks, a veteran of the Civil War, died at the Soldiers' Home Sunday. He was 77 years old. The body is at Poole's chapel, pending funeral arrangements.

The funeral of Beulah B. Jones, infant child of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Jones, who died Saturday, was held from the home Monday morning. Interment at Hollywood.

Benjamin E. Dearybury, 2-year-old infant of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Dearybury, 72 Spring street, died at a private sanitarium at 2 o'clock Monday morning. The body was removed to Poole's and funeral announcement will be made later.

WIVES OF DIGGS AND CAMINETTI WILL TESTIFY

Women To Be Asked to Tell of Their Knowledge of Husbands' Elopement

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 18.—Interest in the trial of Maury I. Diggs on the charge of violating the white slave law will be given fresh impetus to-morrow, when Mrs. Diggs and the wife of F. Drew Caminetti will take the stand as witnesses for the defense.

Mrs. Diggs, who is a handsome, dark-eyed woman, was expected to be called as the first witness. Last Friday she appeared in court with her young daughter, Evelyn, and was one of the most observed persons that sat facing the bench presided over by Federal Judge Van Fleet.

Mrs. Diggs and Mrs. Caminetti will be asked by the defense to tell of their knowledge of the relations between their husbands and Marsha Warrington and Lola Norris.

It is the contention of the attorneys for the defense that one of the reasons for the flight of Diggs and Caminetti to Reno with the two girls was that they believed their wives were about to have them prosecuted by the officials of the juvenile court of Sacramento. It is maintained by the defense that Mrs. Caminetti told her husband that she had complained to Judge Hughes, of the juvenile court of Sacramento, about Diggs and Caminetti in an effort to induce them to sever their relations with Miss Warrington and Miss Norris.

The Government contends that Diggs and Caminetti were reckless debauchers who had decided to go to Reno to desert their wives and induce the girls to lead immoral lives, in violation of the Mann act.

Promoter in Jail, Oil Wells Are Idle

GADSDEN, Aug. 18.—The conviction of E. C. Drew, the Fort Payne oil well promoter, will, it is believed, bring to a close the drilling for oil in DeKalb County.

Nobody appeared to have much faith in oil being found there except Drew. With five years in the penitentiary confronting him, Drew still contends that he will continue his drilling and that eventually he will find oil. But, no matter whether oil is found or not, Drew is held guilty of using the mails to defraud, first because the company in which he sought to sell stock was not regularly organized and second because he applied the money to other purposes than that for which it was intended.

Patten, Again in Pit, Cleans Up $500,000

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—James A. Patten, whose deals in grain and cotton in the last decade have attracted world-wide attention, is once more the central figure in a speculation that is causing the corn pit on the Board of Trade to boil with excitement.

Mr. Patten started to buy corn three weeks ago, when the first reports that hot weather and drought were damaging the crop began to come in. His paper profits at the present time are said to be at least $500,000.

'Cattle Queen' Freed Leases All 'Movies'

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS, COLO., Aug. 18.—In celebration of her acquittal on the charge of "rustling" cattle Anna Bernard, known as the "Cattle Queen," leased all the moving picture houses in the town for the night and treated her friends to screened thrills.

FAMOUS STARS NEW TO SOUTH BOOKED HERE

Manager George of the Atlanta Announces List—Season Opens With Musical Show Sept. 3.

The first harbinger of the new theatrical season has reached Atlanta in the person of Homer C. George, manager of the Atlanta Theater. Returning from his vacation, he stopped by the New York office of Klaw & Erlanger and crowded his grip with news of coming shows. The Shuberts and the Frohmans will be well represented.

The attractive playhouse will open with a predominance of musical shows as usual. According to Mr. George, the first breaths of fall that come with September nights are not sufficiently bracing for anything "heavy," and the first productions will be bright and breezy.

"Mary's Lamb" will be the opener, September 3. "Little Miss Fix-it," "who" caused much talk in New York, will be the second, and "The Merry Countess," one of the big hits of the Shuberts, will come third. An early big attraction will be Otis Harlan in a Savage production of "Little Boy Blue."

Favorites Are Coming.

In the galaxy of stars who are to perform to Atlanta audiences Mr. George points out a number of new ones to the South. Of course many favorites will return. To the trained theatergoer no announcement could produce a keener thrill than the statement that Rose Stahl, who delighted so many in the "Chorus Lady," will come early in her new play, "Maggie Pepper," and that William Faversham will appear in an all-star cast of "Julius Caesar."

But to take them as they come—Mr. George announces the tentative program in this wise:

Miss Annie Russell, three nights, the minstrels of Al G. Field, followed a month later by a reunion of the Dockstader and Primrose shows. In addition come "Here ..." George Evans and then Neil O'Brien.

Big Scenic Plays.

May Irwin is coming in November with her big Cohan Theater success of last season. Robert Hilliard will appear as Detective William J. Burns in a thrilling drama. Early in December Klaw & Erlanger will present that wonderful scenic play, "Ben Hur," for a week.

"Fine Feathers," a new Eugene Walters success, will be here in December, as well as the memorial players from Stratford-on-Avon, producing the drama as it was in Shakespeare's time.

And fascinating Mme. Nazimova is coming in "Bella Donna," and the wonderful Mme. Pavlowa, the Russian dancer, with "her special permit from the Czar" to leave that country.

Henry Miller is coming in "The Rainbow" and Otis Skinner in "Kismet," said to be his greatest success.

And one of the most important of all the announcements is that the unusual play, "Damaged Goods," by the famous French dramatist, Brieux, will be shown. It probably created more comment than any play presented in New York last season, its first production being semi-private, under the auspices of a medical organization.

Other popular plays booked are: "Within the Law," "Ready Money," "Romance," "Peg o' My Heart," "The Conspiracy," "Little Women," "Blue Bird," "The Girl of My Dreams," "Broadway Jones," "The Governor's Lady," "Stop Thief," and others.

Adrianople Guarded By 400,000 Moslems

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 18.—War Minister Enver Bey is hurling an army of 400,000 men into Thrace to defend Adrianople against the Bulgarians. Representatives of the Porte to-day declared that Europe's demand that Turkey give up Adrianople to the Bulgarians will be rejected.

Turkish soldiers have obtained the port of Dedeaghatch.

PLAN ALL-DAY SINGING.

VIDALIA, Aug. 18.—The Toombs County singing convention leaders are making plans for a big all-day singing scheduled for the fifth Sunday in August.

Drawing for Last 2,000,000 Acres U.S. Lands Is Announced

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Two million acres, the best wheat land on earth, according to James J. Hill, will be distributed to settlers by the United States September 23 at a public drawing by number at Glasgow, Mont. The land consists of a tract 80 by 40 miles and is known as the Fort Peck Reservation. It is the last Government reservation to be divided by Uncle Sam.

The tract borders on the Missouri River and formerly was the property of the Sioux Indians. Of the acreage to be allotted 487,000 acres are agricultural land for which applicants will be charged a nominal price of from $5 to $7 an acre, and 738,000 acres is in grazing land, for which $2.50 to $3 will be charged. Applications for the land will be received from September 1 to 20.

Fear Kept Man Off Cars All His 83 Years

LIZTON, IND., Aug. 18.—William Northcutt, aged 85, is dead, after spending his whole life without ever once riding in a railroad train, automobile or street car.

He claimed they were too fast and too dangerous.

3 NEGROES SLAIN; 20 OTHERS JAILED

With three negroes killed and a fourth seriously wounded in free-for-all cutting scrapes Sunday, twenty negroes are under arrest at police headquarters, two charged with murder and the remainder charged with fighting, frequenting blind tigers, and a host of misdemeanors.

The two against whom the charge of murder has been placed are B. C. Smith and Ed Smith, alias Ed Campbell. The third murderer, who is still at large, is said by the police to be Phoney Johnson, a negro desperado with a long police record.

Ed Smith, while resisting arrest after shooting Peter Jackson at 72 James street, was shot in the hand by Officer Palmer. B. C. Smith was captured after a hard chase by Officers Davis and Fielder and Louis Castro.

Most of the trouble started in blind tigers throughout the city. Johnson, after getting drunk, went to the home of Munch Harris, 282 Butler street, and stabbed him to death. B. C. Smith killed John Henry Wilkerson at 80 Decatur street about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and half an hour later Peter Jackson was shot by Ed Smith.

SLIT SKIRT HEALTH AID, SAYS EXPERT

DENVER, Aug. 18.—Wilbur F. Cannon, former pure food commissioner, has rushed to the defense of the X-ray and slit skirts with these five reasons:

The X-ray and slit skirts permit circulation of air about the body.

The absence of many underskirts relieves the strain on the hips and prevents kidney trouble.

Absence of the usual amount of clothes makes frequent bathing necessary and frequent bathing opens the pores and makes the bath quite healthy.

Absence of many clothes makes the body movement freer, thus saving energy.

There is less labor required in the care of clothes, such as washing, ironing and mending.

VOTE ON COURT CHANGE.

JACKSON, Aug. 18.—The City Court of Jackson was amended by the last session of the general assembly, subject to a ratification of the people. The matter will be voted on September 3. As amended, the Solicitor will receive a salary instead of fees.

BIG CAMP MEETING CLOSES.

JACKSON, Aug. 18.—Sunday night marked the closing session of the Indian Springs Holiness camp meeting, and what was generally declared to have been the most successful meeting in the history of the association.

Lungs Were Affected; Now in Good Health

The makers of Eckman's Alterative, a remedy for Throat and Lung Troubles, do not claim that it will restore every one to perfect health, but so many have voluntarily testified it saved their lives that all who have this dread disease should investigate and try it. It should stop the night sweats, reduce fever, promote appetite and in very many cases prolong life. Read what it accomplished in this case:

Catherine Ave. and Ascot Place, Queen's Court, L. I.

"Gentlemen: In the year 1908 I was taken with a heavy cold and a nasty cough and went to several doctors, including a specialist. Their medicines failed. My brother then recommended Eckman's Alterative to me very highly. It is now nearly two years since I first took it. I am now well and I dare say that I would have been buried long ago if it had not been for Eckman's Alterative. I wish to thank you for the Godsend to me. Wherever I go I highly recommend the Alterative, as I owe my life to it."

(Affidavit) JOS. J. TROESCHER.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all of Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

MAKE MONEY WITH POULTRY.

AMERICAN POULTRY is a magazine devoted entirely to helping earnest men and women make a financial success of poultry raising. Its staff of writers is composed entirely of those who have made a practical, instead of theoretical, success of poultry farming, and who are glad to pass on the results of their hard-earned experience to AMERICAN POULTRY readers. There are many pitfalls in the path of the novice which may be entirely avoided by those who will follow the teachings set forth in this magazine. It fully explains how to make a start, how to construct houses, coops, and other devices, how to get a large egg yield, how to cure and prevent disease, how to exhibit, how to get the top price for eggs, how to use incubators and hundreds of other points which every one wishes to know. It explains the famous secret system through which poultrymen have become rich and afterwards sold for hundreds of dollars. AMERICAN POULTRY is a large, handsomely illustrated, monthly journal, well printed on fine paper, and should be found on file in the home of every poultry lover. No beginner in the poultry business should think of being without it. It will save him many times the small subscription price. The advanced poultryman will also find it of great value; the articles being varied in their scope.

SPECIAL OFFER. The regular price of AMERICAN POULTRY is 50c per year, but in order to introduce it to several thousand new readers, we will, for a short time, give a large 200-page poultry book, which is a complete guide in the poultry business, absolutely free to every one sending 10c for a yearly subscription or $1.00 for a three-year-subscription to AMERICAN POULTRY. A trial six months' subscription (without book) will be sent for 25c. Never has so much been offered for so small a sum. Advantage of this offer should be taken at once.

IF OUR CUSTOMERS living on the North and South Sides place their orders before 9 o'clock and the ones in Inman Park and West End before 2 o'clock, they will be delivered the same day the orders are given. We are trying to give the very best service possible, and if our customers will bear in mind the hours that our deliveries leave the store it will insure prompt service.

IT IS ABSOLUTELY necessary for chickens to have green food during the winter. This can easily be supplied if you will plant out a small patch of rye and rape. They both grow very rapidly and will furnish an abundance of green food all the winter. Now is the time to plant.

THIS IS THE MOULTING SEASON, and that means that the hens should be fed a good tonic. Pratt's Poultry Regulator and Conkey's Laying Tonic insure a quick and complete moult, and that means plenty of eggs during the fall and winter, when they bring the high prices; 25c, 50c and $1 package.

Medium-Sized Acreage Tracts

ALL of us know the profit that is usually made from acreage.

It is almost a conceded fact that if a person owns good acreage, he has a sure profit in it sooner or later. When we think of acreage propositions, we think of lots of land, and naturally lots of money, because the usual acreage transaction involves a great deal of money. The demand for good, close-in acreage for subdivision purposes is increasing every day. A trip to the outskirts of the city in any direction you choose to take will convince you of this fact. We are going to offer a tract of about 100 acres, between Decatur and East Lake, which we have cut up into five, ten and fifteen-acre tracts. The price and terms on these tracts make it possible for almost anybody to handle them.

TEXAS WEATHER PUZZLES TRADE

Ring Unloads Cotton Freely on Lone Star State Rains—Big Interests Buy on Hot Weather.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Trading was extremely active at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 14 to 17 points lower than the closing quotations of Saturday. Reports were coming from private houses that light rains had occurred throughout Oklahoma and Texas late Saturday. This, coupled with extremely weak cables, was responsible for the lower opening. The market was without suport at the decline. The ring was apparently long and were throwing cotton over from the general selling that was going on. Wall Street and many of the large spot houses were also noticeable sellers. Liverpool was said to be down on the rains reported from Texas and was sold from this side. After half an hour of trading prices showed further recessions of 3 to 5 points from the initial range.

During the forenoon the market developed a better tone though rather free buying from certain strong interests, based on special telegraphic reports on Texas rainfull and weather conditions, which was considered rather bullish. Price movement ranged a few points better than the opening range.

Strong sources fought the market on the high temperatures in Oklahoma and Texas and wires received reporting considerable damage by the continued drouth and extremely hot weather. The feeling altogether is far more bullish than it hasbe en for sometime past. Memphis is said to have been a good buyer in this market to-day, also a good many other Southern points. Those inclined to the bear side are of the opinion that should good value come over the west that we may expect a considerable decline. Prices, however, were held within a narrow range during the afternoon session.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Miller & Co.: It continues a weather market.

Charles Fairchild & Co.: We would be inclined to buy and hold for much higher prices.

Orvis Bros. & Co.: An undue risk attaches to the short side at present prices.

Logan & Bryan: Beneficial rains will doubtless result in lower prices.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 18.—Werther developments over Sunday were favorable, as there were precipitation in combination with cooler weather over the greater part of the western States, while rainfall was light in the eastern half of the belt. Indications are for further precipitation, particularly in the southern and western half of Texas. It will get cooler generally over the northern half of the belt. Weekly crop reports from Alabama are very good; all say complaints are very few; plant has maintained its vigor is well fruited, no unusual shedding, free movement expected about the first week in September.

Liverpool came in about 5 points lower than due. Spots 6 points lower; sales 7,000 bales. Cables continue to report slack business. First trades here were at a decline of about 15 points, encountering very good demand near 11c, which steadied prices. A disposition seems to prevail to reduce short lines on the opinion that relief in the west comes too late to affect Bureau returns, and that it is safer to wait around 11c for that publication and the storm period.

COTTON GOSSIP

Browne, Drakeford & Co., Liverpool, cable: "Market declined in consequence of general favorable weather reports. Bulls disappointed."

* * *

The volume of retail buying in the local cotton goods market last week in most houses was substantially ahead of a year ago, according to The Journal of Commerce. There is an absence of speculative buying and great caution is being exercised, yet total requirements for merchandise are becoming formidable, and it seems as if the retail trade has liquidated in the past six months more than in any recent similar selling period. Any broad buying for future account in the cotton goods markets would bring on a sharp advance.

* * *

The course of the cotton market during the week depends entirely on the weather news. It was the gossip among ring speculators late Saturday that if rains should come it would undoubtedly bring out selling and lower prices would follow. On the other hand, the bulls contend if rains should not come we should expect some 20 to 40 points advance during the next few days. There was some selling Saturday on predictions by Kofler, of New Orleans, that indications pointed to rains over Sunday, but this was entirely ignored by the bulls, who were buyers right up to the close.

* * *

Some of the most radical bears say that we could wipe out Oklahoma altogether and still make a big crop.

RECENT SELLERS BUYING STOCKS

Westinghouse Electric Early Feature—Market Shows Considerable Strength.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Westinghouse showed the best gain at the opening of the stock market to-day, with an advance of 1¾. After opening at 72½, this issue climbed to 74¼. The tone was strong at the beginning and most stocks made gains. Among them were Amalgamated Copper ¾, United States Steel common ⅛, Union Pacific ⅝, Southern Pacific ⅛, Missouri Pacific ¾, Canadian Pacific ⅝, Erie ¼, St. Paul ½, Chino Copper ½, American Telegraph and Telephone ⅜, American Can ¼.

Reading began at 108⅞ for a slight gain, but later receded. New York, New Haven and Hartford, which closed Saturday at par, opened at 99¾.

The curb market was steady.

Americans in London held above New York parity. Canadian Pacific in London gained on strength of reports that storms in the Northwest had not done so much damage to railroad property as first reported.

What Do You Suppose Interests Them on Board the Train?

National Affairs, Great Discoveries, News of Historical Inportance? Not at All—Something Simpler.

"It hath not yet been shown what we shall be" is a fine sounding sentence, descriptive of our future greatness. "It hath not yet been shown what petty, little human mice we are" is a sentence that would describe pretty well the human race of to-day.

You have only to observe the mental occupations of your fellow passengers on Pullman coaches running between Atlanta and New York to be convinced of the vacuity of human minds, their absence of thought, their aversion to study.

Here are men traveling nearly a thousand miles, propelled by force buried in the coal several million years ago.

They travel in rooms lighted with the electric power that flashes in the clouds, on rails and wheels of steel.

Their journey is the result of millions of years of the earth's development, and hundreds of thousands of years in the development of human intelligence, AND THEIR MINDS ARE ON GAMES OR AMUSEMENT OR FOLLIES OF ONE KIND OR ANOTHER.

You see solemn old men and distressed old women reading—novels usually vapid or vulgar—when they are not playing bridge or solitaire.

If you see someone interested in a newspaper, what do you suppose most attracts his attention? Let us look over his shoulder and see.

No, gentle or fierce reader, he has not been reading important news of the Balkan war.

He hasn't wondered whether the United States would spread as it should all the way down this continent and stop just south of the Panama canal—for the present.

He hasn't been reading bulletins of scientific discovery, or news of importance in the world and its history.

He has been reading the important fact that Sommers "pitched" and Graham "caught" for Chattanooga, while Dent "pitched" and Dunn "caught" for Atlanta.

He has been reading the numbers of runs, hits and errors—if you know what they are—and finding out who won in various games of baseball throughout the country.

The human race has not grown up to its possibilities.

It is a race of children, easily tired, incapable of concentrated, earnest thought.

It is a race of men who work like beavers, or ants, or prairie dogs through the day, each in his own little direction, indifferent to the others, and who unite in intellect in the evening, not upon any subject worthy of the brain of a man, but in intense interest in some poor little make-believe game.

These men, "heirs of all the ages," have their magnificent minds concentrated on a childish game that could have been played and was played in another form by the savages that lived here before language was perfected.

Many a weary century must pass before the human mice of the present day will be really MEN.

Woes of "Affinity" Earle's Soul-Mates.

The folly of certain "advanced ideas" on marriage, that rise, phoenix-like, from the ashes of dead loves, comes with fresh proof in a London cable telling of a suit for divorce by the third wife of Ferdinand Pinney Earle, the New York artist, who has been in the limelight for years because of his love affairs.

The unsophisticated daughter of an English architect, Mrs. Earle No. 3—"the loveliest, sweetest, dearest of them all"—said she knew nothing of the American "affinity" advocate when she married him, two months after their first meeting. Now the mother of his child, she seeks her freedom on the ground of cruelty. Thus it was with Emilie Fischbacher and Julia Kuttner, both of whom Earle married and later lost.

Advocates of a nondescript affection may conjure up new forms of wedlock as an improvement on the old-fashioned vows, but such theories are like "silly moths that singe their wings and fall into dust." Discord and strife are the invariable accompaniments of defiance of the laws of decency and honor.

It is a fact that monogamic races have made the greatest progress in civilization. It was the monogamic barbarians, the virtuous Saxon vandals, that drove the hardest bargains with the Roman emperors. They preserved their rugged, healthy state from the weakening vices of a decadent age.

Pioneers who have cut the hard granite, hewn the tall trees, conquered the wilderness and forwarded the arts and sciences—who have made America the greatest miracle in the annals of the nations—all have had a wholesome regard for the sanctity of the marriage covenant. They rarely entered lightly into wedlock. Enemies of the free love that feeds on empty promises of a superfine conjugality, they were ever loyal to the lesson of Jana in Galilee.

Artist Earle's marital misfortunes are the common lot of all so-called idealists who set their own opinions against the experiences of the centuries. The religious element of the marriage relation can not be ignored without bringing counter obligations that gall and bind the offenders with worse cords than those that fret the flesh.

PRESBYTERIAN DOCTRINE

Editor Georgian:

Your recent statement, "The Presbyterian teaching of infant damnation seems to us horrible," is a gross misrepresentation, to say the least of it. And it is up to you to quote authorities and prove it, or else retract it. If I knew that you were a Methodist, I would tell you it was John Wesley, and not John Calvin, who once held such a belief. I come of Presbyterian ancestry dating back about two centuries, and claim to know something of the denomination at large. But I have never read or heard of one Presbyterian of any note who so believed and taught.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox Writes on Unfit Mothers

Poverty Does Not Make Them So, as Many Are Rich. Criticism Committees Should Be Established Everywhere.

Written for The Atlanta Georgian

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

"THE unfitness of mothers of dependent children, complained of by 'organized charity' is in my opinion all caused by poverty.

"The Mothers' Pension law recently enacted by the legislatures of eighteen States will, to a great extent, make the unfit mother fit because the pension removes the cause of her unfitness, which is her poverty.

"It is the common observation that the very fine and very fit mother becomes comparatively unfit to take care of her children after a few years of hopeless struggle with poverty.

"The mistake of organized charity is their allowing good mothers of dependent children to be made unfit by the poison of poverty, the poison of hopelessness, the poison of overwork in trying to earn the living for their children at hard work and give proper care to their children at the same time.

"Organized charity contends that a mother should have her children taken away from her because poverty has made her temporarily unfit.

"The real friends of the poor, the advocates of mothers' pensions, believe that the mother should have the cause of her unfitness removed and not her children. HENRY NEIL."

Unfit Mothers Caused by Poverty Open to Doubt.

MOTHERS' pensions now extend from coast to coast.

One can now travel from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean going through mothers' pension States only, starting on the coast of New Jersey and going through Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Utah, Nevada to the coast of California.

Other mothers' pension States are Washington, Oregon, Idaho, South Dakota, Minnesota, Massachusetts, New Hampshire—eighteen in all.

Three cities that have local mothers' pension laws are Kansas City, St. Louis and Milwaukee.

Meantime the statement of Mr. Neil that the unfit mothers are caused by poverty is open to doubt.

Some of the most unfit mothers to be found on earth are women of wealth.

Two little girls on board a large ocean liner were the daughters of a New York banker, and their mother was an educated woman, and their father was a man of parts; yet there were never seen on earth more insufferably disagreeable children than these. They were ill-mannered, impertinent, unkind and ungracious. The chief steward in the dining salon was obliged to rebuke them for their impertinence and their annoying treatment of other passengers.

The children she had should have been taken away from such parents and placed under wise and worthy instructors.

A woman who has been reared with excellent opportunities for culture is the mother of four children. There is no financial strain upon the family, yet the children have never been taught any of the gracious and lovely traits which help to build a worthy character and a pleasing personality.

Every School and Church Should Have a Criticism Committee.

Loud, harsh voices, flat contradictions, continual quarreling and the most disagreeable qualities distinguish this family.

Such parents are certainly unfit to bring up families.

A fund for the erection of a large scientific institution, such as Dr. Elmer Gates has always longed to see established, would be a benefit to the world, an institution where the brain cells of vulgar and disorderly children, as well as the perverted and viciously inclined, could be developed into constructive qualities.

Every school and church in the land ought to have a "criticism committee," such as existed in the Oneida community years ago.

To this committee every person who had a complaint to make of the manners or conduct of another member of the community went, and the committee called the offending person with the complainant, and the whole subject was calmly and thoroughly investigated. And reproof was administered where it belonged, and if it was proven that any personal or selfish or jealous feelings prompted the complainant, he was the one reproved and publicly placed under ban, and made to see how unworthy was his action.

An Institution for Brain Building Would Also Be Good.

Unselfishness was the religious keynote of the society, and had it let sex problems alone it would have been one of the greatest factors for bettering the world which ever existed in America.

If our schools and colleges and churches could adopt this excellent idea of the Oneida community and established the "Criticism committee" and then carry Dr. Elmer Gates' dream of a brain-building institution into realization, the children of the idle rich might stand as good a chance of becoming agreeable and useful citizens as do the children of the poor today.

: A DEAD FIRE :

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

WHERE some lean trapper lingered long ago
To make himself secure against the night,
It stays a scar whereon no blade will grow,
Its old, cold ashes sifting to and fro,
Its charred sticks black where once was leaping light.

All green and lovely lies the forest floor
Around this patch of ever-barren soil;
Nearby the pinks and daisies bloom once more
Abundantly as in the years before,
Watching the queer gray serpents writhe and coil.

In all the world of grim and ghostly sights
There is no sight more like to lasting pain,
Suggesting hopeless days and long, sad nights;
It is the ashen wraith of past delights—
It is the heart of one who loved in vain.

GIRLS TESTIFY FOR AND AGAINST FRANK

'I'D DIE FOR HIM!' CRIES ONE, CONVULSING COURT

MRS. FRANK'S SISTER; RESEMBLANCE GREAT

MRS. URSENBACH.

DEADLOCK IN FIGHT ON SULZER

Violence Not Expected--Impeached Governor, Surrounded by Guards, Works at Capitol.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 17.—Neither drastic nor violent steps will be taken by Lieutenant Governor Martin H. Glynn to force William Sulzer, the impeached Governor of New York, from office—at least not to-day. Owing to the fact that this was a half holiday at the State offices, Mr. Glynn spent but a few minutes at the Capitol, and, while both Sulzer and Glynn forces refused to budge an inch, matters were at a deadlock.

Accompanied by his bodyguard, Governor Sulzer walked from the executive mansion to the Capitol, where he plunged into State business, just as though his right to exercise the gubernatorial prerogatives were not contested.

Lieutenant Governor Glynn, who claims the powers of Acting Governor under the Constitution until Mr. Sulzer is brought to trial on September 18, went from the Capitol to the offices of his newspaper and announced he would spend the afternoon at an athletic meet. He denied that, like Napoleon, he would lift the power of ruling New York State on the bayonets of the National Guard.

Lack of Trouble a Surprise.

Absence of an actual outbreak today was a surprise to many who expected to see the executive chamber a battleground for the Sulzer and Tammany forces.

Mr. Sulzer now virtually stands alone, having been deserted by the members of his cabinet, who have allied themselves to the Glynn forces. But Sulzer refuses to abdicate, despite the fact that the ranks of his political enemies have been strengthened during the last 24 hours.

Lieutenant Governor Glynn, who is now signing State documents with this signature, "Martin H. Glynn, Acting Governor, State of New York," announced that, in spite of any obstructions thrown in his way by the Sulzer legal forces, he would continue to administer gubernatorial affairs pending Mr. Sulzer's trial for alleged high crimes and misdemeanors September 18.

Both Sides Fear Trick.

Both sides are taking elaborate precautions to guard against a trick. Throughout the night armed guards stood watch over each State department, while lawyers and legislators involved in the struggle were trailed by private detectives. Mr. Sulzer was in retirement planning a new legal move with his counsel. Messenger boys with Washington and New York City telegrams could not find the Governor, but members of the "inner circle" took charge of the dispatches, saying they would find the Governor.

Leaders of the anti-Sulzer faction made the threat that Mr. Glynn, now having control of the State Military Department, would actually invade the executive chamber.

"He will get a mighty warm reception," declared the Sulzer adherents, who are few, but courageous.

Some Fear Martial Law.

Some residents of this city, realizing the intense seriousness of the situation, fear that conditions may become so grave that martial law will have to be declared.

It was assumed that Governor Sulzer to-day would reply to the second note from Lieutenant Governor Glynn, demanding the unconditional surrender of all prerogatives by Mr. Sulzer and the abdication of the Governor. Counsel were with the Governor at the beginning of the official day, and it was reported that the Governor was urged to take a fling at Tammany Hall.

SOUTHROUTE PATHFINDER IS READY

Start on First Lap to Birmingham To Be Made Early Monday Morning.

"Ready" for the start Monday was the final word sent out Saturday by the good roads and highway boosters who are conducting the campaign, inaugurated by Hearst's Sunday American, to blaze a Southern transcontinental trail from Atlanta to San Francisco.

"Pathfinder" Ferguson was the first man to be heard from. He declared that every detail of the first lap of the long journey had been arranged; that his car was in excellent shape for the cross-country spin, and that he and his wife and two children were anxious to get on the way.

"There is nothing to do now," said Mr. Ferguson, "but to await the hour of the official start. Every detail of the first lap to Birmingham is complete. According to our present plans, we will leave Atlanta between 9 and 10 o'clock Monday.

To Head for State Line.

"We will proceed direct to the Georgia-Alabama line at Tallapoosa, where President John Craft, of the Alabama Good Roads Association, accompanied by State Highway Engineer Keller, will join us. Arriving at Tallapoosa late Monday afternoon, we will rest for the night and resume the journey to Anniston next morning.

"At Anniston a special man representing The Birmingham News will meet us, relieving The Sunday American man. After a brief reception we will go direct to Birmingham by way of Riverside and Pell City. We expect to reach the Magic City Wednesday afternoon."

According to Mr. Ferguson the first lap of the journey will be made in easy stages in order to check up road conditions between Atlanta and Birmingham as completely as possible. An effort will be made to select the very best route, and information concerning good roads and highways will be given to farmers all along the route. In other words, time records, Mr. Ferguson says, will be sacrificed for the educational side of the trip.

Long Itinerary Outlined.

From Birmingham the party will proceed to Montgomery, where the Governor of Alabama, who is taking keen interest in the good roads campaign, will meet the party. Mobile, New Orleans, Houston, Dallas, El Paso, Phoenix, San Diego, Los Angeles and San Francisco will be reached in the order named.

The local Atlanta boosters were the next to be heard from. They announced Saturday morning that everything was in readiness for the official start Monday. The parade will get under way shortly after 9 o'clock. Among those who will participate will be the chief of the fire department, the police chief, city officials, including Mayor Woodward and other prominent citizens. In addition every automobile and motorcycle that has taken part in the 'Drome races will be in the line of parade.

Anniston to Welcome Atlanta-Pacific Scout.

ANNISTON, Aug. 17.—When E. L. Ferguson arrives in Anniston Monday he will be accorded a cordial welcome.

E. L. Turner, president of the Anniston Chamber of Commerce; Dr. J. L. Wikle, Mayor; J. C. Sproull, vice president of the Chamber of Commerce and president of the Anniston Hardware Company; M. B. Wellborn, president of the First National Bank and an officer of the Alabama Good Roads Association, and other prominent citizens will meet the scoutmaster.

Shoots Man in Court As Jury Frees Him

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 17.—As a jury in the City Court returned a verdict acquitting Will Smith, a negro, of having shot Robert Sears, a constable and former deputy sheriff, the officer drew his revolver and fired several shots in the courtroom before he was overpowered. One shot broke Smith's arm, another wounded him in a shoulder and a third struck him in the cheek.

Judge Armistead Brown ordered Sears to jail for contempt of court and summoned the grand jury to meet Monday and investigate the shooting.

Physically Perfect Girl Is College Aim

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Aug. 17.—Bryn Mawr College is about to establish the day of the superwoman, and this fall the Phoebe Ann Thorne open-air model school will give students the first chance ever offered by an educational institution in America for instruction to make girls physically perfect.

The girls will never breathe the air of a classroom except where they are housed and the four sides are so arranged as to be let down in pleasant weather. In cold weather, they are to be clothed in Eskimo suits.

Diggs Trial Halted; Resume on Tuesday

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 17.—The participants in the trial of Maury I. Diggs, former State architect, accused of violating the white slave law, rested to-day in preparation for resumption of the trial on Tuesday. The defense attorneys planned to make way for the trial early next week of F. Drew Caminetti, son of the United States Commissioner of Immigration, on the same charge.

Police are investigating the riot caused by Diggs' friends last evening when photographers attempted to get pictures of the defendant as he was leaving the courtroom.

'Double Nose-Veil' Fad Dies in Newport

NEWPORT, Aug. 17.—Miss Elsie Stevens' white lace veil at the Casino has broken the double nose veil fad which has been so distasteful to the men, because they were bowing to ladies whose features they could not recognize.

Not a nose veil was worn at the Casino for tennis. The debutantes, including Miss Stevens, Gabrielle Warren and Mimi Scott, were veilless.

Maxim Gorky Dying, Nursed by Actress

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, Aug. 17.—Maxim Gorky, the famous Russian writer and exile, is seriously ill of tuberculosis, and his death is believed to be near. Friends of Gorky received a letter to-day from the great realist and socialist telling of his condition.

Gorky is being attended by an actress who fled with him from Russia.

Dog Saves Girl From Snake, Then Dies

PUEBLO, COLO., Aug. 17.—"Boots" a white bulldog pet of the family of Alonzo Hunt, was the hero of an exciting fight with a rattlesnake. To save his 9-year-old mistress, Lucille, he leaped between her and the reptile, receiving the full force of the snake attack. The dog succeeded in killing it before he succumbed to the poison.

CLUB AND ENVELOPE FOUND BY PINKERTON MAN PUT IN EVIDENCE

Two factory girls, one of them defending Leo M. Frank with all the eloquence at her command, and the other admitting that she had known of the factory superintendent opening the door to the girls' dressing room on three different occasions and looking in, formed the center of interest among the score of witnesses who were called Saturday by the defense. They were Miss Irene Jackson and Miss Sarah Barnes.

Miss Jackson, daughter of County Policeman Jackson, testified on direct examination that she never had known of any improper conduct on the part of Frank, and that his character was good. Cross-questioned by Solicitor Dorsey she admitted that she had been in the room where the girls change from their street to their working clothes and had witnessed Frank open the door, look in and then turn around and leave. Once, she said, Miss Emmeline Mayfield was in the room with her. On another time her sister was there, and on a third occasion, she said Miss Mamie Kitchen was the other girl in the room.

She said that her sister had started to quit at the time Frank opened the door when she was in the dressing room. The witness also was asked if N. V. Darley, general manager of the factory, ever had made the remark at the time several girls were thinking of quitting the factory directly after the murder that "if the girls stick by us through this, they won't lose anything by it." Miss Jackson said she had heard Darley say this. Miss Jackson quit work the day after the body was found.

Frank's Mother Again on Stand.

Another long string of character witnesses occupied most of the session which was adjourned shortly after 1 o'clock for the day. Mrs. Rae Frank, the defendant's mother, was placed on the stand at the beginning of court, but remained there only long enough to be questioned somewhat in detail as to the means of Frank's relatives.

One of the sensations of the day came during the testimony of W. D. McWorth, Pinkerton operative, who testified to the finding on the first floor of the pencil factory a pay envelope with Mary Phagan's initials and number on it, a bloody club, part of a whip, a piece of rope and spots near the trapdoor leading into the basement resembling bloodstains. Extcaly the value of his finds did not develop either from the examination by the defense or the prosecution. Dorsey, however, sought to show that the Pinkertons dealt in bad faith with the city detective department by not reporting their discoveries as soon as made.

Court adjourned with the testimony of Harlee Branch, an Atlanta Journal reporter, who estimated the time it required Jim Conley to re-enact his version of the disposal of Mary Phagan's body, up to the writing of the notes as 47 minutes.

Girl Vehemently Defends Frank.

Miss Sarah Barnes was Frank's vehement defender. The first question asked her was the signal for a torrent of words that neither Attorney Arnold nor the Solicitor was able to stop until she paused for breath.

"Do you know Leo M. Frank, the defendant in this case?" was asked.

She replied that she not only knew him, but that she knew he was a good man, a perfect gentleman, always good to the girls and everyone else in the factory, never attempting any familiarities or talking to the girls except in regard to their work and never being guilty of any of the charges that have been made against him by the State.

"I know Mr. Frank couldn't have committed that murder," she cried positively, emphasizing her words with a vigorous brandishing of her fan.

"I'd be willing to die in his place. I'd be willing to fight for him. I'd be willing they'd give me any sort of death they wanted to. I just wish I could make everybody believe in his innocence."

Judge Roan, just before court adjourned, made this statement to the jury:

"For a number of reasons we won't hold a session this afternoon. I am very sorry you have been held together so long, but I believe this will be the last Sabbath you will be kept

DROUTH MAKES MIDDLE WEST BIG DESERT

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 17.—After twelve days of practically unmitigated heat, the Middle West is facing the most serious drouth in the history of the weather bureau.

All dry records of recent years have been broken and the people of three States are praying for rain. The average temperatures yesterday were from 97 to 108, the latter at Leavenworth, Kans., with no signs of relief for to-day.

Many local showers gave slight relief in Oklahoma and there was a temporary cessation of the hot wind that has been parching the State for weeks. The temperatures dropped 10 to 20 degrees there.

Several rains were reported in Kansas, the heaviest at Fort Scott, where half an inch of rain fell, accompanied by heavy winds.

Northwest Missouri villagers and farmers are among those most seriously affected by the drouth. There is no hope of saving such crops as have not yet matured and the stock-raisers are seeking desperately for means to supply their cattle, hogs and horses with water.

Autos Block Fire Engines at Blaze Near Five Points

A lighted cigar or cigarette dropped from a room in the Empire Building set fire to the roof of Williams House No. 3, on Marietta street, near Five Points, about noon Saturday, and a crowd of several thousand people quickly gathered.

On account of the great number of automobiles and other vehicles parked in front of the building and all along Marietta street the fire department had some difficulty in getting the trucks near enough to be effective. Quick work of the firemen stopped the spread of the flames, virtually no damage being done.

Chief Cummings stated after the fire that it was only Providence that enabled the firemen to get near the fire before it gained dangerous proportions, and that if the practice of allowing automobiles to blockade the streets is continued, it is only a matter of time until a serious fire results.

MRS. PANKHURST FLEES; FEARED 'DESERTER'

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—"Has Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst forsaken the militant suffragettes?"

This question arose here to-day following the receipt of a telegram from Paris to the effect that the famous leader has just joined her fugitive daughter, Christobel, in that city. At Scotland Yard it was said that detectives knew of Mrs. Pankhurst's departure from England and had so notified the Government, but no efforts had been taken to stop her flight despite the fact that she was only temporarily out of prison when she left, and has over two years to serve yet.

In fact, it was made plain that the Government breathes easier with Mrs. Pankhurst on foreign soil.

Prominent members of the Women's Social and Political Union, of which Mrs. Pankhurst is president, deny that Mrs. Pankhurst has fled. They declare that her mission to Paris is to induce Christobel to return to London.

Mother Denies "Wealthy" Relatives.

Mrs. Frank declared Frank's relatives were of only moderate means. Solicitor Dorsey did not spare the defendant's mother in his cross-examination. He sought to show that Frank's parents in reality were wealthy and that Conley's quotation of Frank's alleged remarks about his "wealthy folks" was quite plausible. She said the source of the income of herself and her husband was the interest on about $20,000. They paid $6,000 for their home in Brooklyn and assumed a $6 000 mortgage on the residence.

"In whatb usiness is your husband?" the Solicitor asked her.

"Hs is not in business at present."

"Ah, he's a capitalist, is he?" said Dorsey.

Mrs. Frank replied that this was not so and added later that her husband was broken down in health and that this was the explanation of his being out of business at present.

Mrs. Frank was shown a photographic copy of the test note Frank wrote for the detectives which Dorsey had intimated was written in a disguised hand.

"That's my son's writing," she exclaimed, as soon as she saw the photographic copy. "He wrote me every week and I know his handwriting."

Mother to Son's Aid.

A hushed crowd leaned forward expectantly as the saddened woman, whose outburst of anger against Solicitor Dorsey was one of the sensations of the wek, took her place in the witness chair.

The prisoner and his wife wore the same cool, unflinching demeanor. Frank kept his eyes on his mother. Luther Z. Rosser questioned Mrs. Frank.

Q. Mrs. Frank, you said you lived in Brooklyn? Has your son Leo Frank any rich relatives in Brooklyn?—A. He has not.

Q. This letter that was received by him from his uncle, were show you here?—(The small letters were in a long envelope——A. Yes, a long paper. I don't know what it was.

Q. I show you a photograph letter. Is the writing similar to your sons? —(He handed her the photograph of Frank's writing for the police which witness Nix could not identify yesterday)—A. That is my son's writing.

Dorsey Delves Into Family's Finances.

Dorsey took Mrs. Frank for cross-examination.

Q. Mrs. Frank, you have no difficulty in recognizing that as your son's writing, have you?—A. None at all.

Q. What were those other papers?—A. A price list, I think.

Q. Now you look at the price list?—A. No.

Q. Who are your relatives in Brooklyn?—A. My sister, Mrs. Bennett. Her husband clerks for my brother-in-law.

Q. What does your son-in-law do? —A. He is in the retail cigar business.

Q. What do your other sons-in-law do?—A. I don't know. I have enough to do to keep up with my own affairs.

Q. What are your means of support?—A. We have a little money out at interest.

Q. How much?—A. About $20,000.

Q. Do you own your own home?—A. Yes.

Q. What is it worth?—A. I don't know. We pay about $86 taxes.

Q. Well, what does that make it worth?—A. You must understand we have a large mortgage.

Q. How much?—A. About $6,000.

Q. Was that about one-third of the cost?—A. More than that. We paid $6,000 and assumed the mortgage.

Q. Now, haven't you more than $20,000 out at interest?—A. No.

Q. What income do you get on that? —A. Do you want me to tell you everything of my everyday life?

Q. I want you to answer my questions, if you please, Mrs. Frank.—A. All right.

Doesn't Know Frank's Uncle Is Called Rich.

Q. What other relatives have you? —A. Miss Jacobs, a single lady.

Q. Are these the only relatives your son has in Brooklyn?—A. Yes.

Q. Where is his uncle?—A. He lives in Atlanta.

Q. He is supposed to be very wealthy?—A. I don't know.

Q. Don't you know he was in Brooklyn Saturday?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Don't you know what rate of interest your husband gets on his $20,000?—A. About 6 per cent.

Q. Do you know how much money he has in the bank?—A. About $200.

Q. How much interest are you paying on the $6,000 mortgage?—A. Five per cent.

Q. How often do you pay it?—A. Once a year.

Rosser took the witness.

Q. How old is your husband?—A. Sixty-seven years.

Q. What's the condition of his health?—A. Very poor.

Q. Too bad to come here?—A. Oh, yes; he is very nervous.

The witness was excused and Knox T. Thomas, a civil engineer, was the next witness called.

At this time Mr. Rosser offered the letter of Leo M. Frank to his uncle, M. Frank, as evidence. Arnold questioned Mr. Thomas.

Civil Engineer Tells Of Measuring Street.

Q. At our request did you make some measurements, one from Marietta and Forsyth streets to the National Pencil Factory?—A. Yes.

Q. How far was it?—A. One thousand and sixteen feet.

Q. Did you walk it?—A. Yes.

Q. How long did it take you?—A Four and one-half minutes.

Q. Did you walk from the National Pencil Factory to Alabama and Whitehall streets?—A. Yes.

Q. How far is it, and how long did it take you to walk it?—A. 821 feet, and three and one-half minutes.

Q. Did you walk from Frank's office to Broad and Hunter streets?—A. Yes.

Q. How far was it, and how long did it take you?—A. A distance of 333 feet, and it required one and three-quarter minutes to walk it.

Q. How fast did you walk?—A. My usual gait, rather brisk.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. You could have quickened your gait and walked from Marietta and Forsyth streets in two minutes, couldn't you?—A. Not easily.

Q. At that rate, how long would it take you to walk a mile?—A. I'll have to figure it—60 minutes.

Q. Sixty minutes to walk a mile?—A. No; fifteen minutes.

Q. You were more accurate in your measurements than you were with your first answer?—A. Yes.

The witness was excused and Miss Corinthia Hall was recalled to the stand. She was the first of another array of witnesses employed in the factory and scheduled to be called during the day to repudiate the charges of immorality on the part of the prisoner in the plant.

Says Conley Delayed Paying Back Money.

Miss Hall said Frank's character was good. She added that she did not know Conley well enough to swear about his character.

Dorsey then took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. You don't know Conley's character?—A. No. Only I loaned him some money once and could hardly get it back. I wouldn't lend him any more.

The witness was excused and Mrs. Emma Clark Freeman was recalled, but did not answer. Miss Ida Hayes, another employee, who works on the fourth floor, testified to the good character of Frank. She said she had never heard of any immoral practices in the factory. She would not believe Jim Conley under oath, she added.

Hooper cross-examined her.

Q. The principal trouble with Jim Conley was borrowing money and forgetting to pay it back, wasn't it?—A. Yes.

The witness was excused and Eula May Flowers, another employee, was recalled to the stand.

She testified to Frank's good character and gave Conley a bad record. She said Conley had borrowed money from her and never paid it back.

Miss Bessie White, another character witness, was called, but did not answer. Miss Ella Hayes, now an employee of Kress' store, but an employee of the National Pencil Company up to the date of the murder, testified to Frank's good character. Miss Minnie Foster, an employee in the factory, said Frank's character was good. She did not know Conley's character.

Objection by Arnold Upheld by Court.

Hooper cross-examined her.

Q. Up to this killing, whom did you ever hear discuss Frank's character? —A. No one.

The witness was excused.

Miss Opie Dickerson was another pencil factory employee to give Frank a good character. Conley's character was bad, she said.

Dorsey cross-examined her.

Q. Where were you on Saturday night, April 26?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Were you not with Louise Gershon, Wade Campbell and Mr. Darley on that night?

Arnold objected and was sustained.

Mrs. Emma Clark Freeman was recalled to the stand next. She testified to Frank's good character and declared that that of the negro's was bad.

Miss Jessie Wallace, another fourth-floor employee, following Mrs. Freeman, said that Frank's character was good. She stated that she did not know Conley well enough to testify regarding him.

Miss Annie Osborne and Mrs. Ella Thomas, both employees of the pencil factory, also testified to Frank's good character. Mrs. Thomas declared that Jim Conley had borrowed money from her and never repaid it.

Miss Bessie Thrailkill, another employee of the factory, said she did not know Frank's character.

Arnold—I mean his reputation.

Miss Thrailkill—He was always a gentleman around me.

Hooper took the witness.

Q. Did you see Jim Conley after the killing?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Did you hear anything about any blood on the floor?—A. Not until Monday morning.

Q. Did you see it?—A. No.

The witness was excused, and Miss Allie Denham, Miss Rebecca Sarson and Miss Maude Wright, all employees of the pencil factory, spoke highly of Frank's character.

W. D. McWorth, a Pinkerton detective, was next called. Under Rosser's questioning he said he devoted fifteen days to the Phagan murder investigation, beginning May 12.

Q. What did you do?—A. I questioned the employees and made a search of the ground floor.

Q. What did you find?—A. I found stains by the trapdoor which might have been blood. It was on the ground floor.

Q. What else did you find?—A. Behind a radiator I found a good bit of rubbish. There was a heavy cord in the trash. One end of it looked like it had just been cut with a sharp knife.

Pay Envelope and Bloody Club Introduced.

Q. What else did you find?—A. In one corner a few inches from the radiator, I found a piece of pay envelope folded up. It was in a pile of trash.

The torn bit of envelope was introduced by the defense.

Q. What did you do with the envelope?—A. I saw the number 186 on it and initials "M. P." I handed it to Officer Whitfield and told him to take it to the light and see what it was.

Q. Did you find anything else?—A. Yes; I found a big stick lying near the radiator beside some pipes.

At this point a boold-stained stick was exhibited.

Q. Do you know what this stick is used for?—A. Mr. Holloway said it was a roller on which boxes were moved.

Q. Was there anything odd about it that you noticed?—A. It was stained as is apparent now—stains that looked as though they might be blood.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Did you ever see this stick before? (The blunt end of a buggy whip was exhibited.)—A. Yes.

Q. Where?—A. Behind the front door.

Blood Stains Found Around Cubby Hole.

Q. Where did you find the envelope?—A. In the door to the Clark Woodenware department.

Q. What day?—A. May 15.

Q. Where did you begin to search? —A. On the office floor.

Q. What did you see on that floor? —A. In the mcial department I saw half a dozen stains like the one Mr. Darley showed me by the water cooler.

Q. Did they look like the other stains?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you make any search of the office for that envelope?—A. No; I was looking for a mesh bag.

Q. Who told you to?—A. Mr. Scott.

Q. You made that search all day, alone?—A. Until 5 o'clock, when I was joined by Whitfield.

Q. He searched with you?—A. Yes.

Q. You found bloodstains around the cubby hole?—A. Yes.

Q. Was that your report to the Pinkertons?—A. Yes.

Q. You didn't say anything about blood?—A. I said it looked like blood.

Q. How many stains were there?—A. About six or seven.

Q. How large was each?—A. About six or seven inches in diameter.

Q. And were they blood?—A. I don't know; I took up the chips.

Q. Now, after you found the bloodspots you found pieces of cord around the radiator?—A. Yes

Q. The bloodspots led you to that? —A. No.

Q. You showed those bloodspots to Whitfield?—A. Yes.

Envelope Found Near Trap Door.

Q. And while he was examining the stains, you picked up a roll of paper?—A. Yes.

Q. And in that roll you found the envelope?—A. The roll was the envelope itself.

Q. Was that envelope lying right out in the open space?—A. Within eight or ten inches of the trapdoor.

Q. Were there any other pieces of paper?—A. Yes, one or two little ones

Q. Was it light enough for you to see the number—186—in the right-hand corner?—A. Yes.

Q. Has that envelope been changed any?—A. None at all.

At this point Attorney Rosser conferred with Attorney Hooper.

Rosser—The officer in charge of the witnesses talks to them, then comes down and reports to Detective Starnes. If it doesn't stop, I will make a protest to the court.

Hooper—If anything improper is going on, I wish you would make it public.

Solicitor Dorsey, who was standing near the witness, turned and said: "Your honor, we want this matter settled, if they think anything improper is going on."

Judge Roan—No complaint has been made.

Dorsey—We are bringing it now.

The officer came in and spoke to Mr. Starnes.

Dorsey: "If there is any objection, I will have Mr. Starnes state what the officer said to thm."

Asks Schiff Be Sent From Room.

Arnold: "We have no objection to make to the court. We just made a personal request."

Dorsey continued questioning the witness.

Q. This envelope did not have a figure 5 on it did it?—A. No.

At this point Solicitor Dorsey noticed that Herbert Schiff was in the courtroom. He addressed the court:

"Your Honor," he said, "I want Mr. Schiff to be put out of the room. I will want him as a witness a little later."

Rosser: "We merely want to have him here when we are questioning these witnesses who work at the factory."

Judge Roan: "The witness will have to leave."

Rosser: "All right, we will go upstairs to confer with him. I don't care if it takes a month."

Schiff left the courtroom and Dorsey continued to question the witness.

Q. Did you show this envelope to Herbert Schiff?—A. Later.

Q. Did he identify it as his handwriting?

Rosser: "We object. Mr. Arnold is a little excited about a fire close to his building and will be back in a few minutes."

Dorsey—Well, I want this witness held until I can examine Schiff. He continued his questioning.

Q. Wasn't there a figure "5" on that envelope?—A. Not any more than there is now.

Hints at Change in Figures on Envelope.

Q. Didn't Mrs. Coleman call your attention to a figure "5"?

Rosser objected.

Dorsey—This is for the purpose of impeachment. I want to show that when this envelope was shown to the Colemans on May 15 it had a figure "5" on it. They told the Pinkertons Mary did not get but $1.20 the week she was murdered.

Judge Roan overruled the objection.

Dorsey—Did any conservation between you and the Colemans about a figure "5" take place?—A. No.

Q. Where did you get this information in your report? (Solicitor Dorsey handed the witness a typewritten report.)—A. From Mr. Schiff.

Q. When did you report the finding of this stick to the police?

Rosser objected.

Dorsey—I want to show in reference to this club, what the head man for the Pinkertons instructed this police asked about that club, the Pinkertons gave them a little stick. Mr. Rosser has tried to make it appear that the Pinkertons employed at the instance of Frank, went down the road on and on with the police.

The jury was taken from the room at the request of Dorsey.

Judge Roan—Let me hear your objection, Mr. Rosser. I don't want to hear any argument.

Rosser Through Arguing, He Says.

Rosser: "I don't want to argue. I don't expect to argue here any more.' All I want is to have my objection recorded. He has tried to impeach every witness we have put up on the grounds that he did not report to the police."

Judge Roan: "Mr. Dorsey, you can ask the witness whether he told any city detectives about the note and the bludgeon, or whether he sought to conceal it. You can not ask him what somebody told him to do."

Hooper: "What we want to do is to show that Pierce is the head of the Pinkertons, and that he controls the policy of the Pinkertons."

Judge Roan: "This man is not responsible for what somebody told him."

The jury was brought back, and Dorsey continued his questioning.

Q. Who is the head of the Pinkertons?—A. H. B. Pierce.

Q. Where is Whitfield?

Rosser: "I object to that, your Honor."

Dorsey: "It is a well-known principle of law that we can ask that."

Judge Roan: "You can ask the question."

Q. Where is Pierce?—A. I don't know.

Q. Where is Whitfield?—A. I don't know.

Q. Now how long after you found that club did you report it to the police?—A. Seventeen hours.

Q. How long after that did you have a conference with the police?—A. Four hours.

Q. Now, did you not show Black this stick when you told him about the club?—A. I did not.

Q. Were you there when the stick was shown Black?—I was not.

Rosser took the witness.

Q. Now, is this your report?—A. Yes.

Q. Is this your diagram showing the place where you found the club and the pay envelope?—A. Yes.

Girl Bursts Forth In Frank's Defense.

Q. You attached this to your report and we now get it from Mr. Dorsey? —A. Yes.

Q. You don't know whether I ever saw it or not?—A. No.

Q. Now, this piec of envelope is just like it was when you found it?—A. Yes.

Q. If there are any changes, they don't show here?—A No.

The witness was excused, and Miss Mollie Blair, a former employee of the pencil factory, was called as a character witness. She did not answer. Miss Cora Barnes then took the stand. Before Attorney Arnold could ask her any questions, she burst forth into oratory to declare:

"We love our superintendent because he was a good business man and a gentleman.

Her words were interrupted and when the formal questions were put as to whether she knew Leo M. Frank, she arose to her feet and said:

"I believe Mr. Frank is innocent. He is too good a man and I wish I could make everybody else believe he is innocent. I would be willing to take his place and die for him. I would be glad to die for him."

Miss Barnes' spasmodic statements threw the courtroom into a volcanic eruption. As her words flowed freely from her mouth, attorneys for both sides sprang to their feet in various attitudes of protest, some shouting their objections at Judge Roan and others in pleading gestures to the witness to come to a halt. Yet her words waxed more eloquent and flowed more freely with each protest that was registered against them.

Spectators in Courtroom Convulsed With Laughter.

Sheriff Mangum and Chief Deputy Plennie Miner, with a dozen deputies, strove for several minutes in the courtroom crowd. Several spectators were so convulsed with laughter that they were compelled to leave the courtroom. One man of large avoirdupois threatened to go into convulsions.

Following the restoration of quietude, the witness was excused without an attempt to question her.

Miss Ethel Stewart, a telephone operator and a former employee of the pencil factory on the fourth floor, was next called and testified to Frank's good character.

Miss Irene Jackson, an attractive young woman, a daughter of County Policeman A. W. Jackson, and a former employee of the pencil factory, who stated that she left there the day of the murder, was the next witness. On direct examination the witness testified that Frank's character was good. Dorsey cross-examined her.

Q. Did you ever hear any of the employees say anything about Frank? —A. They seemed to be afraid of him.

Q. How?—A. They would always work hard, when they saw him coming.

Q. Do you recall Emily Mayfield?—A. Yes.

Says Frank Looked Into Dressing Room.

Q. Where does she work?—A. She worked at Jacobs' until Easter.

Q. What about that dressing room incident you told Mr. Starnes about in the presence of your father?—A. Emily Mayfield was in the dressing room one day and Frank came back there. I was back there to take off my apron.

Q. How was Miss Mayfield dressed? —A. She had off her dress.

Q. Did he come all the way in?—A. He opened the door and looked in.

Q. Did he laugh?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you threaten to quit?—A. Yes.

Q. To whom?—A. Mr. Darley.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said that we girls should stick together and that we would not lose anything by it.

Q. You told your father about it?—A. No, my sister did.

Q. Did you hear anybody but Miss Emily Mayfield talk about Frank going into this dressing room?—A. Yes, I heard about it.

Q. Who told you?—A. I don't remember. I heard them talking about him going into the dressing room two or three times.

Q. What did Frank do when he came into the dressing room?—A. He walked in, turned around and walked out.

Q. Were you in there?—A. Yes.

Q. You have told me of two times. Have you heard of any other times besides your sister and Miss Mayfield?—A. Miss Mamie Kitchens and I were in there one day when he came in.

Q. Did you hear the girls talk about other times?—A. Yes.

Q. Where were they?—A. I don't remember.

Q. What else did you hear about Frank besides the fact that he went into the dressing room and stared at the girls?—A. Nothing.

Arnold took the witness on re-direct examination.

Q. How long did you work in the factory?—A. About three years.

Q. You were willing to work on there after this?—A. I had some bills to pay and I wanted to get the money Papa wanted me to quit.

Q. The murder was the real reason you quit, wasn't it?—A. Papa said he didn't want me to work there, so I quit.

Q. Didn't you hear Frank issuing an order about the girls flirting through the fourth story window?

Dorsey objected and was sustained.

Q. What street did those windows look out on?—A. Forsyth street.

Q. People were constantly walking along the street, were they not?—A. Yes.

Q. Did any rule or order come to you against flirting out of the window?—A. There were orders against it.

Q. Frank never came into the room. He just came to the door and turned away?—A. He pushed the door open and looked in.

Q. Did he ever come in?—A. No.

Girls Partly Undressed When Frank Looked In.

Q. Which time was it you were not fully dressed?—A. When I was with Mamie Kitchens.

Q. The other times you were dressed fully?—A. Yes.

Q. How were you when you were with Miss Kitchens?—A. I had off my top dress and was preparing to put on my street dress.

Q. You had on your underskirt?—A. Yes.

Q. Were any of the girls anywhere nude at any time he came and looked in?—A. No, sir.

Q. When was this?—A. Last summer.

Dorsey took the witness on recross-examination.

Q. How soon after Frank opened the door on your sister did she quit? —A. She wanted to quit right then, but the forelady persuaded her not to.

Q. There was no way he could tell before opening the dressing room door how near any of the girls were to being undressed?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was near to the dressing room wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Arnold took the witness.

Q. What time were you girls expected to be at work?—At 7 o'clock.

Q. What time was it Frank came to the door?—A. Ten or fifteen minutes after 7 o'clock.

Dorsey took the witness.

Q. You never flirted with anyone out of the window?—A. No.

Q. Did the forelady come in?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever see any signs around there not to flirt?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear Mr. Frank say anything about flirting?—A. I heard him say something once.

Smiled or Made Face at Girl.

Q. Well, when he stood in that dressing room door and smiled did he—

Arnold: "Your honor, she never said anything about smiling."

Miss Jackson: "He never asked me."

Dorsey: "Well, I am asking you now; did he smile?"—A. Yes, he smiled, or made some kind of face at Miss Mayfield.

Q. Did he say anything?—A. No, just looked at her and walked out.

Q. He never said anything about flirting?—A. No.

The witness was excused and Harlee Branch, a reporter for The Atlanta Journal, was called to the stand. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Do you recollect having an interview with Jim Conley?—A. Yes.

Dorsey: "The story of his actions is practically the same."

Judge Roan: "He can go as far as this evidence is similar. The jury can tell whether it is the same or not."

Rosser: "It is the duty of the Judge to pass on it before it goes to the jury."

Q. I call your attention to this interview of May 31. Read it over and tell the substance

Before Mr. Branch had replied, Mr. Rosser questioned him.

Q. I will get you to state whether Conley said anything about seeing the little girl's purse?—A. He did not.

"Took 30 Minutes to Take Body to Basement."

Q. Didn't he say it took him 30 minutes to get the body down into the basement?—A. Yes.

Q. I will ask if he didn't say Lemmie Quinn got to the factory after 12 o'clock and stopped eight or nine minutes?—A. Yes.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Was he positive about the time? —A. I tried to get him to be as definite as he could, but he qualified his statements with the word "about."

Q. Did you get this interview before or after Conley went through what he said was his part in the crime at the factory?—A. It was two or three days after.

Q. Did you see him go through that performance at the factory?—A. I did.

Rosser objected.

Dorsey—I want to show by this witness Conley's preformance and that it was just as admissible as the evidence of Dr. Owens the other day.

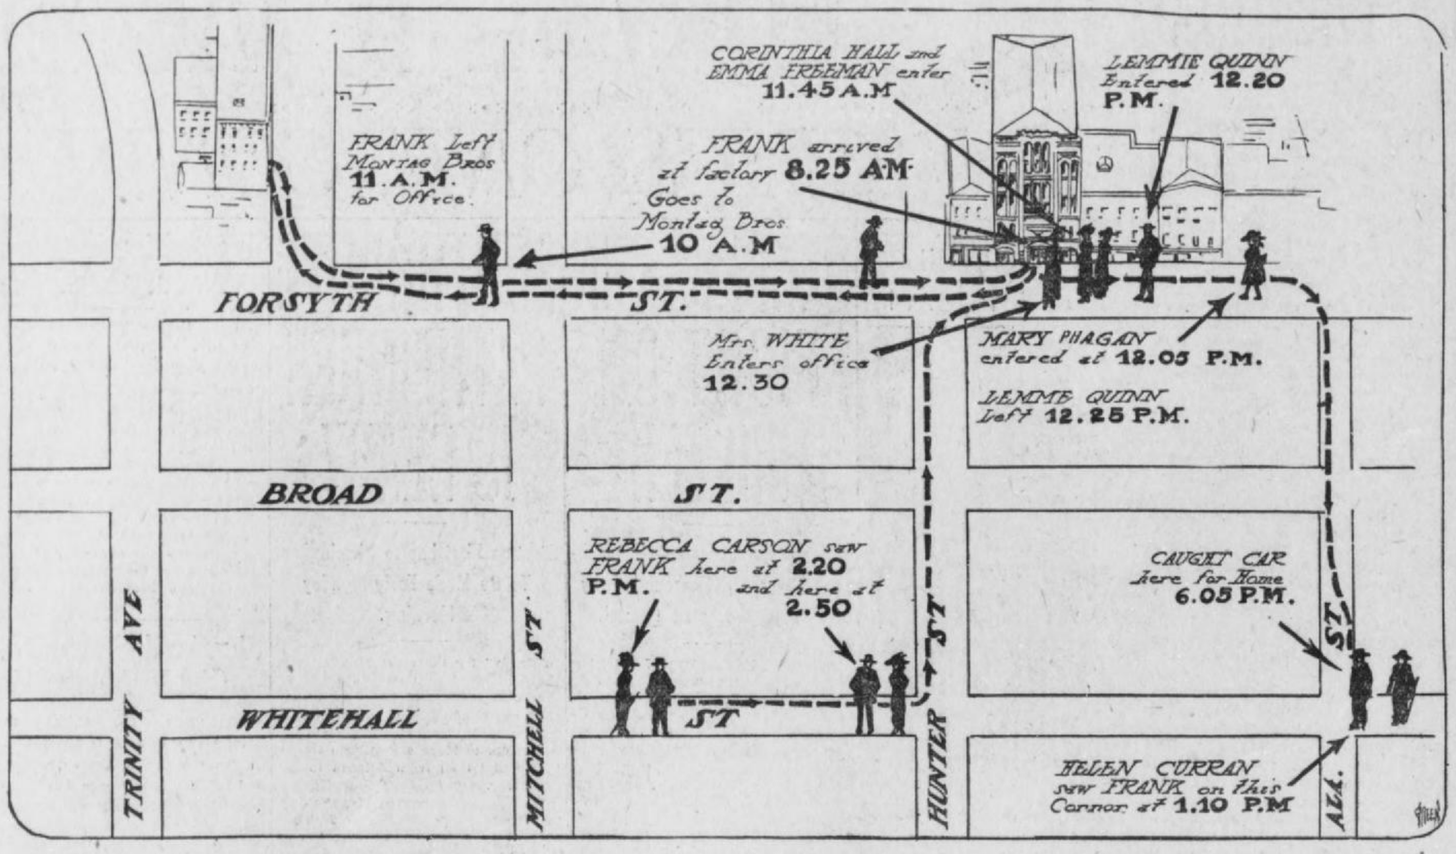

Judge Roan overruled the objection. Rosser continued to object, on the ground that Conley has told a different story since the interview.

Branch went through the negro's re-enactment of the crime. He estimated the start at 12:18. Rosser made another strenuous objection, but Judge Roan admitted the evidence.

Branch said that at 1:05 o'clock he left the building and the negro had reached the point in his pantomime where he wrote the notes in Frank's office.

At this point court adjourned until 9 o'clock Monday morning.

DIAGRAM SHOWING MAIN POINTS IN FRANK'S ALIBI

The defense claims it would have been utterly impossible for Frank to have murdered Mary Phagan and disposed of her body in the lapses in time in the alibi they have set up. They also contend that it proves Conley's story a tissue of falsehoods. Thus, they declare, Conley lied when he said Quinn preceded Monteen Stover and Mary Phagan because Quinn did not arrive until 12:20, just as they charge the negro was caught when he said he saw Mary go in ahead of Monteen because according to State's Witness George Epps, Mary was at Marietta and Forsyth at 12:07, while Monteen entered the factory at 12:05. Proceeding further, the defense attacks Conley's story of the disposition of the body on the ground that Helen Curran saw Frank at Alabama and Whitehall at 1:10, and Conley says the disposing of the body began at 12:56. The events Conley describes could not have occurred in the intervening 14 minutes, according to the defense, because Conley said he was in the wardrobe 8 minutes, and the writing of the notes must have taken at least 6 minutes, according to the State itself. The State will undoubtedly attack this formidable alibi in its rebuttal evidence.

Militia Treasury Shy $19,000 Needed For Augusta Debts

Georgia's military department faces a deficit of about $19,000, due on debts made during the Augusta trouble last year. The Legislature failed to make the proper appropriation.

The news came out in military circles Saturday morning. It became known the appropriation item providing for this amount had been killed in the final shuffle.

In the absence of Adjutant General VanHolt Nash, who is attending the national rifle shoot at Camp Perry, no official statement was given out Saturday. But the department heads are perturbed over the failure to get the appropriation.

A letter was received Saturday morning from General VanHolt Nash in which he expressed hope that the appropriation as requested had been provided for. According to information given out in the military department, General VanHolt Nash left Atlanta confident that the department would get the appropriation.

Frank Trial Halts As Clanging Engines Run to Fire Nearby

Proceedings at the Frank trial were interrupted about 11 o'clock Saturday morning when the fire department was called to Pryor and Hunter streets. The clanging gongs drowned the voices of the attorneys and witnesses, and for a brief time nervyousness prevailed in the fear that the fire was in the courthouse.

Sharp rapping by deputies restored order.

The fire proved to be nothing more than smoke issuing from a leaky flue on the second floor of the Brown Building at Pryor and Hunter streets.

STATEMENT BY FRANK WILL BE THE CLIMACTIC FEATURE OF THE TRIAL

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The defense is nearing its end in the Frank case.

A few more character witnesses—there seems to have been no difficulty whatever in securing character witnesses by the score to testify in behalf of the defendant—the statement of Frank, and the defense will rest.

The State will then introduce its witnesses in rebuttal of the defense's character witnesses, and along other lines. Not improbably, the State will undertake to rebut in a measure the defendant's personal statement.

The entire case should go to the jury Monday or Tuesday—meaning by that that the argument should begin then.

The State has been all along much more sensational and spectacular than the defense. That generally is the way these cases go, and in respect of that, therefore, the Frank case has not been particularly remarkable.

In the length of time required to develop fully both sides, however, the case is in a class by itself, so far as Georgia is concerned.

The Frank case has been noticeable, too, because of the fact that women have been excluded from the courtroom practically from the beginning of the trial—and yet in the main there hasn't been a great deal said in the courtroom that might be called particularly offensive, as those things go.

Innuendo Plays Large Part.

Aside from Conley's direct statement as to unspeakable depravity upon the part of Frank, the most that has been said by way of the very offense has been said largely through suggestion and innuendo.

Unless the State comes forward in rebuttal with some direct allegations to bolster up Conley, the chances are that there will be no further ultra-sensational testimony introduced.

The constant dread has been present in the mind of the court, however, that in this case there always is the chance that something highly offensive to sensitive ears may "break," and at any moment.

The court has had no way of knowing what either direct or cross-examination might develop in a witness, and for that reason the presiding judge has kept the courtroom clear of women and children as the case proceeded.

This circumstance has served to emphasize the presence of the defendant's wife and mother, and to make them at all times conspicuous among the spectators—as they must have been, in a large degree, in any event.

Both of these women have faced the long and trying ordeal with remarkable fortitude and patience, all things considered, and it probably is true that at no stage of the trial has anything less than genuine sympathy gone out to them from the crowds constantly on hand to witness the proceedings.

The elder Mrs. Frank was on Friday a most interesting witness. A day or so before she had—for the first and only time—lost control of her feelings in the courtroom and permitted herself to say things to the Solicitor that she herself no doubt almost instantly regretted.

Mother a Dignified Figure.

On Friday, however, when reading the somewhat remarkable and significant letter of her son to his uncle, she was a most impressive and dignified figure. I have no doubt whatever that her testimony had a fine effect upon the jury. She is the defendant's mother—it is her son about whom all those horrible things have been said—and her deep concern and interest in the case could not be mistaken.

Her heart is involved necessarily as the heart of no other one person possibly can be—no human being would expect less of her than that—but her calmness and deliberation on the stand Friday showed that she appreciated the material value of the evidence she was then giving, and that it was necessary then that her best and most discriminating intelligence be given full play, no less than heretofore her heart had been.

I think the public now is looking forward to the defendant's statement with far more interest than anything else—unless it be to the forthcoming evidence of the more or less mysterious witnesses the State still has in reserve.

Frank never has told his own story. He has maintained a reserved silence ever since he was arrested, and it will be particularly interesting to hear what the main actor in the drama has to say in his own behalf, after all else has been said on that side.

It is by no means too much to say that Frank's statement may make or mar his case—it may clear him entirely, for that thing has happened, and many more times than once—or it may cut the other way. It certainly will be a dramatic utterance—whether the thrill of it be pronounced or repressed.

It looks as if the defendant has said about the last word that can be said in establishing his good character. Good character can be proved only in the way he has gone about it.

If the State relies upon the defendant's lack of character to hold together its other story—and that seems to be the way the State is fighting its way along—it must break down the defandant's exhibits completely, or the defendant's showing is bound to figure tremendously in shaping the verdict.

Can the State do it?

That is a question Atlantans and Georgians have asked themselves continually for the past week or ten days. It is the question they still are asking themselves—and it is the question they will ask themselves until it is answered.

Upon the rebuttal of the Frank character witnesses much depends—and it has been promised, inferentially, at least, that this rebuttal will be complete and final. It must be, if the State hopes to win out.

There is nothing now that goes so directly to the very core of the issue between Leo Frank and the State of Georgia as the question of the defendant's possession or lack of character.

When the attorneys pro and con come to sum up the case, for the benefit and theoretical enlightment of the jury, it will be found, I think, that both the State and the defense have made out cases remarkable in point of strength for and against the defendant.

In other words I mean it will be found that the State has made the very best of the material it had on hand by way of outlining and establishing the charge against Frank, the while the defense has been every bit as circumspect and astute in providing for the refutation of the charges.

Trial a Fair Fight.

Certainly the trial has been such a trial as men call fair. The case was not called until both sides had had ample time to prepare for it, and until both sides announced ready.

The State and the defense each is supplied with as able and intelligent counsel as might be secured, there has been no limit whatever upon the time taken up, court officials have left nothing undone to have the witnesses both ways on hand at the moments wanted, and the witnesses under the rule while the case has proceeded, have been handled as they should be.

Judge Roan, occupying not only a most responsible position, but certainly a most trying one, has borne himself with a degree of official dignity and fair-mindedness that must commend him very highly to the public.

The jury has been taken care of like real human beings—nothing has been left undone for its comfort.

Consideration has been shown the defedant, the members of his family, and the warm friends constantly in attendance upon him.

The spectators have been orderly, even the hours observed by the court have been adjusted to the accommodation of the lawyers, the defendant, and the jury.

So far as human ingenuity and law can make it so, therefore, the trial of Leo Frank has been fair, I think—as fair as could be asked. And when I say that I mean fair to both the defense and the State.

The presiding judge let in one big, significant line of evidence supposedly unfavorable to the defense. It so happens, however, that later he let in another line supposedly as unfavorable to the State.

An Even Brea

There was no possible connection, really, between these two things, of course, for the judge did exactly the thing he thought was right in both instances. It were is a fact that his two biggest rulings cut evenly between the State and the accused—and to that extent is noticeable, in that it makes an even break.

I make the foregoing observation now because, looking at the case from the present point of view, in advance of the verdict, I feel that he observation is true—and whatever the outcome of the trial, I for one shall not feel that the case has been unfairly tried.

Judicial error may have crept in—it certainly is not for laymen to say as to that. It perhaps is not right and proper even to speculate upon such a thing.

Whatever judicial error has crept in, however, if any has, it may be corrected upon review before a court higher up. Either that or the error will redound to the defendant's benefit—for once acquitted, he never can be tried again for the murder of Mary Phagan.

There is on advantage that has come of the long drawn out battle, perhaps, and that is in the time it has given the public to weigh carefully and discriminatingly every bit of evidence as it has fallen from the lips of witnesses.

There is no reason why any person able to read the English language should be unfamiliar with any detail of the trial.

The newspapers certainly have done their part in spreading the story, as told by each side, before the public from day to day.

"CLUB OF TEMPORARY WIDOWS" GATHERS EACH DAY TO GREET THEIR HUSBANDS ON JURY

They have chosen Mrs. W. M. Jeffries "forewoman."

MRS. M. F. WOODWARD.

Many fast friendships have been formed.

"Widows" hope to perpetuate club when widowhood is over, adding twelfth member.

HELEN WOODWARD, DAUGHTER OF JUROR.

MRS. F. V. L. SMITH.

There Are Eleven Full-Fledged Members and "Associate" Member, Who Waves at Bachelor.

Atlanta has a brand new club. It is called "The Club of Temporary Widows."

Its membership, as its name indicates, is made up entirely of women. There are just eleven of them. All were brought to their temporary widowhood by the trial of Leo M. Frank. All are wives of jurors in the great murder case, or, at least, they were before the trial began. All are thoroughly tired of the tedious processes of the law which have kept them in their somber weeds for three long weeks.

Mrs. Jeffries, "widow" of W. M. Jeffries, a real estate man, who is serving on the Frank jury, has been elected the "forewoman." They do not have a president in the Club of the Temporary Widows.

They Meet Every Day.

Every night the eleven widows may be seen at Alabama and South Pryor streets as the jurors file by under as close a guard as though they were prisoners, and very dangerous prisoners at that.

They are privileged only to wave their handkerchiefs—the young bride of the club throws kisses—as the men go by on their way to the Kimball House for the night. This same young bride—or young widow—rushed up to the line the first day of the trial and tried to speak to the husband of whom she had been bereft.

A stern look from one of the deputies repulsed her. Softening, the officer explained that it would be worth as much as his job if he should let her or any of the widows say just one little word to one of those jurors.

There's One Associate Member.

Several times another young woman has been noticed on the edge of the little group making up the widows' club. She has had eyes only for the bachelor of the jury. He has had eyes only for her. It is said that she is to be taken into associate membership in the club. Report also has it that she will qualify for full membership soon after the trial.

None of the widows knew each other before the trial began. Now a number of strong friendships have been formed. In addition to the daily gatherings at Alabama and South Pryor streets, meetings are to be held each week during the life of the club, which its members hope to perpetuate for years. The meetings will be held at the members' homes, and the regained husbands may be permitted to attend once in a while.

MANY TESTIFY TO FRANK'S GOOD CHARACTER

Nearly half a hundred witnesses testified in behalf of Leo M. Frank Friday. As a climax to the day's proceedings in Judge Roan's court the defendant's mother, Mrs. Rae Frank, went on the stand to add her testimony to that which she hoped would save her son from the gallows.

Virtually all who were called were character witnesses. Near the close of the day Reuben Arnold announced that he proposed to call every woman and girl employed on the fourth floor of the pencil factory, as well as many from the other floors, to testify to Frank's conduct about the factory and his attitude toward the girls in his employ.

He called three before the close of the day and explained to them in advance that he was going to ask them questions which he planned to direct at every girl employee called. He then asked them if they ever had had any part in the gay parties that the State has said took place in Frank's office either during or after factory hours. He asked them if they ever had drunk beer in Frank's office or ever were there for a questionable purpose. All of the witnesses denied knowing of or participating in any such parties.

Frank's lawyer said that he would continue this line of questioning with all of the women he called from the factory. The testimony was obtained to discredit the stories of some of the State's witnesses charging that Frank was in the habit of entertaining women in his office.

Employees Show Loyalty.

The factory employees called Friday displayed the utmost loyalty to their superintendent. They testified as though they could believe nothing wrong of Frank and appeared indignant at the suggestions of immorality made by Solicitor Dorsey.

When the day closed there were still many witnesses to be heard. It was problematical if the defense would finish during the day. The statement of Frank was being reserved until the last moment before the defense rested its case. His attorneys announced that they did not know themselves whether it would be a formal written statement or whether Frank would make it informally from notes he had taken before and during the trial.

The first move by the State in rebuttal is awaited with the keenest interest. It generally is conceded that Solicitor Dorsey will occupy the major part of his time in attacking the character of the young factory superintendent. He is said to be willing to let the main theory of the crime, as suggested by the defense, go practically unassailed except by the testimony already given by his witnesses, Jim Conley principal among them.

Girl to Assail Frank.

Dewey Hewell, a 16-year-old girl, recently sent from Atlanta to the Home of the Good Shepherd in Cincinnati, was returned to this city Friday for the express purpose of testifying against Frank. She was brought back under the Solicitor's directions, and is reported by persons connected with the prosecution to have testimony extremely damaging to Frank's moral character.

Many of Friday's witnesses who testified to the excellence of Frank's character, testified at the same time to the worthlessness of Conley's.

Miss Dora Small, a machine operator on the fourth floor, swore that she always had known Frank as a gentleman, and never had heard any stories of immorality in regard to him.

She said that Conley's character was bad, and that he had a reputation for being shiftless and dishonest.

Mrs. E. H. Carson, mother of Miss Rebecca Carson, another of the witnesses, declared that Conley acted suspiciously after the crime.

Says Conley Cringed.

Miss Mary Pirk said that she had accused Conley of the murder and that the negro slunk out of her sight and had not appeared around her again during the day. She was asked by the Solicitor if she ever had seen Frank struggling with Mary Phagan or ever had noticed Frank taking her to one side to talk with her during the weeks immediately preceding the tragedy.

She replied she had not. The Solicitor pressed this question, demanding if it was not true that Frank, about two weeks before the Phagan girl was murdered, had taken her to one side of the room and caught hold of her when she tried to get back to her work.

Miss Julia Fuss testified that Conley had said Frank was "as innocent as the angels in heaven."

Harry Gottheimer, a traveling salesman for Montag Bros. and the National Pencil Company, testified that he had an engagement with Frank for Saturday afternoon. Miss Hattie Hall, stenographer, swore two days previously that Frank tried to persuade her to work at the pencil factory during the afternoon.

Combats Premeditation Theory.

These two witnesses were produced by the defense to combat the State's announced theory that Frank deliberately planned on Friday, the day before the crime, the attack which the State says he made on Gottheimer.

Gottheimer testified that Frank asked him to come over to the factory during the day.

"I'm not sure that I can get over this forenoon," Gottheimer said he told Frank.

"Well, if you can't come this forenoon, be sure and come this afternoon," Frank replied, according to Gottheimer.

Interest was at fever heat throughout the day because of the report that Frank was about to make his statement.

It increased when Mrs. Rae Frank, mother of the defendant, was called to the stand late in the afternoon.

She was asked by Attorney Rosser to identify a letter said to have been written by Frank the afternoon of April 26 to his uncle, M. Frank, who was in New York at the time. Mrs. Frank read the letter and identified it as the one which had been read in her presence April 28 in the Hotel McAlpin, New York.

Letter to Show Frank Calm.

The letter was another of the pieces of evidence submitted by the defense in an effort to show Frank's mental and nervous condition Saturday afternoon after the time the State claims Mary Phagan was attacked and killed.

The message was quite like any letter that might be written in ordinary circumstances. The writing was regular and without any indications that the writer was laboring under mental excitement. In the course of the letter the word "Yontif" occurred, which Mrs. Frank described as a pure Hebrew word meaning holiday.

The letter follows:

"Atlanta, Ga., April 26, 1913.—Dear Uncle: I trust that this finds you and dear auntie well after arriivng safely in New York. I hope that you found all the dear ones well i. Brooklyn, and I await a letter from you telling me how you found things there. Lucile and I are well.

"It is too short a time since you left for anything startling to have developed down here. The opera has Atlanta in its grip, but that ends today. I've heard a rumor that opera will not be given again in a hurry here. To-day was Yontif (holiday) here, and the thin gray line of veterans, smaller each year, braved the rather chilly weather to do honor to their fallen comrades.

"Inclosed you will find last week's report. The shipments still keep up well, though the result is not what one would wish. There is nothing new in the factory, etc., to report. Inclosed please find the price list you desired.

"The next letter from me you should get on board ship. After that I will write to the address you gave me in Frankfurt.

"With much love to you both, in which Lucile joins me, I am, your affectionate nephew,

"LEO M. FRANK."

Negro Drayman Denies Seeing Conley

Four negro witnesses were called during the day. One of them, Truman McCreary, a drayman, testified he never saw Conley watching at the factory door as Conley testified it was his frequent custom to do.

Walter Pride, a negro helper, declared he would not believe Conley on oath. He said he often was at the factory on Saturday afternoons and that he never saw women in Frank's office.

Ray Bauer, a white youth, told of visits to the factory on Saturday afternoons. He declared he always had found Frank there alone working on the books. He never saw any women.

John D. a Prodigal; Gives Berries Away

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—The harvest of crabs and blackberries at Tarrytown this year beats all records.

Thousands of crabs are being caught in the Hudson daily. One man caught 150 in two hours.

Blackberries are so plentiful that half of the boys of the village are picking them. The favorite and best field is on John D. Rockefeller's estate. Mr. Rockefeller has not interfered with the picking, and it is estimated that 300 quarts are picked from his bushes daily.

MOTHER'S LOVE GIVES TRIAL ITS GREAT SCENE

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

Every human emotion has been paraded during the long three weeks of the Frank trial.

There has been pathos. Comedy has opposed tragedy. Science has met sympathy. Truth has been arrayed against fiction. Negro has conflicted with white.

The erudite Arnold has matched wits with the thick-lipped, thick-skulled Conley. Luther Rosser, stern, determined and skillful, has had to try to meet the machinations of a brain of a cornfield negro, Newt Lee.

Hugh Dorsey, young and determined; Frank Hooper, smiling and ambitious, have breast to breast encountered the battleax of Rosser and the rapier of Arnold.

There remained but one thing—the dramatic touch that sends the violins trembling a high crescendo and the hearts of the audience beating a long roll in double time.

It was furnished during the past week.

The Mother's Part.

It was furnished by the person that a Belasco would have picked for the part. The touch was added by the person to whom the trial means more than a seat in high heaven—a woman whose son is on trial for his life.

The stage had been appropriately set for the dramatic effect. The audience had a man of unquestioned wealth back of him, with a little girl of the common masses of the common people called the victim of his degenerate lust.

Atlanta's most noted criminal lawyers confronted a young prosecutor and a young lawyer who is seeking the accolade of the bar.

A cornfield "nigger" had told his simple story. There was even the air of minstrelsy in his testimony, though it was as black as the charge against the man who looked on him calmly and unafraid during the minutes and hours in which he spoke words that helped the opposition in its desire to fasten a rope around his neck.

This same man had sat soolly when another negro, a being of a different type, had told a story as sinister as Satan, as awful as the wrath of Jove. He sat, and without noticeable change of expression, heard this being accuse him of a deed as dark as murder.

And all through this ordeal a woman had sat near the accused man. Her eyes had faced his accusers. They had faced them boldly. Her bearing was remarkable.

The Last Straw.

But a straw will break a camel's back, the old saw declares.

The straw fell, and the camel's back caved as dynamite destroys.

But the break came unexpectedly.

Ashley Jones, an insurance man, had told of Frank's good character on the witness stand.

He paused for cross-examination. Solicitor General Dorsey asked him if he knew of any acts of perversion Frank had committed.

Then the volcano that had been dormant for ages became active. Then the race that has endured martyrdom broke its silence. Then the mother, who believes in her heart that her boy could do no wrong, spoke.

"He never heard such a thing, and neither have you," and her voice was blazing when she spoke it.

Then the drama was furnished. The audience rose from the seats. Eyes were fixed. Breaths were shortly drawn. Seconds seemed hours.

It had taken mother love, the tenderest of all passions, to furnish the incident that had really stirred.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

YOU MUST DECIDE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am in love with a young man who lives in the same neighborhood and is of a very high standard. He has told me he loves me and would like me to become his wife, but as he is a Hebrew and I am a Christian would like your advice, for I can not live without him. G. M. S.

This is a matter too serious for a third party to determine. Marriages of this nature are sometimes happy, but the risk is great. When it means an estrangement from one's family and friends, I would throw my influence against it.

BE PERSISTENT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 19 and deeply in love with a young lady one year my senior. One day I proposed to her and she said her parents would not permit the marriage because of the difference in nationality.

Please let me know what to do, for I love her. HEARTBROKEN.

You are too young to marry even though you had their consent, so do not feel discouraged. Go on loving her; attend to your business duties faithfully; develop yourself mentally, and don't despair or worry. Make yourself such a desirable suitor their objections will vanish.

DON'T MAKE THE EFFORT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a girl of 18 and in love with a man one year my senior. We have never kept company. He tells everyone he loves me, but while he is in my presence I fail to see it. How may I find out if he is true to me? I. H.

The man who tells "everyone" he loves a girl, and gives her no evidence, doesn't love her very much.

Unless you have made mutual vows of love, he can not be untrue to you. A man must make vows before he can break them. Do not fret yourself about him. Time for that when you are engaged.

YOU ARE A LITTLE EXACTING.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18, and for the past four months have been keeping steady company with a young man of 20. When I first became acquainted with this young man he was making a nice salary, but I told him that if he wanted to go with me he must change his profession, which he did, therefore starting at the bottom of the ladder again. It is also understood that he will not care to be married before three years, to which my parents and myself agree, provided we become engaged in about a month from now, which he absolutely refuses to do, claiming that he does not want to become engaged before next year. My parents have therefore forbidden my going with him under any other conditions.

Now, do you think that if he really loves me, as he claims he does, he would allow a matter of a few months to break our keeping company? The only reason he gives for not wanting to be engaged is that he is making a small salary, but if I and my folks are satisfied, I don't see why he should object. IN DOUBT.

He gave up his profession for you, starting at the bottom of the ladder again. I think he has conceded his share, and, under the circumstances, you should not nag him into an engagement until he is ready. Love is so too much to risk it by the exacting attitude which I am afraid you are taking.

Two Birds—One Stone.

Norah had arrived from Erin's Isle a week before, and was with difficulty being "broken in" to the routine of an English household. Cleanliness was not a very strong point with her, and her cooking, apart from "spuds," was hardly all that could be desired.

"If you are not quite sure on any point, come and ask me at once," said her mistress.

Dinner was just about to be served when there was a clatter along the hall, and the breathless Norah poked her head around the dining room door.

"Please, ma'am," she asked, "an' how will I be knowin' when the puddin' is done enough?"

"Stick a knife into it," said her mistress, with a resigned air. "If the knife comes out clean, the pudding is ready to serve."

"Yes, ma'am," said Norah; "and I'll be after that crathur that's bollin' over."

"And, oh, Norah"—the mistress had an after-thought—"if the knife does not come out clean, you might stick all the rest of the knives into the pudding."

In a Nutshell

By MINNA IRVING.

We heard with equanimity
That coal was soaring high,
We bore it when the price of meat
Went kiting to the sky;
When eggs and butter followed suit
We stood it like a sport,
But, lo, the worst has come at last—
The peanut crop is short.

Oh, what is summer time without
The tuber of delight?
We ought to bust the peanut trust,
We ought to make a fight;
We ought to put our woe in print,
We ought to go to court,
We ought to take the warpath when
The peanut crop is short.

The Mistakes of Jennie .:. By HAL COFFMAN

Being a Series of Chapters in the Life of a Southern Girl in the Big City

"No, no, my boy; I could not be so selfish."

CHAPTER XXV.

AFTER the row Jennie had with the installment man, she still owed $28 for her clothes. The man had come for his weekly payment on the clothes, which Tom had to pay to keep the man from literally tearing them off Jennie's back, for Jennie didn't have the money to pay him, and if Tom hadn't been there at the time Jennie would probably have had to do like other girls have done in such an emergency—gone out and GOT the money, never mind HOW.

When Jennie told Tom she still owed $28 for her clothes—that she foolishly bought and did not need—Tom left Jennie in the front room, saying he wanted to go in and talk to her mother a while.

Jennie's mother was lying in bed, and, sick as she was, managed a cheery smile at seeing Tom and told him she always regarded him as her boy, and that she had always hoped that some day he would marry Jennie. Tom did not tell Jennie's mother how much Jennie still owed on her clothes, for he knew that she had trouble enough without worrying any more. Instead, he told her that he had a little money saved up—for the time that Jennie would consent to marry him—and that he wanted her to take it and go down to the beach somewhere, take a good rest, get well again and take Jennie with her.

At this the good woman cried and said over and over, as she patted Tom's hand:

"No, no, my boy. I could not be so selfish as to take your money that was meant for yours and Jennie's happiness."

A VERY NEAR THING .:. A Complete Short Story

VANSITTART was going to smash. At least, it looked ominously like it. Nobody said it openly. Nominally, nobody was supposed to even suspect that it was likely. But men whispered it to one another in the city; and when men whisper about a thing it is oftener far more serious than if they talked about it in their loudest voices.

"There's about one chance in a million for me!" he told himself. "If the Oriental Bank floats, I'm safe; if it closes down, I'm finished. And it will close down unless a miracle happens, and—Lily will know that the gods have given her her revenge!"

Vansittart's world would have been astonished, perhaps cynically amused, had it seen him now. After locking the door of his room from the inside, to render intrusion impossible, he opened a secret drawer in his desk by touching a spring, and took from it a bundle of letters and a photograph.

The letters were love letters, and the photograph that of a girl.

A fair-haired girl, with a pretty face, without Vansittart's pitiless power, but brave and patient, with love and faith in her eyes. And the letters had been written by a girl to the man to whom she had given her heart, whose wife she expected to be.

"By jove!" muttered Vansittart, as he put the letters down, "she's had to wait for her revenge, but it looks as if Fate is going to give it to her at last."

It had been an ordinary, commonplace story of a man's selfishness and falsity and a girl's outraged trust and love. Vansittart had been engaged to Lily Gordon, a girl clerk in the city, before he had begun to rise, and had left her without a word to fight life's battle for herself as soon as he began to grow rich.

Too Late.

"I was a cur, a mean cur!" he muttered. "But it's too late to think of it now. If I go down she'll know. Will she be glad, I wonder?"

He tried to laugh, but there was a harsh discordance in the sound. Replacing the latters and the photograph in the desk, he went out.

He felt he could not sit there waiting for ruin to come.

There was a man in the city, another speculator, named James Harper, whom Athol Vansittart had helped many times, by whose side he had stood in more than one threatening crisis. Harper had not the power to save him in his turn, but Vansittart felt that he must talk to someone if something in his brain were not to snap.

So he went to him now.

Harper was a keen-featured man, with a trick of half curving his lips in what premised to be a smile and never became one. He was alone in his office when Vansittart entered and grasped his hand cordially.

"You've come to talk over things, old chap?" he said. "I'm glad of it. I'd like to cheer you up. But wait a minute."

He closed the inner door.

"Anything wrong?"

"Oh, no; only a new girl I've got to help with my letters, and I don't want her to hear too much of our talk. Business is one thing, but a confidential chat between friends is another. I hope it's not so bad with you as some fools are making out?"

"I'm afraid some fools are rather wise," returned Vansittart, grimly. "It is no use blinking things. I'm done for if the Oriental closes down."

Harper's tone was sympathetic, but he was pretending to pick up something he had dropped on the floor and his eyes were very eager.

"Look here, Harper," Vansittard said with an effort: "I've come to you because I believe you're the only true friend I've got. As I said, I shall pull through if the bank stands firm. But I don't think it can. It's in a bad way itself, and if it can't raise a big loan practically at once it will close its doors. And if it does that I can't face the music."

"Surely, it's not so bad as that?"

Very Desperate.

"I tell you it is!" Vansittard answered, fiercely. "I shall owe more than I can pay. I shall be disgraced as well as ruined. But I'm not going to stop to face it. Harper, if—if anything happens to me, do your best to prevent too much mud being thrown on my name. It's all you can do."

There was a threat of self-destruction in his tense expression, if not on his lips. Harper knew it, but he did not endeavor to stop him or to argue with him. He only gripped his hand once more, with a few conventional words of sympathy.

And when Vansittart had gone Harper laughed.

Laughed, and then sat considering and frowning, until he suddenly struck his hand on his desk with a low, triumphant exclamation, as though he had hit on a way of accomplishing something that had seemed impossible before.

He left his office hastily, and when he had gone the inner door opened and there came out a girl, with love and terror on her colorless face.

It was late before Vansittart went home. He had gone back to his office and waited for news, but none had come. He left the place at last with a morbid conviction strong on him that he would never return to it. He hailed a hansom, but the man had to ask him twice before he was told where to drive him.

It seemed to Vansittart a matter of indifference where he went. It was not that he had abandoned all hope. He clung to the gambler's belief that there is always a last chance. But he was too restless and excited to fix his mind on anything except the news he was waiting for.

Ah, what was that?

The Crash.

The street was quiet, all but deserted. There was a gas lamp opposite Vansittart's door, and the illumination was gleaming on a pink something. It was the placard of an evening newspaper which a hawker was offering for sale.

He hastened toward it. In bold, merciless letters, the words stared at him:

"FAILURE OF THE ORIENTAL BANK."

He bought a paper, oblivious that he gave a sovereign for it. In the space reserved for late news were two smudged lines, stating that the Oriental Bank had closed its doors that evening and posted a notice outside that they would not reopen on the morrow.

So it was all over. It was useless to hope against hope any longer. His career was finished. He was a ruined man, with disgrace awaiting him if he lived.

He let himself into his house with a latch key, and went straight to the library, where he had been in the habit of working. At first he switched the electric light on full, but at once lowered it to a tiny shimmer. No need of much light for what he was going to do!

A revolver was ready to hand when he opened a drawer. There was nothing else for him to do.

* * * * * * * * *

"No, no! Listen to me, Athol. I've come to tell you—I've come to tell you it's a lie."

Lily was beside him, struggling with him to get the revolver away. He stared at her stupidly.

"A lie?"

"The placard. The bank was not stopped. Mr. Harper had the false placard and the two lines of false news put in one copy of the paper. I have proof of it; I have found the man who printed it!"

The Plot.

He was hard to convince. But she told him how she had been in the inner office while he was talking to Harper, and how, after he was gone, Harper's manner had been so suspicious that she had followed him to see what he meant to do. He had gone to a printer. It was not for a long time after he had left the shop, however, that she half forced and half frightened the printer to confess that Harper had paid him handsomely to turn out the sham placard and insert the two lines in the paper. He had said it was for a joke, but the girl had not believed it. She had guessed that he intended to use the placard and doctored newspaper to drive Vansittart to desperation by leading him to believe that all was lost.

"So I came here to tell you," she said, "I saw you come in, but you did not see me. So I had to knock, and when the servant opened the door I ran past her. I had seen the light flash from the window into the street, and that helped me to find my way to you. The placard is a lie!"

Vansittart looked at her: there was

.:. One Woman's Story .:.

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XXII.

SO agitated had Mrs. Danforth been at the news of Mary's break with Gordon Craig that she lay down on the couch in the tiny parlor until the dishes were washed and put away. This task the daughter performed quickly and noiselessly. She was thankful that her mother had asked no more questions just then, for she felt that she had not the courage to reply to them. Her work done, she glanced nervously at the clock. It was now a quarter past eight. Bert Fletcher would be here soon. She must prepare her mother for the call. She went into the parlor and, drawing a chair close to the couch, took the pale and worn woman's hand in hers.

She Started Nervously.

"Mother, dear," she said, "I think you ought to go to bed now, for you do not feel well enough to see company."

Mrs. Danforth started nervously. "Company!" she exclaimed. "Why, what company could you be expecting?"

Mary smiled bitterly at the suggestion implied by the question.

"That's true, mother," she said, a hard ring in her voice. "I am not troubled with friends or guests, am I? But this evening will be an exception, for I am expecting a caller—Mr. Fletcher."

Her mother sat up and eyed her keenly. "Mr. Fletcher?" she asked. "Is he the man who was so nice to you one evening last winter?" There was eagerness in the tone, and as she noted this the girl appreciated that her loving, gentle mother was actually anxious to have her marry if it would mean freedom from care for herself and the girl.

"Mary, why don't you answer me?" demanded Mrs. Danforth.

Mary started guiltily. "I beg your pardon, mother," she said. "Did you ask me a question? I must have been absorbed in my own thoughts. What did you ask, dear?"

"Only if this Mr. Fletcher is the man who brought you home one night in a cab when it was stormy?"

"Yes," assented Mary, "that is the man."

"Well, I remember that you once said he was very kind," remarked her mother, watching the girl's face.

"Yes," said Mary, "he is kind—even if he is not a cultured gentleman and does murder the king's English. But, after all, truth and fidelity are more than education and manners. I have had enough of men of culture and of nothing else." She tried to change her sharp speech into a laugh that her mother might not suspect how sore her heart was.

Mary Remembered.

The widow replied with one of her sighs, but this time the sound was indicative of hope and satisfaction.

"He evidently knows that you are a lady, and he treats you as if you were. So he must be something of a gentleman himself. I am ready to like him if he is good to you. Oh, my child," lifting one of her daughter's hands to her pale lips and holding it there, "nobody, not even you, knows what I have gone through in seeing you overworked and in trying to save and manage here at home. There have been times when but for you I would have prayed to die."

Mary remembered how, less than two hours ago, she had said to herself: "If it were not for mother I would want to die." But she smiled reassurance into her mother's face.

"Since we need each other, mother," she said, jestingly, "let us both determine to live for each other. And there's a better time coming for us both."

The mother looked at her anxiously. "You mean that, Mary? You are not keeping the truth from me or trying to pacify me by seeming hopeful when you are not, are you, dear?"

"No, mother," replied the girl. "I am speaking the truth when I say that I believe there is a better time coming for you."

She did not add "and for me." Perhaps she did not think of it.

"I do not like to seem inquisitive," Mrs. Danforth went on, "but I am wondering how long ago you broke your engagement to Gordon—Mr. Craig, I mean."

The girl hesitated a moment before replying, and she avoided her mother's gaze.

"Not so long ago," she said indifferently. "You know I always think that when people find they are not suited to each other it is best for them to agree to disagree with as little fuss and talk as possible."

There was so much finality in her manner that the elderly woman ventured to say no more about the Texan. Yet she was not satisfied, and soon asked timidly:

"This—this Mr. Fletcher—do you like him very much, Mary, my dear?"

"I have told you, mother," said the girl, "that he is a kind man, and has been good to me—so why should I not like him?"

Her mother began another question, but a ring at the bell checked it.

"Good Night, Dear."

"Good night, dear," she said, rising hastily and hurrying into her own room.

When the door had closed behind her mother, Mary stood, her hands over her eyes. Perhaps she was praying, perhaps trying to collect her thoughts. But as the bell sounded forth a second summons she went slowly into the kitchen and pressed the button releasing the catch of the lower front door. For another minute she stood poised as if now, at this last moment before her guest's arrival, she would escape him, would avoid receiving him. Then, recovering her self-control and courage, she passed out into the narrow hall, opened her front door and stood waiting for the man whose footsteps she heard on the stairs ascending toward her.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THE most restful way for spending one's vacation is to watch one's neighbors. If they are idle, it makes the one on a vacation just indignant enough to make his blood circulate, and if they are working, the sight of their labors makes his own idleness soothing in contrast.

The man who lived next door interested himself with the Lysander John Appleton family, who were occupying their summer home. He watched them the day they moved in: Two women of regal bearing, a boy with a forehead like a Mansard roof, and a meek-looking man who might be a servant, the Appleton family being an ideal American family.

It was the women who interested the idle man the most. They were of such queenly bearing and had such perfect figures he longed for the fingers and skill of a Rodin. "I never," he murmured, "saw more perfectly-formed women."

They entered the house, closed the door, and for a half hour there was no outward evidence of occupancy, and then the man on the side porch saw a woman emerge from the back door the sight of whom made him throw back his head and laugh.

She had a figure like that of a featherbed, and if she had ever had a waist line it had long ago moved up and become lost in the foothills of her mountainous bosom. She shook and quivered as she walked like a bowl of calves'-foot jelly, and while he gazed at her in bewilderment the door opened again and there emerged a younger woman so thin that she looked the same coming as going.

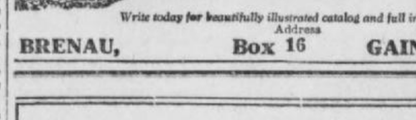

For a week he saw two women with perfect figures enter and emerge at the front door, and a feather bed and a bean pole from which garments drooped like a flag at half mast emerge and enter at the back door. Then one evening when he saw Lysander John sitting alone on the porch in front he walked across the lawn and asked for an explanation.

"They are the same women," said Lysander John sadly. "If you are interested, I will show you the means of the transformation."

He led the way upstairs to a dressing room where two long, vise-like garments hung over the back of a chair.

"The modern magician's wand," he said, pointing to two corsets."

The Ten Commandments of the Summer Wife

By DOROTHY DIX.

ARISE, sister, gird up thy straight front, put glad raiment upon thyself and take thy vacation; yea, take it though thou hast to fight for it with tooth and nail, for she that hath wrestled with the robber that lieth in wait in the butcher shop and the despoiler who abideth in the grocery store, and who hath provided the wherewithal her family is fed three times a day for three hundred and sixty-five days, needeth to slip the yoke for a space while the galled place healeth.

2. When thou takest thy vacation, go it alone. Be not as those foolish wives who say, "I have never been parted from my husband, and lo, where he goeth there will I go also," for belike thou hast gotten on thy husband's nerves and he would fain have a rest from thee.

3. Reflect that nine months of the year can a man rejoice and be exceeding glad to be married. Ten months can he steel his heart with fortitude to endure it, but on the twelfth month he noticeth that his wife's nose is crooked, and he knoweth her cooking. Therefore get thee hence on the twelfth month, and when thou shalt return to him he will make a feast at thy coming.

They shall mock thee.

4. Stay not too long, though, on thy vacation, for it is not good that a husband should be left alone to his own devices until he can find the secret spot wherein the clean shirt hideth itself and the fresh collars are secreted. Verily it was written in the Book of the Prophets that a little absence maketh the heart grow fonder, but too much absence inclineth it to another skirt.

5. When thou rockest in the chair that swayeth back and forth on the Summer hotel gallery, boast not thyself of thine automobile, and thy butler, and thy social prestige, and the diamonds thou hast left behind thee in thy husband's safe; for the women thou braggest to art the Daughters of Missouri, that even require to be shown, and they shall mock thee behind thy back as a liar.

Go it alone.

6. Tell not the secret of thy life. Reveal not the weaknesses of thy husband, and pull not forth from thy closet the skeleton where it is hidden because thou happenest to stroll in the twilight with a sympathetic sister, for lo she shall tell the tale to another, and she shall repeat it to still another, and scandal shall be heaped upon thy name.

7. When thou playest bridge, get thee a strangle hold upon thy purse, for peradventure the society dames with whom thou sportest shall shear thee even as a lamb is sheared on Wall Street, and thou shalt have to write home for more money.

8. Take not the lone Summer man away from the maidens when he fleest to thee as to a temple of refuge, because thou already hast a husband and cannot expect him to marry thee. Flirt not with such an one, but stand thou to one side and give the virgins their chance, for lo in these days a husband is scarce and hard to come at.

9. Listen not to the man who wandereth on the beach with thee in the moonlight and who sayeth, "Would God I had met thee in time," for behold he is but as a phonograph with one record, and hath already said the same thing to 981,735 other women. Also he draweth but twenty-five bones per in a department store, whilst thy husband hath skill with the shekels, so that thou adornest thyself in purple and fine linen and split skirts therewithal.

10. Forget not that gossip stalketh through the halls of a Summer hotel, seeking whom it may destroy; therefore bear thyself as though thou posest in a moving picture film and converse as though thou consortest with a dictagraph. So shalt thou meet thy husband with a glad smile when he cometh down on the Saturday afternoon trains, and thy heart shall not quake with fear when thou thinkest of what one of the old cats who knit pink sweaters in the hotel lobby may reveal unto him.

Selah.

'Tain't No Use.

The tramp approached the proud citizen and asked for alms.

"Go to the ant, thou sluggard."

"Tain't no use, mister. Me aunt's jist as tight-fisted as me uncle an' all de rest uv me relashuns. I fear I'll have to go to work at last."

Childlife.

"Come, Willie," said his mother, "don't be so selfish. Let your little brother play with your marbles a while."

"But," protested Willie, "he means to keep them always."

"Oh, I think not."

"I say, Yes,' 'cause he's swallowed two of them already."

.:. The Coralbank Case .:.

By MATTHEW JAMES.

ONE of the smarest little robberies that has ever come under my notice," said Detective Hunter, of Scotland Yard, as he musingly lit his first cigar one night recently at my rooms in Portman Square, "was that perpetrated in the autumn of last year upon a Mr. Silas Jay, then residing in a pretty little house known as "Coralbank" and situated about half a mile beyond Windsor."

I was on the alert in an instant, for there were few things I like better than listening to one of Detective Hunter's professional experiences.

"Perhaps," he said after a few moments' reflection, "I had better give you the particulars as they were narrated to me by Mr. Silas Jay himself, since I personally had nothing to do with the case."

The story ran as follows:

First, I must explain that Mr. Jay, who was a bachelor, was a man of many prejudices. He suspected everybody, and regarded all recognized and established institutions with unqualified distrust. Those that were national were torpid, and therefore mere shams, while those that were not were established chiefly for the fattening of financiers by any process, honest or otherwise, but more generally otherwise.

The existing police system held a prominent position in the former category, while banking houses figured no less conspicuously in the latter. This last opinion induced hmi to distribute his capital among six or seven banks, in order that, should any one of them fail and swindle him out of his money, his fortune would not be very materially impaired. Well, among these banking houses was one situated in Windsor, which, for the sake of convenience, he always used when at home, and in this bank the sum of $60,000 was deposited.

The Rumor Spreads.

How the rumor reached him I was never able to discover, but one day in October he presented himself in great excitement at the offices of the bank in question, declaring that he had heard it whispered they contemplated suspending payment, and demanding an immediate surrender of his credit balance of $60,000.

The manager indignantly repudiated the suspicion, but the old gentleman was thoroughly frightened, and finally the money was handed to him over the counter in the shape of a hundred $500 and two hundred $50 notes. These, as he afterwards explained to me, he intended depositing the following day in another of the local banks. But this intention was frustrated.

Early the next morning it was discovered that during the night an entry had been effected into the house, and the alarmed Mr. Jay, descending hastily to the library, discovered, to his mortification, that the larger of the two parcels of bank notes, of the value of £10,000, had been abstracted from the drawer in which he had locked it. The smaller but more valuable parcel he had placed, for greater security, in a secret compartment of his secretary, and this, to his intense relief, he found to be intact. The ingeniousness of the contrivance had baffled the thief, who had been forced to retire without securing the bulk of the money.

Mr. Jay dispatched a servant with a telegram, which he had himself indited requesting the authorities at Scotland Yard to send down a detective at the "earliest possible opportunity."

Half an hour later the servant returned without having dispatched the telegram and accompanied by a tall, shrewd-looking, businesslike man of about thirty-five. He was immediately conducted to the library, where, without loss of time, he introduced both himself and his errand to the astonished Mr. Jay. He spoke with a quick, intelligent precision that was not without its effect on his listener.

"Mr. Walter Craft."

"Mr. Silas Jay, I believe?" he said, briskly. "I chanced to be in the telegraph office when your servant entered, and, observing the direction of the message he was about to dispatch, took the liberty of interrupting it until I had seen you. But first allow me to introduce myself."

He took a card from his pocket and laid it on the table. Mr. Jay picked it up and read the name, "Mr. Walter Craft, detective inspector, Scotland Yard."

"As you see," resumed the stranger in a matter-of-fact tone, "I am connected with the establishment to which your telegram was directed, and, this being so, I took the further liberty of making myself acquainted with its contents. The closing words, 'earliest possible opportunity,' particularly appealed to my professional recognition, of the value of time; so, being on the spot, I have come straight to you to offer my services in discovering the perpetrator or perpetrators of the robbery which took place here last night, the chief particulars of which I have already elicited from your servant."

Mr. Jay rose from his chair, "I am glad you came," he said.

The detective bowed, and then, resuming his brisk, businesslike air, which appeared to afford his listener no small satisfaction, said:

"Then let us begin at once."

"Had you any other money in the house?" His keen, gray eyes searched Mr. Jay's face.

The latter hesitated. He was at all times a suspicious man. But the detective's keen insight into the position of things had strongly prepossessed himself in his favor, while his character was no doubt unimpeachable. So, after a moment's consideration, he told the story of the untouched parcel of bank notes, even going so far, in the exuberance of his spirits at the thief's failure, as to touch the secret spring which opened the hidden compartment and reveal to the detective the notes within. As he did so, however, he appeared to regret the action, for he made a movement as if to reclose the compartment, but the detective stopped him.

"Pardon me," he said quickly, "but did I understand you to say that you drew these notes from the bank with those that are missing?"

Silas Jay nodded.

"In that case," said the detective, emphatically, "I must ask you to allow me to examine these notes. A great deal may depend on my doing so."

The Suspicion.

Silas Jay reluctantly drew them from their hiding place and handed them to the detective. The latter turned them over, one by one, his fingers lingering long over the task. Then, with a half-suppressed sigh, he handed them back to their owner and watched that gentleman as he once more replaced them in the secret compartment of the secretaire, and heard the sharp, metallic click of the spring as it flew into position.

When this was done he asked to be allowed to see the servants, and one by one they were called into the library. He said but little to them, however, chiefly impressing upon them the necessity for silence on the subject of the robbery, and dismissed them once more to their respective duties. Then he turned to Mr. Jay.

"Now," he said briskly. "I think I may confide to you the fact that my investigations so far have not been without their reward. To-morrow morning I shall return and shall probably require to again examine—and, if may be necessary to photograph—the notes still in your possession. I will now bid you good-day, as there are several things that need to be done in the meantime."

At half-past ten the following morning there was a loud pealing of the front door bell, and a few minutes later a servant announced that two police constables in uniform requested to see Mr. Jay on a matter of considerable importance. They were shown into the library, and awkwardly touched their helmets to the master of the house. They were typical country policemen—thickset, stolid-looking individuals, who might certainly form part of the arm of the law, but possessed no iota of its brains.

"Are you Mr. Silas Jay?" inquired one, in a slow, expressionless voice.

Mr. Jay admitted that such was the case.

"Well," explained the constable "we're in search of a feller who's wanted up in Brummagem for a little lob o' 'ousebreakin'. From information received"—he coughed to emphasize the professional phrase—"we know he's in this district, and we are hinformed that a man answerin' to his description was seen a-comin' into your 'ouse yesterday afternoon."

Silas Jay turned pale as a horrible suspicion crossed his mind. With a quick movement he pressed the secret spring of his secretaire, and a sigh of unutterable relief escaped his lips as he beheld the precious bank notes lying safely within their ingenious hiding place. Then, closing the compartment, he turned abruptly to the constables, who were watching him in evident curiosity, and said:

"He promised to be here at eleven this morning, and it barely wants a quarter to that now."

Instantly the men were on their feet. "I wonder if he'll come?" said one. "If he does," replied the other, "we've got 'im, and then we're safe for a stripe or two."

Eluded.

Simultaneously they moved to the window and stood looking out down the gravel paths that skirted the lawn and across the tall gates that led on the road. As for Silas Jay he was too bewildered even to think coherently and sat, with his chin resting on his hands, staring straight before him. An exclamation from one of the constables roused him.

"Here 'e is!" exclaimed the man.

Mr. Jay leaped to his feet and ran to the window. At the same instant a man who had just turned in at the gate came to a standstill and glanced irresolutely in the direction of the house.

"You infernal fools!" exclaimed Mr. Jay, with all his old disgust for the police returning in full force. "The fellow has seen your confounded uniforms through the window and has taken the alarm!"

It certainly looked as if this was actually the case, for at that instant the man turned and swiftly retreated through the gates and out on to the road, where he was immediately lost to view behind the tall hedge which shut in the lawn. With a smothered oath, Silas Jay threw up the widow, and, climbing out as quickly as his age would allow, started in hot pursuit. One of the constables followed his example, and, being a younger man, soon outstripped Mr. Jay.

When the latter reached the gate and looked down the road he beheld the bogus detective far away in the distance, speeding along through a cloud of dust, mounted on a bicycle. He was getting up a good pace, and, upon seeing Mr. Jay, waved his hand in token of his determination to catch the now rapidly disappearing thief. When Mr. Jay returned to the house he found that the other policeman had taken himself off.

The next day he was so restless that he could bear the house no longer, so he determined, as there was nothing to hinder him from doing so, to take the hundred $500 notes into Windsor and there deposit them in one of the local banks. He touched the concealed spring of his secretaire and the secret compartment flew noiselessly open. And then, with a wild cry, he staggered back against the wall and fell in a heap upon the floor. The bank notes were gone!

As soon as he recovered he rushed into Windsor and wired to Scotland Yard, and the chief sent me down to investigate. Both detective and his confederates, the country constables, were unknown—in that capacity, at least—to the authorities. When I communicated this information to Mr. Silas Jay I thought he would have a fit.

"What are you going to do?" he asked.

"I am afraid," I said, "there is but little left for me to do. I have been to the bank, and find that, owing to the ridiculous discussion which took place, the manager, in handing you the notes, omitted the customary precaution of taking down their numbers. All we can do, therefore, is to endeavor to trace the criminals by means of their description. But this is a tedious process, and not always crowned with success."

He handed me the card which the bogus detective had given him.

"An alias, I suppose," I said. "And Walter Craft is not an inappropriate name for one of his calling."

A gleam of something like self-contempt shone in the old man's eyes.

"Scarcely as appropriate as my own," he exclaimed savagely, "for if any man richly deserves the name of Jay, I am certainly he!"

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

Happiness the Real Secret, Says One of the Stage's Prettiest Girls

"Being happy is the secret of being well, looking well and feeling well."

This is Miss Lois Josephine's recipe for obtaining and maintaining a beautiful face and figure.

Miss Lois Josephine in two poses.

"I AM determined to be happy," said Lois Josephine to me, smiling the while with the wistful sweetness that is the heritage of Irish blood. "I think that being happy is the secret of being well, and doing your work well, and looking well, and feeling well! Well, with all these wells to be acquired, my search for happiness is going to be untiring."

"Just how does one go about being happy—deliberately happy?" I asked. The blue-bird of happiness is an elusive-winged creature, and even when he is found at last at your own fireside he flies away as you clasp him in the welcoming circle of your hands.

"To be happy," answered Miss Josephine, with a tiny shadow of a smile that ought to lure happiness right to her side, never to depart, "to be happy, you like all the things you have to do, you trust your friends, you love all the beauty of nature around you—and you avoid unnecessary contact with tasks that you can not teach yourself to like. Oh, truly, I think that if you are happy you will be healthy and wealthy and wise and—and, yes, beautiful!"

Now, Miss Josephine is the Sunshine Girl in "The Passing Show of 1913" up at the Winter Garden in New York, and most charmingly does she and her partner, Wellington Cross, dispense gayety and sunshine as they dance their "joy of living" steps for you. Perhaps it is here that Miss Josephine found her inspiration to be a sunshiny girl in everyday life, but to be happy seems to me to be a most excellent way to acquire beauty.

Her Program.

"I am going to be so happy and contented with life that I will just naturally attract sunshine instead of shadow," went on the dainty girl whose picture delights you to-day. "I am going to be so pleased with my life and work that my expression can never be bitter or discontented, but instead must be sweet and friendly.

"Bitterness, discontent, envy, worry, anger, malice—I am going to banish them from my mind more and more earnestly as I get more and more power to pursue a search for happiness. If only girls knew what foes to beauty these evil feelings were they would all join me in a happiness hunt and get such sweet expressions that every one would be exclaiming: 'Well, I declare, if Mamie Jones isn't getting to be a beauty—she has the most attractive expression!' "

Suddenly Miss Josephine trilled out a merry laugh.

"Want to see one practical detail of my hunt for happiness? Well, I am making my feet happy, too! I wear flat-soled tennis shoes with buck instead of tennis soles, since rubber draws the feet, and so rest and relax the muscles and tendons of my feet. Narrow, tight, high-heeled shoes do not make your feet comfortable; they actually hurt your health, and they do great harm to the serenity of your face. You know the desperate expression you often see on the face of a girl whose shoes are too tight or are pitching her forward, with the strain coming heavily on already tired muscles. Well, an expression like that may carve its way in ugly lines right into a face. So I recommend making your feet happy if you want your face to look happy!

Ventral Courtesy.

"I am very polite to my digestion. I don't ask its overtaxed organs to handle heavy meats and rich sauces all through the hot summer. Instead, I eat vegetables and salads and the light meats, and give my system tonic food, instead of task food, in summer. An ideal summer program is to have meat on your dinner menu only two or three times a week. For instance: Chicken on Sunday, steak on Tuesday, lamb on Thursday, fish on Friday, and on the other three days try soup and a few extra vegetables for your dinner. Simple menus will give your 'digestery' a rested, happy feeling that will tell in a happy, rested-looking face.

"If you like it as well as I do, you will be delighted to drink three glasses of buttermilk during the day, and on rising and on retiring you will enjoy a bit of watercress with salt. Fine tonics for the system—both of these. Then to make your skin and muscles rejoice in the general prosperity, try a morning and evening rub with equal parts of alcohol and witch hazel. That will add a fine glow to the general beauty-dealing feeling of happiness you want to acquire. Oh, it is great fun working out a system whereby you will acquire happiness and all its attendant blessings of beauty and health and power to advance in the world."

As we left Miss Josephine's pretty home on a cross street, just west of Broadway, a friend called to the little blue linen-suited figure: "Hello, little bluebird!" And the bluebird is for happiness, you know.

LILIAN LAUFERTY.

Its Virtue.

President A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard, said at a dinner in his honor in Chicago:

"Early marriages are the best. It is neither good for the man nor for the community that he should wait until he is 28 years old before marrying."

President Lowell paused a moment and then smiling, he continued:

"Another trouble about late marriages is that the man's habits—his bad habits—are formed, and it's hard to break him of them. You know, perhaps, the story of the cigarette?

"A man of the old fashioned 'manly man' type—the soft, full-stomached type that drinks too much, belongs to too many lodges, and must be superior to woman in everything—this man took umbrage over his wife's cigarette, the one modest cigarette that she took after dinner, though he, of course, smoked like a chimney all day long. And so he said, one evening:

"'I believe you think more of that nasty, poisonous cigarette than you do of me, your husband.'

"'Well, dear,' his wife replied, smiling and blowing a cloud, 'I can keep my cigarette, you know, from going out.' " originality I had had the poor taste to employ a man, and that I was secretly ashamed of it."

"She told you that?" cried Mr. Gryce. "And you believed here? Humph!"

"She spoke the truth," asserted his companion—the gentleman whose name we purposely suppressed in the last chapter."

"You think so?"

"I do. There was something in her tone, whisper though it was, which brought conviction. I do not question her word in the least."

"Well, we will see; I did not hear her and so may be pardoned for having my doubts. I will talk with you again, sir. The play may not be worth the candle, and it may; a few days more will determine."

"And Molesworth?"

"Is very well as he is."

This conversation, fragmentary though it is, will show something of the stand which Mr. Gryce was taking in this matter. He had Molesworth under his eye and as good as under arrest, and yet he was not satisfied. Something—was it instinct or experience?—told him that this affair possessed complications of no ordinary nature, and that to a conscientious man like himself there were doubts to be solved and possibilities to be sounded, before he would dare proceed against the doctor as against a presumably guilty man.

But with the kindred remembrance of what the woman in Mrs. Olney's boarding house had said about Mildred Farley's frequent comings and goings with her great box, he did not consider it so foolish now, and only wished he had probed the subject deeper at the time. It was not so late yet, however, but that proper inquiries in the right places would settle the question as to whether these two girls were the same. He had only to pass a word or two with the complaisant butler at Mr. Gretorex's house, to learn enough to have the laugh, to say the least, on his somewhat credulous superior. To Mr. Gretorex's house he therefore went, and to Mr. Gretorex's butler he at once addressed himself.

He found this person quite ready to talk in his easy, French way.

The Butler.

"Zat girl? I—none of ze help know somezing bout zat girl, only Mees Gretorex always was at home when she come. A yell for ze face? Oui, so zick you no can see if she was black or white. But she was ver pretty—look good, Sacre! She walk good—proud like a comtesse. She no look at me. One time Pierre try, I try to speak wiz her. It was no good. If she was much deaf she do just so; for she look not to me, she look not to Pierre."

"You're right, Count," laughed a voice over their shoulders, "and one of us ain't a bad looking man, either."

It was Peter, who liked a bit of gossip as well as his neighbor, and who now came forward smiling.

"I feel ze compliment, M. Pierre, and it is ver much good for you to say so," retorted the "Count" with a grandiose bow. "It is ze opinion of ze ladies in ze house."

The butler then winked slyly at

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Mildred Farley was a dressmaker," this gentleman went on. "If you read the newspapers you know that, and also know that she worked hard at her duties for some weeks before her death. But what is very strange in her connection, and, together with some other reasons unnecessary to state here makes it difficult for the police to settle down to the belief that her death was the simple suicide it at first seemed, is that no one has succeeded in discovering for whom she worked, and to what home she carried the various dresses she finished in that time. For though it may not be material to know this, and may not help the affair forward one jot toward its rightful issue, yet because it is a mystery and an unsolved one, those whose business it is to see every doubtful case made clear, have sent me to this house to see if some light can not be thrown by you upon it."

He paused and looked at Genevieve. She at once raised her eyes and surveyed him steadily.

"You think, then, that I knew Mildred Farley?" was her question, clearly and coldly uttered.

At Loggerheads.

"Did you not?" he inquired.

Her lips broke into a smile. "Ask Dr. Cameron," she suggested, and seemed to think she had answered his question.

Their visitor glanced at the doctor, met only a dubious shake of the head, and continued in a more formal tone.

"If you did not know Miss Farley, it is strange she should have made the dresses of your trousseau, Mrs. Cameron."

"I don't understand you," was that lady's reply. "My dresses were made by any one but that girl. This I can assure you most positively, sir."

"You can. We are then brought round to my first question: who was it that did make your dresses, Mrs. Cameron?"

It was smilingly said, but it caused her to flush with great indignation.

"Is it necessary that I should tell you?" she somewhat haughtily inquired.

"If you do not, I cannot prevent certain people I know from thinking it was Mildred Farley."

"And why?" Dr. Cameron now broke in. "What reasons have they or any one to connect my wife with that poor unfortunate?"

"Only a very material one which I leave to Mrs. Cameron to explain. In the room of that dead girl were found scraps and ends of silk and velvet, which were preserved by the police as pieces of the goods she had been lately making up into dresses. Among these was a morsel of trimming—here it is—and as this trimming or some just like it was seen by chance upon a dress worn by Mrs. Cameron, it struck one of our agents that she was in all probability the lady who had profited by this poor girl's handiwork."

"The conclusion of a man!" exclaimed Mrs. Cameron, with chill sarcasm. "I suppose there are in this city to-day, twenty ladies with just that trimming on their gowns."

"And with this gray velvet for a dress? And this—I do not know how to call it—for another? And this soft white silk so suitable for a bride's adorning, and"——

"Enough, enough," cried Mrs. Cameron, putting up her hands merrily as a half dozen samples of various goods and colors fell in a shower into her lap. "I own to these, but I do not own to Mildred Farley. You waste your time; you will never find that she did any sewing for me, however she came into possession of these pieces." And with a half careless, half disdainful smile, she flirted the bits aside, looking so imperious and so charming, that for a moment her visitor seemed a trifle abashed and half rose as if to go. "You see if I had anything to tell, I would," she murmured, graciously. "But I have not. I cannot explain any more than you how these samples from my dresses should have been found where they were. I can only look at them and wonder. Is that enough, sir?"

"Hardly," his look seemed to say, but he rose. "And you will not tell me where your dresses were made?" he smiled.

She shook her head, laughed and rose with an arch air.

The Back Porch.

"It is a secret I have kept even from my husband, but if you must have it, you must. And rising on tiptoe with a look of merry defiance at the doctor, she whispered something in the visitor's ear.

He listened, stared at her a moment and broke into a genial laugh.

"And so this is your secret," he cried. "Well, I know how to respect the secrets of a lady when such respect does not interfere with my duty."

And with a gallant bow he took his leave, expressing the hope that he had not made his call to lengthy.

After he was gone Dr. Cameron turned to his wife.

"And what did you whisper in that big man's ear to calm him so suddenly?"

"Ah, you want to know my secret too," she laughed. "Well, I told him that the work which has been so much admired had been done by no woman. That in my vanity and desire for

Gryce, and satisfied that he had effectually discomfited the footman, proceeded to put questions to the detective as to his reasons for the interest he showed in this girl, which that functionary had wit and experience enough to successfully parry.

Peter helped him; for Peter was a rival of the butler's in more than one field, and in his good-natured way invariably took part against him in any controversy, and it was from Peter that Mr. Gryce finally got the acknowledgment that this young woman, or lady, as he persisted in calling her, usually wore a long, black ulster and made her appearance in the evening.

Now this was satisfactory. In the closet of Mildred Farley at Mrs. Olney's house there was a long, black ulster, and she, as we know, was accustomed to take her work home evenings.

"But she didn't have the ulster on the last time she came, oh, no," continued Peter. "I don't know what it was made the difference, but she looked foine. O, now! well I'm tellin' ye I wouldn't have known her at all, at all, but for her could brown veil and little handbag. Them wur the same as before and so was the air of her. Not a word nor the divil of a look for one of us; but being the night o' the wedding, she got out o' me head, for sure I had enough else to moind."

Her Handbag.

This last admission was a surprise, but Mr. Gryce was accustomed to surprises, so he kept quite still; the more so that he saw the butler was about to speak, and he always preferred to glean his facts through the questions of other people rather than his own.

"Zat girl here on Miss Gretorex's wedding night? I zink you was mistake, Pierre."

"Mistaken is it I am! when these two hands let her in meself at the back door. It wasn't only here she was, but it's helpin' Miss Gretorex to dress she was, and divil a minute she had to spare, aither, being just in the nick of time to be of any help at all, at all, to her. I didn't see her leave, though."

Mr. Gryce felt his interest cool. Reason told him how improbable it was that his person with all her mysteries, could have been the runaway bride of Julius Molesworth. Even if this house had not been miles distant from the C—— Hotel where he had himself seen her at 7 o'clock of that same night, the great improbability of her fleeing from her own nuptials to assist in this very humble capacity at those of another, was too manifest for his consideration even. Yet because habit was strong in him and habit forbade him to leave a subject till he had exhausted it, he put on a word which he thought must settle the matter.

WAR DECLARED BY P. A. A. OVER 1915 FAIR PLUM

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Aug. 7.—There is a flurry among the officials of the Pacific Athletic Association and in amateur athletic circles generally over the allegation that James E. Sullivan, director general of the amateur games to be held here during the Panama-Pacific Exposition, has appointed Thomas S. Mulvey, the well-known San Francisco clubman, his principal aide in connection with the handling of the exposition sports.

A few days ago Mulvey received a telegram from Sullivan, who was then on the point of departure to Berlin to attend a conference of the Olympiad committee.

In his telegram Sullivan said he would be back in New York early in September, and that it would be necessary for Mulvey to come to New York at that time to aid in interesting the athletic fraternities there in the games to be held in this city in 1915.

Elliott Issues Statement.

While the telegram intimated that Mulvey was appointed the head of the San Francisco committee on games, no reference was made to any other appointments of local men in the same connection.

The Pacific Association of the Amateur Athletic Association took umbrage at this indication of Mulvey's appointment, and John Elliott, president of the association, issued a statement yesterday in which he said that the selection of Mulvey to the post did not meet with the sanction of the association.

Elliott pointed out that the Pacific Association had given valuable assistance to the exposition officials in securing sanctions for American championships to be held here in 1915. He declared that Mulvey had no knowledge of or affiliation with amateur sports, and intimated that Mulvey's appointment would cause the association to refrain from using its endeavors toward making the 1915 games the success they should be.

Mulvey Has No News.

While Elliott did not say so it is evident that he and his associates expected Sullivan to depend upon the local athletic body for whatever assistance he required.

The Panama Exposition officials stated emphatically that no appointment such as the Pacific Association complained of had been made, nor had any such appointment been authorized by the exposition directorate, which, of course, is the last word in all matters of this kind.

Under these circumstances it is believed that the Pacific Association will take no precipitate action until a clearer understanding is had as to just what honor Sullivan intended to confer upon Mulvey. As Sullivan is on the high seas, it would be some little time before he could be heard from.

Mulvey said yesterday that he had no news regarding his appointment other than was conveyed in the Sullivan telegram. He said he intended going East, but will wait to hear further before making the trip.

GIANTS CAN GET KONEY IF MATTY IS IN THE DEAL

ST. LOUIS, MO., Aug. 7.—If the Giants will part with Christy Mathewson and Fred Merkle, then McGraw can have Ed Koney from the Cardinals!

From New York Thursday came a report that the Giants were dickering with the Cardinals for another swap, and that McGraw had offered Southpaw Wiltse and First Baseman Fred Merkle for the "Big Train."

Considering that Wiltse is fading and fading fast, and that Koney easily outclasses Merkle, the cards would run second on such an exchange, and the truth of such a transaction was asked of President Britton.

"If McGraw will make it Mathewson and Merkle instead of Wiltse and Merkle then I will O. K. the trade," said President Britton. "But Wiltse and Merkle, no."

Then the Cards' Prexy smiled and puffed his perfecto and continued:

"Yes, that's what I mean, Matty and Merkle. Matty must be in the deal. Anybody but Matty and there's nothing doing with us for Ed Koney."

"But don't you know, Mr. Britton, that McGraw never would consent to trade Mathewson?" was put to the Cards' chief.

"Why, certainly I know it, and that's just why I name Matty in a deal with the Giants for Koney," flashed back Britton. "After we took Crandall instead of Wiltse for McLean, I offered to buy Wiltse from the Giants, but McGraw said he did not want money, but was after players.

"We're after players to strengthen our club, too. We are trying to get the youngsters, and are willing to make a trade where we have an edge, but it's a cinch that we're not going to pass out anything like Koney for Merkle and Wiltse."

CLOTHIER WILL BATTLE TOUCHARD IN FINALS

SOUTHAMPTON, N. Y., Aug. 17.—William J. Clothier, of Philadelphia, and Gustav F. Touchard, of New York, will meet in the final round of the men's singles in the Meadow Club invitation tournament here this afternoon.

J. S. Strachan and C. J. Griffin, holders of the Western doubles championship, will play Thomas C. Bundy and William Johnson, the other California pair, in the semi-final rounds of the doubles this afternoon. The winners will then oppose W. F. Larned and W. J. Clothier in the finals.

PHILLIES SECURE INDIAN.

SHERMAN, TEXAS, Aug. 17.—An announcement was made here today at the Sherman (Texas-Oklahoma) league that Ben Tincup, a pitcher, has been sold to the Philadelphia Nationals for $1,500. Tincup, who is an Indian, will report to the Philadelphia club August 20.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Frank Whitney left last night for New York where he will try to get on with Young Shugrue or some other star lightweight. Before he left, Whitney had nothing but praise for Charley White and is looking for the Chicago boy to be the next lightweight champion. Whitney is also anxious to return here for some more bouts.

• • •

Ad Wolgast, former lightweight champion, signed articles yesterday to meet Joe Azvedeo, the Sacramento lightweight, in a ten-round go at Oakland, Cal., on Labor Day.

• • •

Charley Eyton has been selected to referee the Leach Cross-Joe Rivers scrap at Los Angeles on Labor Day. Rivers and Cross will start work for the bout next week.

• • •

Young Shugrue and Joe Hyland will clash in a ten-round engagement at New York to-night. Both boys will weigh in at 135 pounds ringside.

• • •

Willie Schaefer, Packey McFarland's sparring partner, was matched yesterday to box Dick Woods at Plattesville, Ill., on Tuesday night. They are scheduled to go ten rounds at 142 pounds.

• • •

Billy Walters, Chicago welterweight, will don the padded mitts with Young Denny in a ten-round set-to at New Orleans. Denny is a great card in the Pelican City, where he put up a great battle with "Wildcat" Ferns.

• • •

Steve Ketchel will travel to Denver, Col., on September 15 where he is to mingle with Eddie Johnson. This contest is scheduled to take place during "State Fair Week" and the fighters will go twenty rounds, weight to be 133 pounds at 3 o'clock.

• • •

Coast fans are looking for Ad Wolgast to hand Johnny Dundee a neat lacing when the pair get together at Los Angeles on September 9. Ad has promised to train for this match, as he is anxious to get on with Willie Ritchie in a title match.

• • •

Eddie Menney will exchange taps with Frankie Conley, the veteran bantamweight, in a fifteen-round engagement at St. Joseph, Mo., on Labor Day. This will be Conley's first fight in six months.

• • •

Jack White threatens to quit the boxing game. Jack is discouraged over his recent defeat at the hands of Johnny Dundee and wants to get away from the game.

• • •

Jimmy Grant, who fought several bouts here, left yesterday for his home in Chicago. Jimmy expects to return later in an effort to get on with Charley Lee, Kid Young and Spider Britt.

• • •

Terry Nelson is walking the streets with a broad smile these days. His knock-out victory over Mike Saul has placed a chip on his shoulders. Nelson says he would like nothing better than to box Eddie Hanlon again, providing the latter will make 138 pounds at 3 o'clock for a night fight.

• • •

Word has reached here from Los Angeles, Cal., to the effect that Phil Cross will have to take part in three semi-final bouts to star attractions before he will get the chance to appear in a main event and prove that he is a good welterweight.

BRAVES GET FOUR PLAYERS.

BOSTON, Aug. 17.—The Boston Nationals have secured four additional new men toward strengthening the team for next season. Two are infielders and two are outfielders. The infielders are Vigas, second baseman of the Waco (Texas League) club, and McCloskey, a third baseman of the Albany (Ga.) club, of the South Atlantic League. From the Dallas club the Boston Braves have secured two outfielders, Wilson and Tincan, both now batting better than .300.

RED SOX GET OUTFIELDER.

BOSTON, MASS., Aug. —The Boston American League team announced yesterday the purchase of [illegible] Wales from the Worcester team of the New England League.

Meddling Has Ruined Red Sox

Stallings Is Popular in Boston

By W. J. McBeth.

THERE is little comfort in a reputation to the fellow who has lost his punch. This ring chatter applies directly to baseball. A pugilist may get away by sidestepping action, but organized baseball requires 154 tilts every year.

The Boston Red Sox furnishes a very fine object lesson for the point in question. One year ago the staid old "Hub" was wild with enthusiasm over its pets of a generation. To dispute that the "Speed Boys" boasted the classiest aggregation in modern times was the shortest route to suicide. To-day, though a world's championship has been added to the achievements of the Back Bay athletes, the pennant winners are the scorn of the City of Culture.

The answer lies for the most part in four agate lines—which represent the difference between first and fifth places in the American League standings. Boston's National League team which saw many lean and hungry years, while its rival lived upon the fat of the land, has usurped the popularity of its fading contemporary. The Red Sox in their company have shown the better percentage of victories. But still their work has slopped off so badly from what was expected of the holders of baseball's highest honors that in comparison to the improvement made by the Braves the Red Sox appear in the light of the veriest "bush" class.

Boston, like every other town, has little use for a team that has hit the chutes, while always ready to extend a hand of encouragement to a club that stems on the upward trend.

• • •

IN gaining a few rounds on the ladder from the cellar George Stallings' Braves have accomplished a task that well might be considered more wonderful than cinching a second American League pennant with the champions. Baseball fandom is clever enough to appreciate the point and pay tribute where tribute is due. But the Boston situation of the American League furnishes a moral which many of our meddling promoters might well take to heart. One thing is to leave good enough alone; another that it is far easier to destroy a finely attuned mechanism than to overhaul and rebuild it.

• • •

EVERYBODY said a year ago that the Boston Red Sox were the luckiest world's champions known to history. Perhaps they were, but they certainly had some class to get in the finals. Moreover, they went through a long campaign without dropping more than two games in a row till the pennant was cinched. The club looked anything but impressive in the world's series. But was it altogether the fault of the club?

I honestly believe, in the light of later developments, that if the real inside truth were known President James McAleer had a lot to do both with the poor showing of that team against the Giants and in the 1913 race so far this season. Jake Stahl, deposed from the management in mid-season, may have been left unhampered this season as McAleer insinuated, but he certainly did not have a free hand against the Giants last fall. He was girt about by a so-called bond of strategy. These many cooks came very near to scorching the broth.

While the Red Sox were setting themselves, Jake Stahl and, incidentally, McAleer on the high pedestal where the bump incident to this year's fall should be all the more pronounced, somebody put a stick of [illegible] under the foundation. In the height of battle a serious row cropped out among certain players. As is usually the case, factions resulted. The unity of the team was undermined. The big explosion [illegible] the poor start of 1913 consequent to wholesome injuries and sickness.

McAleer may not have directly interfered with Stahl. Yet the inference is there pretty strong. Jimmy looked like an ideal president when everything was of rosy hue. But once a manager always a manager. We see that in the attitudes of some of our renowned scouts. The cunning hand of McAleer might be traced in the present dilemma of his noble country.

AT least McAleer, or his associates in the business administration of the club, deserve little sympathy for the cold desertion of Hub fandom. They brought it upon themselves by a cold throw down of their most loyal supporters. The band of "Royal Rooters" which had accompanied the team to and fro between New York and Boston were not provided with seats for the seventh game. The business management was unable to explain satisfactorily this shameful oversight; naturally the rooters took it as an insult, believing they had been "given the works" simply through avarice of the management.

"It is the last game and they think standing room good enough for us" was the universal sentiment. The rooters put a boycott on the eighth and deciding game. Also they gathered round the offices at the close of the contest when they were slighted to put the curse on Fenway Park, Red Sox and all connected with them. By the looks of things it was some curse.

PITCHER GEORGE MULLIN JUMPS THE MONTREAL CLUB

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—George Mullin, the former Detroit pitcher who was recently sent to the Montreal club by Hugh Jennings, is among the missing. Mullin pitched a few games for the Royals and then was told to sit on the bench. He became peeved, it is said, and the other day, after vainly asking for a turn in the box, he disappeared.

Owner Lichenheim, of the Montreal club, who by the way is trying to sell the release of Left Fielder Gilhooley to a prominent major league magnate, has instituted a search for Mullin to no purpose. It is believed that the former Detroit star has joined a semi-pro team under an assumed name at the invitation of a wealthy baseball fan who is backing the venture.

HARRY SMITH LIKELY TO MANAGE BROOKLYN

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—Harry Smith, manager of the Newark team of the International League, which is believed to be a sure pennant winner this year, may succeed William Dahlen as manager of the Brooklyns at the end of the present season.

At least this is the story circulated by insiders who know what is going on behind closed doors at Ebbets Field. The Brooklyn and Newark clubs are owned outright by Charles H. Ebbets, Stephen W. McKeever, Edward J. McKeever, Henry W. Medicus and others. The failure of the Dodgers and the wonderful success of the Indians have prompted deep thought among the owners of those teams.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

By defeating the Cardinals the Giants made it three straight, but they had to do so in order to hold their distance ahead of the Phillies, who are going strong. By beating the Reds the Phillies likewise made it three straight. Brooklyn and Pittsburg went fourteen innings to a tie. The Cubs came away from Boston with another victory.

• • •

The Eastern teams in the American League won on Western fields yesterday with the exception of the Yankees, who were beaten by the White Sox. The Athletics took revenge in Cleveland, while the Senators landed a free scoring contest in Detroit. The Red Sox grabbed a light scoring contest in St. Louis.

• • •

Pitcher Walter Johnson, of the Washington Senators, now holds the season record for victories.

• • •

The first eight innings of the Pittsburg-Brooklyn game were played in one hour and seven minutes.

• • •

Mike Donlin, formerly of the Giants and the Pirates, may join the Yankees. It is understood that overtures have been made to Donlin since he was unconditionally released by the Phillies this week.

• • •

The Chicago Cubs have purchased Heath Allison, an outfielder, from the Cadillac, Mich., club. Allison has a batting average of .340. He will not report until next season.

• • •

Old "Cy" Seymour was a visitor at the Polo grounds yesterday to see Miller Huggins, manager of the St. Louis Cardinals, in an effort to land some kind of a berth. Huggins told the veteran that nothing is open now. Although Seymour is well to do the game still lures him.

Harry Spore, a young southpaw pitcher from Crestline, Ohio, has been signed by the Athletics.

Pruritis a Severe Form of Eczema

A Method of Home Treatment that is Very Effective.

There is probably no other remedy so well known as S. S. S. for the blood. And it is remarkably effective in that form of skin disease known as pruritis, or intense itching. The action of S. S. S. is rapid. It contains one ingredient, the active purpose of which is to stimulate the tissues to the healthy selection of its own essential nutriment. And the medical elements of this matchless blood purifier are just as essential to well-balanced health as the nutritious elements of the meats, grains, fats and sugars of our daily food. These facts are brought out in a highly interesting book on skin diseases, compiled by the medical department of the Swift Specific Co., 184 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. It is mailed free, together with a special letter of advice, to all who are struggling with a blood disease.

Get a bottle of S. S. S. to-day of your druggist. It will surprise you with its wonderful action in the blood.

Don't accept something offered you as "just as good." The only reason why anyone should not try to sell you S. S. S. is the large profit made on something cheaper from crude drugs. Beware of any attempt to persuade you to buy something in place of S. S. S.

NAP LAJOIE HAS FANNED EIGHT TIMES THIS SEASON

CLEVELAND, OHIO, Aug. 18.—Nap Lajoie has struck out but eight times this season. Keating, of New York, has turned the trick three times, Baumgardner, Bush, Willett, Mosely and Dauss once each. No Chicago nor Washington pitcher has been able to fan him.

NO INTERFERENCE IN DILLON-BROWN CLASH

TERRE HAUTE, IND., Aug. 17.—The Central Labor Union committee has asked Chief of Police Fasig to prevent the Jack Dillon-George (Knockout) Brown Labor Day bout. The committee was told by the chief he could not interfere.

From Chicago comes the word that Brown and Dillon are in great shape, which means a corking match awaits the public here.

HOME-RUN BAKER ONCE PLAYED FOR $5 A WEEK

J. FRANKLIN BAKER, whose mighty wallops won the world's series for the Athletics from the Giants in 1911, has few, if any, peers as a third baseman. He is one cog, and a main one, in the workings of the $100,000 infield of the Athletics.

The strangest part of his advent into professional baseball and his early development is that it was one of the Giants, "Charley" Herzog, who virtually discovered him and guided him in his early training. It was also Herzog who made a third baseman out of him. Baker's story follows::

"'Charley' Herzog, of the Giants, it was who virtually discovered me and made me a third baseman. I owe my early training to him. Possibly I should never have become a professional baseball player if it had not been for Herzog and a man named Preston Day.

"I was playing ball on an amateur team in Trappe, Md., where I was born, with little idea of adopting baseball as a profession. I liked the game and played it continually during the season.

Offered $5 Per Week.

"At Ridgley, Md., they supported a semi-professional ball club. This Mr. Day happened to see me play in two or three games and recommended me to Herzog, who was then managing the Ridgley team.

"Herzog sent for me. He offered me $5 a week and my board. That $5 sounded like a million to me. That was in 1908, and I was 19 years old.

"When I joined Ridgley I was an outfielder. Like most youngsters, I had played every position on a team, but generally cavorted about the outfield.

"At Ridgley Herzog watched me play, and decided that I was better fitted to play the infield.

"At that time he was playing shortstop and he needed a third baseman, so I was given the place. I finished the season there, and the following year joined the Cambridge (Md.) team.

"During the spring of 1908 I was given a trial with the Reading (Tri-State League) club, and after playing there through the months of May and June I was purchased by the Athletics, but was permitted to finish the Tri-State League season with Reading.

Had Plenty of Nerve.

"If you remember correctly, I joined the Athletics on September 1 at Chicago. I arrived there in the morning. Up to that time I had never met Connie Mack, but I deemed myself a big leaguer, and breezed into the hotel without the least temerity.

"I presented myself to the manager, and that afternoon was played at third base. I have been at third ever since.

"When I first joined the Athletics I was, of course, possessed of a certain amount of natural ability.

"My experience with Herzog and later with the other two professional clubs that I played with stood me in good stead, but when I bumped into the American League, I discovered that I did not know nearly as much baseball as I thought I did.

"There is a great deal more to baseball than just fielding and hitting the ball.

"Those are the essentials, but it is just like any other business—there are many other things that a fellow must master before he can hope to compete successfully against the seasoned players.

"Baseball as it is played in the big leagues to-day, is a complicated game—much more complicated than it may appear from the stands. There is a reason for every move that is made. Of course, there is some haphazard, take-a-chance playing.

"There is in every line of endeavor, but even in these instances the chance are taken with a well-defined purpose, and the chances are not, as a usual thing, taken individually.

"By that I mean a team in major league baseball must work in unison.

"The batter must know what the base runner is going to do; the base runner must know what the batter is going to do; the fielders must know what the pitcher is going to do, and the players must make a study of the weaknesses of one another.

"Not alone is it necessary for the pitchers and catchers to study the different batters, but the rest of the players must study them. It all helps in the winning of games."

TESREAU HAS BEEN ON SLAB IN MANY GAMES

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—John McGraw had called on Jeff Tesreau oftener to start battles this year than any other member of the Giants' pitching staff. Up to August 12 the "Little Napoleon" had given the pitching assignment to the big spitballer 28 times. Jeff only went the route on ten occasions, but on many of the times he was derricked he was lifted to allow a pinch hitter to be inserted into the proceedings, and not because he was not performing to the satisfaction of his commander.

* * *

WERE Hugh Chalmers, of Detroit, to offer a car to the National League pitcher who twirled the greatest number of complete games instead to the player who is most valuable to his team, Christy Mathewson undoubtedly would be riding around in a new auto next fall. "Big Six" has opened on the firing line in 22 skirmishes for the Giants this year and has lasted through 17 engagements, which gives him a finishing average of .773. Matty quit twice because he had to, twice because his team had an enormous lead and once because McGraw wished to shove Harry McCormick in as a pinch hitter.

* * *

THE club that has compelled Mathewson to retire under fire is St. Louis, the team that handed him his first beating twelve years ago, when he first became famous. The Cardinals ought to be proud of themselves for their showing against "Big Six" this year. They have received five of the thirteen passes Matty has issued this season, Ed Konetchy and Miller Huggins each obtaining two and Steve Evans one. The eight other National Leaguers who have been honored with complimentaries by Mathewson this season are Vlox and Mensor, of Pittsburg; Bates and Groh, of Cincinnati; Zimmerman, of Chicago, and Titus, Rariden and Maranville, of Boston.

Sports and Such

FAMOUS IN SPORT.—VI.

The America Cup.

SINCE IT IS WORTH ONLY about $100 and is a half-century old we can not give much space to this junk; for this is a live, up-to-date column.

Briefly, the America Cup was won by the yacht America and has since been successfully defended by the ablest body of international law experts in this country. As even under the Deed of Gift (see below) it is faintly possible that a challenger might accidentally get a look-in,' it is the duty of these experts to make water contests impossible.

Designed to foster interest in yachting, the America Cup has thus promoted some of the noblest contests in word-twisting, haggling and skullduggery of which any record is preserved. It also keeps the New York Yacht Club on the map of international sport, which is, however, a service of doubtful value.

The America Cup, furthermore, gives wealthy Britons something to think about. On half a dozen occasions they have had legal talent enough to force the shifting of the contest from the postoffice to the ocean. On such occasions it has sometimes been the custom of the American boat to sneak off in the night and make beneficial changes, thus causing Englishmen to rage, at which every true patriot should always exult.

The chief defense of the Cup is, however, the Deed of Gift, hereinbefore mentioned. When this document is well oiled and in its best form any Englishman who could lift the Cup in a year would make light of lifting the crown jewels any afternoon off.

If any reader contemplates staking us to a bank roll, we earnestly request that he will hand us a Deed of Gift along with it, as we would then cease to feel nervous about our old age.

MANY CATCHERS GET INJURED BY MIXED SIGNALS

By Otto C. Floto.

DENVER, Aug. 1.—Nothing breaks up a battery so fast as double-crossing the catcher. Mind, we do not mean to say this is intentionally done—but through carelessness or through not getting the signal correct, it happens in some of the most important games. And when it does—well, the opposition has the "shade" from that time forth. In Chicago recently, during a conversation between John McGraw and the writer, the Grand Mandarin of the Giants told us of an incident when even the great Mathewson was at fault in this sort of play.

"Meyers is naturally dark," said McGraw. "When he becomes tanned in the summer time he is darker than ever and quite naturally when he places his finger on the palm of the soiled glove it takes quite an eye to distinguish whether he has one or two fingers pointed to the ground. Oftentimes one finger means a straight fast ball and then again it means a curve, and vice versa. Mathewson, in one of the games against St. Louis, got his signals mixed and pitched a curve when Meyers was looking for a straight fast one. The result was that the ball not only got away from the Indian, but came near tearing his finger off. Of course, I immediately took him out of the game, because I knew he would be rattled from that time forth. The next day he was steadied again and the incident forgotten.

* * *

ANOTHER time while with Baltimore, Joe Corbett double-crossed Robinson and lost a game for us. Of course, the double-crossing is unintentional on the part of the pitcher, and it occurs only when the catcher and the pitcher get mixed in the signals and don't ask each other for a repetition of the same. If they did this no error would be made. In the big leagues when this tangle occurs the players think nothing of it. But I have seen in the smaller leagues, when the battery gets mixed the catcher, generally a youngster trying to make his reputation, seems to labor under the impression that the pitcher is 'trying to show him up,' and it often creates hard feelings on a team."

* * *

REFERRING again to the honesty of the game, we need nothing better to point to than the leaders of the National and American Leagues. Both the Giants and the Athletics have spoiled the race. They are so far ahead of all the other clubs that even at this early day of August 4 interest is eliminated. It means several hundred thousand dollars to the club owners to have a condition of this sort exist. Yet they would rather have it this way and lose thousands of dollars than "frame" and kill the sport.

What if Boston and the Athletics in the American League were neck-and-neck and battling for every game—well, the grounds in either city would not be large enough to hold the crowds. In the National League, what if New York and Chicago were abreast—it would simply mean all records for attendance would be shattered.

NO GAME—NO KALE.

The baseball magnate wept,
His soul was sad and sore;
While breezes through the turnstile crept,
And nothing more.

His joy in life had fled,
His hope had flown away,

"No game to-day."

BASE RUNNERS ARE HINDERED BY FOUL HITS

By Sam Crane.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—During the recent series of games the Yankees played against their Western rivals at the Polo Grounds, I noticed that it was the invariable custom of the Yankees in particular, and also with some of the Western teams, for the man at bat, whether the runner on first got a good lead or not, to foul off the ball even if he had to throw his bat at the horsehide.

Giants Use Other Tactics.

Sweeney never once that I can remember failed to foul the ball or to try to do so, whenever a runner, no matter who it was, dashed off on a pilfer occasion.

The system seemed to be so generally prevalent among American League teams that I begun to think that it was an established rule by all the club managers.

With the Giants, Manager McGraw follows an exactly opposite plan and as a result the National League champions have in nearly every year McGraw has had them in charge led all their rivals in team base running.

It is possible that Manager Chance, knowing that he has not a fast lot of players, has ordered his batters to save his base runners at every opportunity, but at that the plan looks very cheesy and surely tends to eliminate more or less one of the prettiest points of baseball. It looks ridiculous to see a good base runner, after getting a big lead, to have his good judgment and commendable ambition squashed by some "bonehead" at bat purposely fouling off the ball.

Kills Chance of Runner.

What possible chance has a speedy man on the bases to show results if he is constantly made to come back to first, winded and chagrined? Not a chance on earth.

And still the Yanks followed what appeared to me asinine methods continuously.

The Clevelands, too, followed that scheme little less frequently than the Yanks, the veteran Lajoie being foremost in doing it.

Naps Waste Many Runs.

When Clark Griffith was manager of the Yankees he often said to me.

"The Clevelands waste more opportunities to make runs than any other team in the business, and they have one of the best batting teams in the country, and more Naps reach first base than any other team in the American League."

Now, why was that?

Nothing can be plainer. They simply prevented their runners from stealing bases, and instead of playing for the "hit and run" and hitting behind the runner and doing other inside batting, they kept "fouling' em off" with the ridiculous idea imbedded in their noddles to "save" the base stealers at all hazards. And Lajoie has never played on a championship club.

The batter wastes a strike every time he makes an intentional foul, and there are not so very many batters in the business who do not require all the swipes that are coming to them. Why, it is just a pitcher's "pie" to have any batter throw away a strike or two.

Manchester Wins Popularity Race

To Receive Handsome Loving Cup

FINAL STANDING.

Dick Manchester, Americus	9,860
Otto Jordan, Valdosta	9,010
"Goat" Holiday, Waycross	8,894
"Pat" Murphy, Thomasville	8,661
H. Champlin, Thomasville	8,402
Dudley, Thomasville	7,782
B. Wilder, Cordele	7,120
Frank, Valdosta	6,620
W. Morse, Valdosta	6,550
M. Gray, Cordele	5,462
Rube Zellers, Valdosta	4,921
H. Clark, Waycross	3,290
H. Griffin, Americus	3,075
W. Waller, Brunswick	3,280
C. Eubanks, Cordele	2,780

DICK MANCHESTER, the Americus catcher, is the most popular player in the Empire State League. All over the circuit Manchester is the most admired player.

After one of the closest contests ever staged, Manchester came out on top in the Hearst's Sunday American and Atlanta Georgian's contest to decide the most popular player in the Empire State League.

For winning this great honor Manchester will receive a beautiful loving cup to be donated by this paper. The presentation will be made by the Mayor of Americus on the last day of the season. However, in winning this great race Manchester was given the hottest sort of a fight. No less than five players have been struggling for the top rung of the ladder since the race was inaugurated.

Players in Hot Struggle.

In fact, several players have held first place as long as the Americus catcher, and deserve much credit for the hot battle their admirers put up for them. Otto Jordan, the Valdosta manager; "Goat" Holliday, the Waycross first sacker; "Pat" Murphy, of Thomasville, and H. Champlin, also of Thomasville, were very much in the race at all times.

Many times it appeared that Jordan was sure to cop the big prize. He darted out into the lead the first day of the race and set the pace for several days. Later Holliday caught him and went to the front. "Pat" Murphy was also an early player to romp out in the lead.

During the early stages of the race Manchester hung back. It seemed as if his followers were waiting to see just how strong these players were. Finally they hit their stride, and a real battle was on. Five players fought tooth and nail with but a few hundred votes separating the quintet. At one time but 140 votes divided the first four.

Fans Support Manchester.

As soon as one player made an attempt to leave the field, his opponents were at once after him. This made the Baseball Popularity editor think that several fans were holding out votes. About two weeks before the close of the race, Manchester for the first time shot out in front. And, from then on, his followers showed their real colors. Only twice did they leave another player set the pace for him. Both times Dick lost the lead for but a couple of days.

During the last week of the race, Manchester set the pace, despite the hundreds of votes that were pouring in for his opponents. Murphy, Holliday and Champlin put up a wonderful fight, and it was on the final day of the race that one fan sent in 1,500 votes for Holliday. Had he a couple more admirers of this kind he would be to-day hailed as the big idol of the Empire State League.

Thomasville Fans Lauded.

Thomasville fans should be lauded to the sky for the great support given to their players. Three players were nominated from this city, and all of them are right near the top. Murphy, H. Champlin and Dudley were all contestants from Thomasville. This city is surely the banner town of the circuit.

However, it's hats off to Manchester. He is to-day the big man of the Empire State League. The Hearst Sunday American and Atlanta Georgian started this contest to find out the most popular player in the Empire State League, and thanks for the fans for the great support they have given the players. It has been without doubt the greatest contest of its kind.

LIND STANDS PAT AFTER HUERTA GETS NOTE

Special Envoy Reports Reply Is Expected Soon--Mexican Press — Denounces Dr. Hale.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 17.—Having taken a first definite step in the fulfillment of his mission here by getting President Wilson's note into the hands of the Mexican Government through the United States Embassy, John Lind, Special Envoy from the United States, to-day awaited a reply from either President Huerta or Foreign Minister Gamboa. The next move is to be made by the Mexican Government. Mr. Lind is said to have reported satisfactory progress.

Rumors prevail here that the Government may try to deport Dr. W. Bayard Hale, special investigator of the State Department, because of the nature of certain information he is reported to have sent to Washington.

The Mexican press has criticised Dr. Hale severely on his Mexican mission. One paper went so far as to accuse him of saying Mexico was to become a territory under the dominion of the United States.

Dr. Hale has been in almost constant communication with Mr. Lind since the latter's arrival, being under instructions from the State Department to turn over to Special Envoy all information in his possession relating to Mexican political affairs.

No confirmation could be obtained of the rumor that President Huerta is contemplating resigning in order to perfect his political organization so that he could be sure of election to the presidency in October.

Feeling of Relief Obtains in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—Another milestone in Envoy Lind's mission to Mexico, the transmission of the American program to President Huerta, has been passed, and there is a distinct feeling of relief in Administration circles to-day.

No word has been received from Lind regarding his interview with Frederico Gamboa, Mexican Minister of Foreign Affairs, yesterday, but a detailed report is expected soon.

Washington believes Lind has succeeded in conveying the American proposals to Huerta in so diplomatic and friendly a manner that the latter can not object to them abruptly.

Women Hurt When Auto Turns Turtle

DURHAM, N. C., Aug. 17.—Mrs. Eugene Bullock and Miss Bessie Bullock are in serious condition at Home Stem, near this city, as the result of an automobile turning turtle. William Whitaker, the other occupant of the machine, escaped without serious injury.

Both women are well known in the State. They were returning from Buffalo Springs.

Graft Charged to Justice of Peace In Chatham Court

SAVANNAH, Aug. 17.—Charges have been preferred by the Grand Jury against A. H. Lane, Justice of the Peace. The Solicitor General has been instructed to prepare an indictment and have a copy of it served on Justice Lane before the next meeting of the jury.

The charges grow out of the alleged practice by the justice of ordering judgments in cases in which he had a pecuniary interest. It is charged that Lane had entered into agreements with clients, under which he was to get half of the amount collected in addition to his fees.

The jury is also investigating the activities of money lenders, the law in regard to whom has been a dead letter on the statute books for eleven years in Chatham County.

Wisconsin to Begin Sterilizing 'Unfit'

MADISON, WIS., Aug. 17.—The State Board of Control of Wisconsin, which has the management of the State charitable, penal and reformatory institutions, is receiving a large number of inquiries from relatives and friends of criminal insane, feeble-minded and epileptic persons regarding the provisions of the new law providing for the sterilization of such degenerates.

The Board of Control is the judge as to the advisability of sterilizing any degenerate in the public charge, and there is no appeal from its decision.

The board intends to begin with the female degenerates and later take up the males. Several hundred female degenerates will be sterilized this year.

Mars Bride's Fatal Beauty With Razor

CHICAGO, Aug. 17.—No more will Mrs. Michael Raymond, eighteen years old, be led into trouble by her beauty. Her winning face captivated two husbands, but each had quit her because she could not help attracting every man who saw her.

To-day she occupied a cot at Columbus Hospital. Doctors said she might not recover. Her face, neck and body were slashed in more than a dozen places.

Raymond heard other men were paying attention to his wife. When he returned home last evening, he kissed her as usual, then drew a razor and cut her. He fled.

Colors Sway City's Morals, Says Judge

CHICAGO, Aug. 17.—Solors have a psychological effect on the morals of a community, asserts Municipal Judge Mahoney. He declares that light colors tend toward godliness and that dark colors promote crime.

"Brightness leads to right thinking," says Judge Mahoney. "Darkness and uncleanliness lead to crooked thinking. This is an axiom as old as the Bible. I am glad to see so many white buildings going up in Chicago. They reflect the light and have a stronger psychological effect on the population than is usually imagined. The smoke nuisance which covers the building with dark soot is an aid to crime."

One of Family of Slayers Is Suicide

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 17.—James McLaughlin's career ended to-day when he set fire to the home of his mother as she slept and ran a mile to the Mississippi River, where he leaped in and was drowned. He was arrested several years ago for murder. His sister, Mamie McLaughlin, killed Hugh Smith, a merchant. A brother of McLaughlin recently was arrested charged with killing his wife.

McLaughlin's mother was saved from her burning house.

'Free Spender' Out Of Asylum a Day

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—Edward Stewart, once well known in Broadway as a lavish spender and who has been confined in the State Asylum for Insane at Center Islip, escaped from that institution to-day and for one whole day he lived over again the former life that eventually landed him in the asylum.

He cashed a check and was spending money freely when he was recognized by some former acquaintances who notified the authorities.

Analysis Tags on Fertilizer Required

Failure of a shiper to affix tax tags to fertilizer would not vitiate the sale, while the absence of a tag showing the analysis would, according to a decision of the Court of Appeals in the case of Hillis vs. Comer.

EXPULSION PERIL NEAR SOLON IN LOBBY QUIZ

McDermott, Chicago Congressman, Accused in Connection With Loan Shark Legislation.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—Started by the testimony of T. H. McMichael, former chief page of the House, concerning the official conduct of Representative James T. McDermott, of Illinois, the House Lobby Investigating Committee has decided, it is said, to make a preliminary report on McDermott to the House at the earliest possible opportunity.

This report will be separate from the committee's proposed general report on the subject of lobbying, and when it is presented it will be in order for any member of the House to move for McDermott's expulsion. If such a motion is made, it will be necessary for the House to vote directly on the question. According to the rules, a two-thirds vote of the membership is necessary to expulsion.

Loan Sharks Raise Funds.

Whether such action will be taken depends largely on the testimony of four pawnbrokers of the District of Columbia, who now are under subpena by the committee. These pawnbrokers, according to McMichael, raised a fund to defeat the District loan shark bill which passed Congress some time ago.

McMichael testified that McDermott made a trip to the Hotel Navarre, New York City, and there he says he learned the money, or part of it, was turned over to McDermott. McMichael admitted he never saw a cent of the alleged fund.

It was learned to-day that members of the committee believe this phase of McMichael's testimony is the most serious matter they have yet disclosed and constitutes a direct accusation of bribery. Future testimony, they admitted, might entirely disprove this.

Searchlight on McDermott.

Acting on this theory, the general investigation of lobbies which they have been conducting was to-day turned entirely into an investigation of McDermott's persoal conduct.

"Did McDermott vote for what the pawnbrokers wanted?" McMichael was asked.

"I don't know how he voted."

McDermott put about $5,000 into an airship promotion scheme. Whether he lost it or not McMichael did not know, but he knew that he, McMichael, lost $500 of his own money.

"When did McDermott tell you he got $7,500 from the pawnbrokers in connection with the loan shark bill?"

"After the loan shark bill became a law."

"What did he say?"

"Well, it was like this: I said, 'Well, the bill has passed;' he said, 'Well, I got mine;' I said, 'How much did you really get out of it?' he said, 'About $7,500.'"

McMichael said that McDermott has talked to him several times about getting $7,500 from the pawnbrokers.

The committee may go into a report of a liquor lobby raising corruption funds to defeat the reforms proposed during the close of the Cannon regime, which precipitated the so-called rules fight.

Hart Sworn in as State Tax Assessor

In the presence of Governor Slaton, Randolph Anderson, President of the Senate, and Justice Beverly Evans, of the Supreme Court, Judge John C. Hart Saturday morning took the oath of office as State Tax Assessor, created by the Legislature just adjourned. Following the brief ceremony, Judge Hart received his commission. He will asume his new duties Monday morning.

When asked for a statement in regard to his new office, Judge Hart replied that he felt so deeply the magnitude of the work for which he will be held responsible that he would issue a written statement within the next week.

Senator Miller, joint author of the bill, declared before leaving the city Friday that he confidently expected to see a decrease in the general rate; that the purpose of the new bill was simply to discover and bring to light the "invisible" property which is not now taxed.

Streets of Village Paved With Gold

CHICO, Aug. 17.—Considerable excitement was created in this city when it was discovered that the streets are being literally paved with gold.

The sand used in preparing concrete for the base of street paving is shipped in from the Yuba River. In working up this sand it was discovered that it contains large quantities of fine gold, so much that it can be detected with the naked eye.

OBITUARY

The funeral of Ivey Kilgore, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Kilgore, who died Friday, was held Saturday from Harry Poole's chapel. Interment at Casey's cemetery.

Funeral services of Mrs. E. H. Vernon, who died Friday afternoon at the residence, 38 Adams street, will be held at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon from the home. She was 65 years old, and is survived by two sons, Edward and William S. Vernon, and one daughter, Mrs. W. P. Evans. The body will be taken to Louisville, Ky., for interment.

The body of Henry S. Chaffin, who died Friday afternoon at a local sanitarium, was carried Saturday to his old home in Monroe, Ga., for funeral and interment. He was 25 years old and is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Chaffin, of Monroe; three brothers, Hugh, Dana and Weyman Chaffin, and one sister, Mrs. L. B. Nowell.

The remains of J. B. Mathis, who died Friday morning at a local hospital, were taken Saturday to Washington, Ga., for funeral and interment. He was 50 years old.

The funeral of Mrs. Georgia A. Durham, who died Friday at the residence, 12 North Candler street, Decatur, was held from the home Friday morning. Interment at Oakland.

SLAYS WIFE AND SETS FIRE TO HER BODY

George S. Nance, Said To Be From Macon, N. C., Held in Rockingham Jail.

HAMLET, N. C., Aug. 17.—After striking his wife on the head with a beer bottle, fracturing her skull and causing her death, George S. Nance, whose home is said to be in Macon, N. C., saturated her clothing with kerosene and set fire to the body, in their room at a local hotel yesterday.

Attendants, attracted by the smoke issuing from the room, rushed in, and found the dead body of the woman in the middle of the room, her clothing almost completely burned, the furniture blazing and the destruction of the hotel threatened.

Nance was found in a room three doors away on the same floor, and after arrest admitted that he had killed his wife and set fire to her clothing. He said his wife had told him he was crazy and should be in the asylum, and that she was now as crazy as he was. She then seized him by the throat and choked him, he said, and when he freed himself he struck her with the beer bottle, fracturing her skull. Seeing that she was dead, he poured kerosene over her clothing and the furniture and fired the room.

The couple arrived in Hamlet yesterday and registered at the hotel, and said they would spend the day there, leaving at night for Norfolk.

A receipted bill from a Greenville S. C., firm, addressed to Mrs. George S. Nance, 321 Laurens Street, was found in a handbag. The shoes worn by the woman were purchased in Knoxville, Tenn.

Nance, who is about 40 years old of medium size and clean shaven, had on his person when arrested $563 in bills and coin, a Government bond for $1,000 and a deposit slip from a Macon bank for $1,000.

A verdict was returned by the Coroner's jury to the effect that Mrs. Nance came to her death at the hands of her husband, George S. Nance. He was committed to jail without bond. The prisoner was hurried to Rockingham. In addition to the charge of murder, an arson charge was made against Nance.

The body of Mrs. Nance was delivered to an undertaken, who will hold it subject to instructions.

Slayer Rushed to Macon for Safety

ALBANY, Aug. 17.—Dock Mathis, the negro who killed R. K. Jossey, a white farmer, in Lee County last Monday night, was captured in Calhoun County, near Williamsburg, last night. He was carried to Macon in an automobile by Sheriff C. C. Barbre and R. M. Denson. A message was received to-day from the Sheriff stating that the prisoner had been landed safely in the Macon jail.

Had the officers tried to bring the negro to Albany or Leesburg, he probably would have been lynched by a Lee County mob.

Shoots Man Who Called Her Name

ALBANY, Aug. 17.—Walter Drake, a young white man, was shot last night by Ethel Rodgers, an inmate of a house in the restricted district. It is stated that Drake called her a vile name, which she resented and demanded that he retract. This he refused to do, and she shot him.

The girl is in the Dougherty County jail. Drake is at the Phoebe Putney Hospital, and is not expected to live.

Moonshiners Shot in Fight With Officers

NASHVILLE, Aug. 17.—In a battle between seven moonshiners and revenue officers in Moore County, near the Alabama State line, in which more than 100 shots were fired, one moonshiner was mortally wounded, while two others, riddled with buckshot, will probably die.

All but the fatally wounded moonshiner escaped across Elk River.

WESTERNLUND IS WINNER OF MT. BAKER MARATHON

BELLINGHAM, WASH., Aug. 17.—Paul Westerlund, of California, won the annual Mount Baker Marathon yesterday, finishing the course in 9:33:43. The course was 100 miles long, but the contestants were carried in racing automobiles to the foot of the trails and back. The actual endurance contest covered a course of 31 miles up and down the mountain, which has a height of 11,000 feet. Nine men entered the race.

Gunby, of Florida, who are with the Albert Howells for the summer; Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Dougherty, Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Ransom, Miss Nina Gentry, Messrs. H. M. Atkison, Bowie Martin, Dr. Jerry Osborne, James Ragan, E. C. Lamb, James Harris, Dozier Lowndes, Jesse Draper and Charles Sciple.

At the East Lake Country Club there will be the usual informal dinner dance Saturday evening, and a number of young people are planning to go out early for a swim before dinner.

There will be several parties for visiting girls. Miss Mildred Hazen, who is visiting Miss Mignon McCarty, will be the guest of honor at one party. Miss Mary Belle Hixon, of Americus, who is visiting Mrs. Russell Bridges, will be the center of a congenial party, and there will be eight guests to meet Miss Carol Dean, of Gainesville, who is visiting Miss Mary Lucy Turner.

For Guest From Panama.

Mrs. Ida Lamar Coleman, of Macon, who is spending the summer at Crab Orchard Springs, Kentucky, has had as guest her niece, Miss Georgia Thornton Munroe, formerly of Atlanta, now of Panama. Last week Mrs. Coleman entertained a large party at cards in honor of Miss Munroe, which was one of the important social affairs of Crab Orchard this season. Miss Munroe, who is at present at Lexington, Ky., has received many social attentions during her visit to the States. She will visit her aunt, Mrs. William Lee Ellis, at Battle Creek, and her sister, Mrs. Joseph Fearing, at Ravinia, Ill., before returning to the Canal Zone in the fall.

For Miss Fraser Mitchell.

Miss Constance Berry entertained at a matinee party at the Forsyth Saturday for Miss Fraser Mitchell, who is the guest of Miss Julia MacIntyre. The party included Misses Mitchell, Julia MacIntyre, Nell Bowers, of Nashville, guest of Mrs. J. P. B. Allan, and Laura Ripley.

After the matinee Miss Laura Ripley entertained ten girls at tea at the Piedmont Club in compliment to Miss Mitchell.

Tea was served on the terrace and pink phlox adorned the table. The bonbons were in pink. Miss Ripley wore white embroidered crepe, with a black hat trimmed in blue plumes.

Monday afternoon Miss Sina White will give a box party at the Forsyth for this visitor, and one afternoon next week Mrs. D. I. MacIntyre, Jr., and Miss Frances Ansley will entertain at the East Lake Country Club for her.

Waddell-Stanley.

Mr. and Mrs. William Augustus Waddell announce the marriage of their daughter, Mildred Edmond, to Mr. Thomas Jefferson Stanley, of Quitman, Ga., the ceremony having taken place July 5, Dr. John E. White officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Stanley will make their home at Quitman.

Dinner Party.

A pretty affair of the week was the dinner given Friday evening by Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Smith in compliment to Miss Annie Wyche, of Anniston; Messrs. R. C. Wyche, of St. Louis, and Sam Wyche Martin, of Birmingham.

The house was decorated with garden flowers. A basket of bright colored zinnias adorned the dinner table, and the place cards were hand painted in gay flowers.

The guests included Miss Wyche, Miss Maybelle Cherry, Miss Lillian Blair, Messrs. R. C. Wyche, Sam Wyche Martin, H. H. Gardner and Rev. and Mrs. T. J. Branch.

West End Party.

A congenial party motoring to Warm Springs Saturday to spend the week-end are Misses Myrt Hancock, Tommie Hancock, Katherine Ulmer, of Savannah; Messrs. Monroe Hutton, George Hope, Jr., and Welborne Hope. Mr. and Mrs. George Hope are chaperoning the party.

Mistrial in Fourth Feud Slaying Case

WINCHESTER, KY., Aug. 17.—For the first time since the trial of the assassins of former Sheriff Ed Callahan, of Brethitt County, began, a jury has failed to reach a verdict. Three of the defendants have been given life imprisonment, but in the case of "Red Tom" Davidson the jury reported disagreement and was discharged. Eight were for acquittal and four for conviction.

Fourteen defendants remain to be tried. The assassination was the result of a mountain feud.

Stricken Official Likely to Recover

ANDERSON, S. C., Aug. 17.—Representative Joshua W. Ashley, who was stricken with paralysis yesterday, is much better to-day and there is hardly any doubt that he will recover, according to Dr. Shirley, his physician. He is able to articulate slightly.

Dr. Shirley says the fact that he has the use of his affected leg and arm in a small degree increases the hope for recovery.

Miss Nona Martin, who has been with Miss Blackburn, will remain in the East until the first of September.

Dried Cantaloupe Is California's Latest

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 17.—With the perfection of experiments now going on, California will give to the world another luscious dried fruit—the dried cantaloupe. They will turn into profit some of the millions of small cantaloupes left in the fields every year.

Thomas D. McCall, of El Centro, accidentally discovered the fine qualities of the dried article. McCall had dumped a great heap of cantaloupes to one side, several breaking open. These dried and threw out such a fine aroma that McCall was attracted and tasted them. They were excellent, and now cantaloupe growers are drying all of their small melons. The dried variety is said to have a much finer flavor than the fresh fruit.

WALLINGFORD IS GIVEN 5-YEAR SENTENCE

E. C. Drew, Alabama Promoter, Convicted in Forty-one Counts of Mail Frauds.

GADSDEN, Aug. 17.—E. C. Drew the Fort Payne oil well promoter, charged with using the mails to defraud, and who has been on trial here in the Federal Court since last Monday, was to-day found guilty under 41 of the 47 counts of the indictment and was sentenced by Judge R. W. I. Grubb to serve five years in the Atlanta Federal Prison.

Drew had been convicted one year ago of using the mails to defraud, but had taken an appeal to the Supreme Court. He was given eighteen months in the first conviction.

The Drew trial started on Monday, of this week, and continued without interruption, going to the jury late Friday afternoon. During the trial it was shown that Drew had secured from $25,000 to $30,000 from innocent investors in most of the Eastern States. He could not show where he had spent more than a fractional part of the money in boring for oil near Fort Payne.

Drew was committed to the DeKalb County Jail at Fort Payne until he determines whether or not he will take an appeal. In the event an appeal is taken, his bond was placed at $3,000.

300 'Heroes' Strike And Police Win in Battle of Lake Erie

CHICAGO, Aug. 17.—The battle of Lake Erie was fought in advance of the Perry Centennial program, which began here to-day, when 300 "heroes and patriots" went on strike for $1 more a day. The "mutineers" deserted Commodore Perry. It is their intention of joining the Industrial Workers of the World.

Two hundred faithful remained in consideration of a 50-cent increase in wages, and the centennial started this afternoon without the deserters.

Difficulties began with the final rehearsal of the battle scene on the boats in Lake Michigan. Leaders of the army of 500 "supers," recruited from the unemployed of Chicago, served notice on Miss Katherine Brown, author and director of the battle scene, that they must have $2 a day instead of $1.

Miss Brown sent for "Sig" Hart, who has been conencted with theatrical and pugilistic ventures. Authentic reports from the scene of battle said Hart fell in line of duty, under a belaying pin wielded by a large and earnest "hero."

The police answered a riot call. The "heroes of Lake Erie" were scattered back to their loafing haunts in the bays and coves of South Clark street.

GOVERNOR SIGNS ORDER TO PAY TEACHERS

Warrants for $510,000 to Be Distributed Next Week Are Being Prepared.

An order for the distribution of $510,000 to the school teachers of the State, through the County Superintendents, was signed by Governor Slaton Saturday morning at a meeting of the State Board of Education.

Warrants for the entire amount, which has been deposited in the State Treasury, will be issued immediately in pro rata shares to the different county superintendents with instructions that the teachers be paid at once. The actual payment probably will be made late next week.

State Superintendent M. L. Brittain was all smiles following the conference with the Governor Saturday morning. He declared each step in the payment of the teachers would be made with all possible haste and that there was no reason why the money should not be in the hands of the teachers before the end of next week. The full payment is 20 per cent of the school annual appropriation fund of $2,500,000.

In connection with the disposition of the teachers' fund the State Board Saturday morning passed a resoultion in which it is agreed that the question of making new contracts for the text books used in the schools will be considered at the regular meeting, September 29.

At this time the board probably will arrange to hear different publishers prior to the adoption on October 27.

Leaps Ausable Chasm Falls; To Try Niagara

LAKE PLACID, N. Y., Aug. 17.—Redman Law, who successfully shot the Rainbow Falls, at the head of Ausable Chasm, announced, on his return, that he purposes in about six weeks to go over Niagara.

The start was seen by 300 persons. The flat-bottom boat used took the 75-foot fall and went to pieces on the rocks of the river bed.

What Do You Suppose Interests Them on Board the Train?

National Affairs, Great Discoveries, News of Historical Importance? Not at All—Something Simpler.

"It hath not yet been shown what we shall be" is a fine sounding sentence, descriptive of our future greatness. "It hath not yet been shown what petty, little human mice we are" is a sentence that would describe pretty well the human race of to-day.

You have only to observe the mental occupations of your fellow passengers on Pullman coaches running between Atlanta and New York to be convinced of the vacuity of human minds, their absence of thought, their aversion to study.

Here are men traveling nearly a thousand miles, propelled by force buried in the coal several million years ago.

They travel in rooms lighted with the electric power that flashes in the clouds, on rails and wheels of steel.

Their journey is the result of millions of years of the earth's development, and hundreds of thousands of years in the development of human intelligence, AND THEIR MINDS ARE ON GAMES OR AMUSEMENT OR FOLLIES OF ONE KIND OR ANOTHER.

You see solemn old men and distressed old women reading—novels usually vapid or vulgar—when they are not playing bridge or solitaire.

If you see someone interested in a newspaper, what do you suppose most attracts his attention? Let us look over his shoulder and see.

No, gentle or fierce reader, he has not been reading important news of the Balkan war.

He hasn't wondered whether the United States would spread as it should all the way down this continent and stop just south of the Panama canal—for the present.

He hasn't been reading bulletins of scientific discovery, or news of importance in the world and its history.

He has been reading the important fact that Sommers "pitched" and Graham "caught" for Chattanooga, while Dent "pitched" and Dunn "caught" for Atlanta.

He has been reading the numbers of runs, hits and errors—if you know what they are—and finding out who won in various games of baseball throughout the country.

The human race has not grown up to its possibilities.

It is a race of children, easily tired, incapable of concentrated, earnest thought.

It is a race of men who work like beavers, or ants, or prairie dogs through the day, each in his own little direction, indifferent to the others, and who unite in intellect in the evening, not upon any subject worthy of the brain of a man, but in intense interest in some poor little make-believe game.

These men, "heirs of all the ages," have their magnificent minds concentrated on a childish game that could have been played and was played in another form by the savages that lived here before language was perfected.

Many a weary century must pass before the human mice of the present day will be really MEN.

Woes of "Affinity" Earle's Soul-Mates.

The folly of certain "advanced ideas" on marriage, that rise, phoenix-like, from the ashes of dead loves, comes with fresh proof in a London cable telling of a suit for divorce by the third wife of Ferdinand Pinney Earle, the New York artist, who has been in the limelight for years because of his love affairs.

The unsophisticated daughter of an English architect, Mrs. Earle No. 3—"the loveliest, sweetest, dearest of them all"—said she knew nothing of the American "affinity" advocate when she married him, two months after their first meeting. Now the mother of his child, she seeks her freedom on the ground of cruelty. Thus it was with Emilie Fischbacher and Julia Kuttner, both of whom Earle married and later lost.

Advocates of a nondescript affection may conjure up new forms of wedlock as an improvement on the old-fashioned vows, but such theories are like "silly moths that singe their wings and fall into dust." Discord and strife are the invariable accompaniments of defiance of the laws of decency and honor.

It is a fact that monogamic races have made the greatest progress in civilization. It was the monogamic barbarians, the virtuous Saxon vandals, that drove the hardest bargains with the Roman emperors. They preserved their rugged, healthy state from the weakening vices of a decadent age.

Pioneers who have cut the hard granite, hewn the tall trees, conquered the wilderness and forwarded the arts and sciences—who have made America the greatest miracle in the annals of the nations—all have had a wholesome regard for the sanctity of the marriage covenant. They rarely entered lightly into wedlock. Enemies of the free love that feeds on empty promises of a superfine conjugality, they were ever loyal to the lesson of Cana in Galilee.

Artist Earle's marital misfortunes are the common lot of all so-called idealists who set their own opinions against the experiences of the centuries. The religious element of the marriage relation can not be ignored without bringing counter obligations that gall and bind the offenders with worse cords than those that fret the flesh.

PRESBYTERIAN DOCTRINE

Editor Georgian:

Your recent statement, "The Presbyterian teaching of infant damnation seems to us horrible," is a gross misrepresentation, to say the least of it. And it is up to you to quote authorities and prove it, or else retract it. If I knew that you were a Methodist, I would tell you it was John Wesley, and not John Calvin, who once held such a belief. I come of Presbyterian ancestry dating back about two centuries, and claim to know something of the denomination at large. But I have never read or heard of one Presbyterian of any note who so believed and taught.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox Writes on Unfit Mothers

Poverty Does Not Make Them So, as Many Are Rich. Criticism Committees Should Be Established Everywhere.

Written for The Atlanta Georgian

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

"THE unfitness of mothers of dependent children, complained of by 'organized charity' is in my opinion all caused by poverty.

"The Mothers' Pension law recently enacted by the legislatures of eighteen States will, to a great extent, make the unfit mother fit because the pension removes the cause of her unfitness, which is her poverty.

"It is the common observation that the very fine and very fit mother becomes comparatively unfit to take care of her children after a few years of hopeless struggle with poverty.

"The mistake of organized charity is their allowing good mothers of dependent children to be made unfit by the poison of poverty, the poison of hopelessness, the poison of overwork in trying to earn the living for their children at hard work and give proper care to their children at the same time.

"Organized charity contends that a mother should have her children taken away from her because poverty has made her temporarily unfit.

"The real friends of the poor, the advocates of mothers' pensions, believe that the mother should have the cause of her unfitness removed and not her children. HENRY NEIL."

Unfit Mothers Caused by Poverty Open to Doubt.

MOTHERS' pensions now extend from coast to coast.

One can now travel from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean going through mothers' pension States only, starting on the coast of New Jersey and going through Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Utah, Nevada to the coast of California.

Other mothers' pension States are Washington, Oregon, Idaho, South Dakota, Minnesota, Massachusetts, New Hampshire—eighteen in all.

Three cities that have local mothers' pension laws are Kansas City, St. Louis and Milwaukee.

Meantime the statement of Mr. Neil that the unfit mothers are caused by poverty is open to doubt.

Some of the most unfit mothers to be found on earth are women of wealth.

Two little girls on board a large ocean liner were the daughters of a New York banker, and their mother was an educated woman, and their father was a man of parts; yet there were never seen on earth more insufferably disagreeable children than these. They were ill-mannered, impertinent, unkind and ungracious. The chief steward in the dining salon was obliged to rebuke them for their impertinence and their annoying treatment of other passengers.

The children she had should have been taken away from such parents and placed under wise and worthy instructors.

A woman who has been reared with excellent opportunities for culture is the mother of four children. There is no financial strain upon the family, yet the children have never been taught any of the gracious and lovely traits which help to build a worthy character and a pleasing personality.

Every School and Church Should Have a Criticism Committee.

Loud, harsh voices, flat contradictions, continual quarreling and the most disagreeable qualities distinguish this family.

Such parents are certainly unfit to bring up families.

A fund for the erection of a large scientific institution, such as Dr. Elmer Gates has always longed to see established, would be a benefit to the world, an institution where the brain cells of vulgar and disorderly children, as well as the perverted and viciously inclined, could be developed into constructive qualities.

Every school and church in the land ought to have a "criticism committee," such as existed in the Oneida community years ago.

To this committee every person who had a complaint to make of the manners or conduct of another member of the community went, and the committee called the offending person with the complainant, and the whole subject was calmly and thoroughly investigated. And reproof was administered where it belonged, and if it was proven that any personal or selfish or jealous feelings prompted the complainant, he was the one reproved and publicly placed under ban, and made to see how unworthy was his action.

An Institution for Brain Building Would Also Be Good.

Unselfishness was the religious keynote of the society, and had it let sex problems alone it would have been one of the greatest factors for bettering the world which ever existed in America.

If our schools and colleges and churches could adopt this excellent idea of the Oneida community and established the "Criticism committee" and then carry Dr. Elmer Gates' dream of a brain-building institution into realization, the children of the idle rich might stand as good a chance of becoming agreeable and useful citizens as do the children of the poor to-day.

: A DEAD FIRE :

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

WHERE some lean trapper lingered long ago
To make himself secure against the night,
It stays a scar whereon no blade will grow,
Its old, cold ashes sifting to and fro,
Its charred sticks black where once was leaping light.

All green and lovely lies the forest floor
Around this patch of ever-barren soil;
Nearby the pinks and daisies bloom once more
Abundantly as in the years before,
Watching the queer gray serpents writhe and coil.

In all the world of grim and ghostly sights
There is no sight more like to lasting pain,
Suggesting hopeless days and long, sad nights;
It is the ashen wraith of past delights—
It is the heart of one who loved in vain.

DORSEY HAMMERS AT FRANK'S CHARACTER

Prisoner's Mother Leaves Court When Attack Is Made

THAW FLEES TO HIGH SEAS IN YACHT; HUNT BY WIRELESS IS BEGUN

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Wireless was set to work out over the Atlantic to-day in the search for Harry Kandall Thaw, the Pittsburg millionaire who escaped from Mattewan State Asylum for the Insane, in which he had been confined for five years after his acquittal for the murder of Stanford White.

Following his escape from Matteawan at 7:45 o'clock yesterday morning, Thaw was traced to South Norwalk, Conn., an dhe is believed now to be speeding toward South America.

Search is going on by land and sea. On the land detectives are tracting five men, who helped Thaw to get away in automobiles after he left the asylum's gates.

Ppers and books found in Thaw's rooms at the asylum indicated that the slayer is bound for Brazil or some other South American country.

However, the authorities make room for the theory that Thaw may have left the maps and books for a blind and is really on his way to Erope.

Trans-Atlantic liners have been asked to watch for a 60-foot ocean greyhound type of yacht with a yellow funnel. According to persons who saw the yacht in the South Norwalk Harbor, the craft bore the name "Katherine." However, the plans of escape were so carefully laid that the detectives believe that they included efforts to hide the identity of the vessel.

In this connection, belief prevails that the yacht was changed in appearance after she put to sea. A forward mast could have been rmoved, her funnel repainted and she could otherwise have been changed to elude detection.

Thaws escape by plot after five years of futile fighting in the New York courts combine all the romantic and sensational elements of fiction. From the moment that he dashed through the gates, eluding Keeper H. H. Barnum, while milk was being delivered at the institution, Thaw disappeared as completely as though the earth had swallowed him up.

Residents of villages near the Connecticut border and on a line between Matteawan and South Norwalk saw two automobiles, one roadster and the other a touring car, dashing by at 70 miles an hour and some thought they recognized Thaw and two other men crouching in the touring car. Then all trace was lost until the thread is picked up again at South Norwalk.

There it was learned that threee men left a dust-covered motor car about 10 o'clock and immediately went on board the yacht. The yacht at once put to sea under a full head of steam ndd soon was lost to sight.

Can Not Be Extradited.

District Attorney Whitman says Thaw can not be extradited if located.

"There is no indictment pending against Thaw in New York and he can not be brought back because he was legally adjudged insane after being acquitted of murder," said Mr. Whitman.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, wife of the escaped lunatic, for whose love Thaw declared he shot and killed Stanford White, is playing at a theater in this city and to-day she felt that her life will be in constant danger until Thaw again is apprehended.

"He threatened to kill me and I know how remorseless he is," declared Mrs. Thaw. "I must have protection every minute of my life. Thaw is a man with a high dramatic instinct and I know if he should come to take my life the tragedy would be staged with all the theatrical effect that accompanied the killing of Mr. White."

A rigid investigation is going on at the Matteawan Institution following ugly hints that Thaw had collusion inside the institition to aid his escape. Barnum was grilled so unmercifully that he nearly broke down. Time after time he declared that he used every means in his power to keep the prisoners safely. It was said that application would be made both to Governor Sulzer and Lieutenant Governor Glynn at Albany for a State investigation.

Seek Men Who Aided.

The only satisfactory method of finding Thaw, according to the police, is to fix the identity of the men who were waiting for him outside the institution with two automobiles. Something is known of these men. Ten days ago two men calling themselves Richard J. Butler and Michael O'Keefe, appeared at the Holland Hotel in Beacon, or Fishkill Landing as

HARRY THAW AND HIS NOTED WIFE

Where Harry Thaw Has Been Reported 'Seen' Since Escape

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 18.—There is a report here that Harry K. Thaw, aboard a yacht, passed seaward from Jamestown early this morning.

LENOX, MASS., Aug. 18.—Richard A. Stanley, proprietor of the Lennox Hotel, announced today that a man whom he believed to be Harry K. Thaw arrived there late last night and went away at 6 o'clock this morning. Three men accompanied him.

Organist Would Bar Babies at Recitals

Eugene Wyatt, famous English organist, was of the opinion Monday that if he performed a second time at the Auditorium-Armory he would of a necessity exclude infants in arms from his audience.

His recital Sunday afternoon was frequently interrupted by the ambitious wails of prospective Carusos, Gardens and an occasional Scotti. Professor Wyatt is the first of a number of organists to be presented by the Music Festival Association before an official city organist is selected. He made a fine impression on a large audience.

JUDGE SLAIN, HIS BRIDE WOUNDED BY EX-WIFE

W. S. Goodbee Shot to Death by Divorce in the Streets of Millen, Ga.

MILLEN, GA., Aug. 18.—Judge W. S. Godbee is dead and his wife fatally wounded from shots fired by Mrs. Edna Godbee, the divorced wife of Judge Godbee.

Five years ago Mrs. Edna Godbee sued for and obtained a divorce. Less than a year ago Judge Godbee married Miss Florence Boyer, of Williamsport, Pa. They lived at the Estelle Hotel here.

This morning about 9 o'clock Mrs. Edna Godbee walked in the postoffice just as Judge Godbee and his wife were leaving. She immediately began shooting them in the back.

The judge was killed outright and hisbride has only a slight chance to live.

Mrs. Edna Godbee walked to her home and has not been arested yet.

Judge Godbee was a member of the Board of County Commissioners and a large landowner. Mrs. Edna Godbee comes from one of the oldest and most respected families in this section. She was a Miss Perkins, daughter of Mills Perkins.

The shooting created intense excitement, many persons being on the street at the time.

BIG SENDOFF GIVEN TRAIL BLAZERS

City Officials and Motorists Speed Sunday American All-Southern Route Pathfinder on Way.

Cheered by hundreds of lusty-voiced good roads rooters and with the martial strains of the Fifth Regiment band and the hearty good wishes and godspeeds of scores of Atlanta's most prominent citizens and officials ringing in his ears, E. L. Ferguson, official "pathfinder" for the all-Southern open-the-year-round transcontinental highway, Monday morning glided up Alabama street to Peachtree for the start of the long auto-hike to San Francisco.

Mr. Ferguson's "official" family consisted of Mrs. Ferguson, two little Fergusons and Hugh Grant, representing The Sunday American, inaugurator of the monster campaign, who will accompany the party as far as Birmingham.

There seldom has been a warmer "sendoff" than that prepared for "Pathfinder" Ferguson and parjy on Monday morning. All were in readiness—those entered in the last week, including the Mayor, the chief of police and the fire chief—and scores of other prominent citizens and autoists besides.

Makeup of the Parade.

First comes the Fifth Regiment band, to be followed by the transcontinental car occupied by Mr. Ferguson and party and in the order named, Mayor Woodward, in his private car; Chief Beavers, Fire Chief Cummings and other city officials, in addition to scores of cars piloted by the drivers who compete from time to time at the 'Drome. A number of motorcyclists were also in the line of march.

Stretched out on long, snaky Peachtree, after the departure from The Georgian-American office on East Alabama street, the parade assumed an imposing appearance, much to the delight and admiration of enthusiastic citizens.

The crowd caught the "drift" of the affair. This was no mere parade. Here was a man, without a peer in the art of "trail blazing," starting out for far-away San Francisco, from Atlanta—obviously a monster project in which Atlantans should take particular pride and one filled with all sorts of possibilities, not only for the Gate City of the South, but the entire Southland, including the great Southwest, and the Pacific Coast country.

Big Papers Behind Project.

With these things in mind they gave this man Ferguson a send-off which will be heralded all the way to 'Frisco, through the medium of a score of leading Southern newspapers, including The Georgian and American, The Birmingham News, The Montgomery Advertiser, The New Orleans Item, The Dallas Times-Herald and The Houston Daily Post.

Mr. Ferguson left Atlanta with virtually every detail of the first lap to Birmingham complete. Traveling almost due west from Atlanta, the party will reach the Georgia-Alabama line at Tallapoosa late Monday afternoon. Here the party will spend the night, resuming the journey early Tuesday morning in company with President John Craft, of the Alabama Good Roads Association, and State Highway Commissioner Keller, who will make the entire trip through Alabama.

Arriving at Anniston early Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Ferguson and party will be received officially by the Mayor, the president of the Chamber of Commerce and other prominent citizens and officials. The Alabama city, it is understood, has planned a big reception for the tourists following a lively campaign conducted recently in the interest of good roads between Anniston and Birmingham.

Birmingham Plans Greeting.

In line with tentative plans, as a result of a choice of two routes between Anniston and Birmingham, Mr. Ferguson probably will decide to spend Tuesday night in Anniston, leaving there Wednesday morning. Pell City and Riverside will be reached in the order named; Wednesday night will be passed en route, and Birmingham, the end of the first lap of the long journey, will be reached shortly before noon Thursday.

Sunday American Lauded for Project

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 18.—To the Editor Hearst's Sunday American:

Hearty congratulations to you for enterprise and constructive effort shown by your interest in Southern transcontinental highway project and good roads movement. Glad to be associated with you in this work.

We believe this aids the development of automobile industry, increases communication between the rural districts and cities and insures consequent increases in realty values and prosperity in general.

THE NEW ORLEANS ITEM,
A. G. Newmeyer, Manager.

Burglars Get $600 Worth of Jewelry In Home; Rob Store

Burglars broke into the home of J. W. Russell, No. 3 Lafayette Drive, Ansley Park, Saturday night and stole $600 worth of jewelry. The department store of Morris Brothers, No. 137 Decatur street, was entered through the skylight and a large amount of clothing was stolen.

The robbery at the Russell home was discovered about 11 o'clock, when the family returned. The rooms on the upper floor had been ransacked. Entrance had been gained through a window. Among the stolen articles was Mrs. Russell's wedding ring and two fine watches.

In breaking into the Morris store the burglars were compelled to cross the roofs of seven buildings. They gained access to the roof of the first one from the Washington street viaduct.

Diver Hits Bottom At Lakewood and Is Seriously Hurt

For the second time in five weeks, a bather at Lakewood Sunday dived from the bathhouse into three feet of water and was rendered unconscious by striking his head on the bottom of the lake.

Five weeks ago Martin Cornellison, of the Southern Bell Telephone Company, remained under water fifteen minutes. R. H. Smith, 32 years old, of No. 184 South Forsyth street, yesterday was at the bottom of the lake ten minutes before his plight was discovered.

Captain B. H. Schlomberg rescued both bathers. He pulled Smith out after the young man failed to come to the surgece, and worked over him for twenty minutes, assisted by Life-Savers George L. Dantzler and Fred Norris. Later Smith was taken to the Tabernacle Hospital. It is not thought that any serious results will follow.

Rains Lift Water Famine in Kansas

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 18.—More than half of Kansas was covered by rains to-day and it is believed the heat and drouth has been effectively routed. Little benefit to corn was contained in the belated rains, but forage and alfalfa were helped.

Pools that had dried were refilled and live stock was relieved. The highest mark reached by the thermometer in Kansas City yesterday was 92.

Flyer Falls Into Sea In English Air Contest

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

YARMOUTH, ENGLAND, Aug. 18. The around Great Britain flight begun by H. D. Hawker at Southampton Sunday and continued by Aviator Sydney Pickles, was again up in the air to-day when the aeroplane fell into the sea. Pickles took Hawker's place because of serious illness which beset the latter and planned to finish the 2,000-mile journey from Yarmouth.

Pickles arose at 5 o'clock and soared out over the sea, but his motor stopped and the aeroplane dropped. Neither Pickles nor the car was hurt and another effort will be made to resume the flight Wednesday.

THE WEATHER.

Forecast for Atlanta and Georgia—Generally fair Monday and Tuesday.

WOMAN DENIES BEING TOLD OF ESCAPADE OF PRISONER WITH GIRL

That Leo M. Frank rode on a street car to Hapeville with a girl the Saturday previous to the murder of Mary Phagan and repeatedly sought to persuade her to leave the car with him was the sensational testimony Solicitor Dorsey endeavored to ge from Mrs. J. G. Warldaw Monday.

Anticipating the nature of the questions the Solicitor was about to ask, Mrs. Rae Frank, mother of the defendant, stopped her ears with her fingers and then rushed from the room. Attorneys for Frank at first objected to the questions and the jury was excused. It was at this moment that Mrs. Frank made her dramatic exit. She was evidently fearful of repeating her outburst of a few days ago.

Mrs. Wardlaw denied that she ever knew of such a circumstance. She denier as well that she had been told of it by Harmes Stanton or H. G. Baker, street car men.

Denies Frank Looked Into Dressing Room.

Another sensation was created when the defense called to the stand Miss Emmeline Mayfield, the young wman whom the state maintains was in the dressing room when Frank looked in at one time. Miss Mayfield denied this was true.

Paving the way for the eagerly awaited statement of Frank, the lawyers for the defendant devoted Monday morning to the gathering up of the story ends of their case, most of the time being occupied with the testimony of character witnesses.

More than a score of women and girls employed in the National Pencil Company were called to tell what they knew of Frank's character and what they had observed of his conduct about the factory. All asserted that they never had known personally of any misconduct on the part of the superintendent and never had heard o fany.

Explains Looking Into Dressing Room.

Mrs. Mattie Thompson proved one of the most important of the character witnesses. After testifying to Frank's good character, Mrs. Thompson declared that the girls on the fourth floor were in the habit at one time of flirting from the windows of the dressing room. She said that the practice became a matter of comment among the elder women on the fourth floor and that she finally took it upon herself to report it. Whereupon orders were issued against it.

The testimony of Mrs. Thompson was produced to provide a basis for the contention of the defense that Frank had opened the dressing room door on several occasions solely for the purpose of determining if his orders were being carried out.

Miss M. E. Fleming, a stenographer, said that she worked in Frank's office from April to December, 1912, and that she never had observed any misconduct on the superintendent's part now had seen women visiting his office.

Never Saw Women Saturday Afternoons.

Godfrey Winecoff, superintendent of the lead plant of the National Pencil Company, testified that it was his custom to visit the pencil factory office every other Saturday afternoon about 3 o'clock. He said he always found Frank or Schiff, Frank's assistant—frequently both—working in the office. He asserted he never saw any women there.

A large crowd was attracted to the courtroom by the probability that the prisoner would tell his story Monday, and the keenest expectancy prevailed. It was problematical whether there would be any cross-examination. Ordinarily, of course, the accused in a murder case merely makes his statement and the jury can believe it or discard it entirely as it chooses. It is said, however, that Frank has earnestly urged his lawyers to allow the Solicitor to cross-examine him.

When court reopened Monday Solicitor Dorsey took up the cross-examination of Harlee Branch, a reporter for The Atlanta Journal.

Branch was asked:

"Can you give any estimate of the time taken in conversation in Conley's re-enactment of the crime?" He replied that it took about fifteen minutes.

Q. You never said it was about half the total time, did you?—A. I don't recall.

Attorney Arnold took the witness.

Q. You said it took about fifteen minutes to cover the time lost in conversation?—A. Yes.

Q. He began at 12:18 and you left at 1:08? That would be about 50 minutes that you were there?—A. Yes.

Q. How long was he writing the notes?—A. Two minutes at the most. He did not write fast or slow?

Q. How long did he stay in the wardrobe?—A. About one minute.

Q. Did you see Conley in the newspapermen's room here in this courthouse reading a newspaper since this trial began?—A. I saw him looking at one as though he was reading it.

Mr. Branch was excused and Lou Castro, former ball player and at present fight promoter, was called as a witness by the defense to testify to time it took to walk certain distances.

Q. Did you walk from Marietta and Forsyth streets to the second floor of the pencil factory?—A. Yes.

Q. How long did it take you?—A. Four and one-half minutes.

Q. Did you walk from the National

Pencil Company to the corner of Whitehall and Alabama streets?—A. I did.

Q. How long did it take you?—A. Three minutes and twenty seconds.

Q. Did you walk from Broad and Hunter streets to the Pencil Factory?—A. Yes.

Q. How long did it take you?—A. One and one-half minutes.

The witness was excused.

Employees of Factory Character Witnesses.

Miss M. E. Fleming was the next witness called. She is one of Frank's former stenographers. She testified on direct examination that Frank's character was good. Dorsey cross-questioned her.

Q. Were you ever there on Saturday afternoon?—A. No, I was off then.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Frank work on the financial sheet Saturday mornings?—A. Yes, I saw him work on it a little.

Miss Fleming was excused and Godfrey Winecoff, superintendent of the lead plant of the pencil factory, took the stand.

Q. Did you visit the National Pencil factory on Saturdays between July 1, 1912 and May 1, 1913?—A. Yes.

Q. What time?—A. Three to 5 o'clock.

Q. How often?—A. Almost every Saturday.

Q. Did you ever see women there in Frank's office?—A. No.

Q. Who was there?—A. Frank, Holloway, Schiff and the office boy.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Are you sure Holloway was there at 3 o'clock?—A. Yes.

The witness was excused, and Mrs. Mattie Thompson, an employee of the factory working on the fourth floor took the stand and testified as to Frank's good character. Arnold questioned her.

Q. Do you know anything about that dressing room on the fourth floor and the conduct of the girls there?—A. I made a complaint about the girls flirting out of the window.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Who has talked to you in the last few days about what you were to swear on the stand here?—A. Mr. Haas talked to me.

Registered Complaint About Girls Flirting.

Q. What did you tell him?—A. About some of those flippy girls flirting out of the window. I have talked it over with Mrs. Carson and we decided to complain to Mr. Darley.

Q. Who was flirting?—A. I don't know. It was only talked about the floor.

Q. Who was talking about it?—A. Several of the girls were talking about it.

The witness was excused and Miss Annie Howard, who has worked at the factory for fourteen months; Mrs Lillie May Goodman, an employee on the second floor for over a year; Miss Cora Cowan, an employee for four years, and Miss B. D. Smith, an employee of four years' standing, testified to Frank's good character. Miss Jimmie Mayfield, another employee of the factory, said she was not familiar enough with Frank's character to testify.

Miss Irene Carson, a factory employee, testified to Frank's good character. She declared that she was with her sister Rebecca and saw Frank on Whitehall street Saturday, April 26. She was not cross-examined.

Miss Lizzie Word, an employee of the pencil factory; Miss Ida Holmes, who has worked at the factory more than four years; Miss Willie Hatchett, Miss Mary Hatchett, Mrs. O. Johns, an employee at the factory for four and one-half years, and Miss Georgia Denham, formerly an employee for two years, all testified as to Frank's good character.

Girl Employees Give Frank a Good Name.

Miss Bessie White also testified in behalf of Frank's character. Mrs. Lizzie Florence declared she only knew Frank by sight and was not acquainted with his character. Mrs. Zilley Spivey, an employee of the pencil factory for more than four years, said Frank's character was good as far as she knew. Mrs. Minnie Smith and Miss Grace Atherton testified to Frank's good character. Both are employees of the pencil factory.

Miss Ethel Barber, a young girl, said she had worked at the pencil factory for several years and she did not know Frank's character.

Miss Velvey Holland, a pencil factory employee, said she knew nothing of Frank's character.

Miss Marjorie McCord, another employee, said Frank's character was good. Dorsey cross-examined her.

Q. What do you understand by his general character?—A. He was always a perfect gentleman.

Q. Are you talking about what you heard or what you know?—I am talking about what I know.

The witnesse was excused and R. P. Butler, shipping clerk at the factory, was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Are the doors leading into the metal room of glass or wood?—A. They are wooden with glass 15 by 18 inches in them.

Q. Can a man of ordinary heighth see through the glass?—A. Yes.

Q. Is Mr. Frank's character good or bad?—A. Good.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. How wide are these doors?—A. Six feet.

Q. Did you measure them?—A. I did.

Q. They are down a long narrow passage way with boxes on both sides, are they not?—A. The passageway is 10 feet wide except at one point.

Q. Right at the door it is very dark, isn't it?—A. Not so very dark.

Q. Do those doors usually stay open or closed?—A. Open.

Q. If any one was to sit to the right or left of those doors he could not be seen, could he?—A. A person would have to be at least 1 foot to either one side or the other.

Rabbi Marx Recalled But Not Questioned.

The witness was excused and Rabbi David Marx was recalled to the stand to explain the functions of the B'nai B'rith. After conferring with the attorneys for the State, Mr. Arnold said he knew the evidence was irrevelant and he would send the jury out if the State desired.

The State objected.

Hooper: "To relieve Mr. Arnold's mind, I will state that it is already definite that it is a charity organization."

Judge Roan ruled that the details of the organization were inadmissable. Attorney Rosser, with the consent of Solicitor Dorsey, then dictated to the stenographer without the jury hearing what he wanted to prove by Dr. Marx. Dr. Marx was then excused.

Mrs. S. A. Wilson testified that Frank's character was good. On cross-examiation she stated that she had never heard anything against him.

Miss Lena McMurtrey, a girl in short dresses, said she had only worked at the factory for a short time and did not know Frank's character.

Mrs. Mary Bolton said she worked at the factory for si xmonths about four years ago and that she had found Frank to be a perfect gentleman. She returned to work at the factory June 1.

Attorney Arnold remarked that he did not think the witness entirely qualified. Mrs. J. Johnson testified to Frank's good character. Charles Lee, a young man employed in the factory, said Frank's character was good. Lee said he had heard nothing against him.

Dorsey cross-examined him.

Young Man Denies He Signed Statement.

Q. You said the other day you gave a written statement about Duffy getting hurt?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you seen that statement to refresh your memory?—A. Yes.

Q. You signed it?—A. I never said I signed it.

Q. Did you give a written statement and never signed it?—A. It was written on a typewriter.

Q. What did you tell them that they put in that statement?—A. I told them how he got cut on the right forefinger.

Q. Was there anything in the statement about him getting cut while putting on a brass roll?—A. No, because I put that on myself.

Mrs. J. G. Wardlaw, formerly Miss Lula McDonald, an employee in the pencil factroy for four years, testified to Frank's good character.

Dorsey—I want to ask this lady some questions which counsel for the defense have already indicated they object to.

The jury was sent from the courtroom. Mrs. Rae Frank, mother of the defendant, held her hands over her ears to keep from hearing. After the jury went out she also retired. Mrs. Leo Frank retained her seat by her husband.

Never eHard of Frank On Car With Girl.

Q. You say you have never heard anything bad about Mr. Frank?—A. No.

Q. You're sure you never talked to H. Stanton and H. M. Baker, in charge of a car, that Frank had a little girl with him and tried to get her to get on the car with him, and that he had his arm around her?—A. No.

Judge Roan ruled the questions were admissible, and when the jury returned Solicitor Dorsey repeated the questions and received the same reply. The witness was excused.

Frank Siganke, an employee of the pencil company; N. V. Darley, assistant superintendent, and E. F. Holloway, the day watchman, testified to Frank's good character.

Miss Emmeline Mayfield, one of the girls who was said to have been in the dressing room at the time Frank looked in, was caleld to the stand. Arnold questioned her.

Q. Were you ever in the dressing room when Mr. Frank came in and looked at you?—A. No.

Q. Were you ever in there undressed when he came in?—A. No.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Do you know Miss Mamie Kitchens?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you k...w Miss Irene Jackson?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall Frank coming into the dressing room one day when either one of these young ladies were in there with you?—A. No.

The witness was excused, and the defense then introduced documentary evidence, including the financial sheet and the model of the pencil factory. Attorney Arnold stated to a Georgian reporter that as soon as this was introduced Frank would go upon the stand.

Much Documentary Evidence Offered.

The following documentary evidence was offered: All of the financial sheets of the National Pencil Company from June 1, 1912, to April 24, 1913; the letter from Leo Frank, dated April 26, 1913, to his uncle, M. Frank, in New York; the data from which the financial sheet of April 26 was made; twelve requisitions identified by Herbert Schiff as being made out in the handwriting of Leo Frank; ten orders dated April 26; ten carbon copies identified by Miss Hattie Hall as having been taken down and written by her Saturday morning, April 26; eleven orders recorded on the house order book April 26; page 195 of the cash book of the National Pencil Company, covering entries from April 21 to April 26, 1913; four affidavits of Jim Conley; specimens of cabbage presented by Dr. Hancock; records of various convictions of C. B. Dalton. (The indictment pending against him was ruled out on the protest of Solicitor Dorsey.) Part of the testimony of Newt Lee before the Coroner when he explained the meeting between Gantt and Frank on the afternoon of the murder.

Dorsey Plans To Use Defense's Witnesses.

Solicitor Dorsey, successful Saturday in introducing testimony as to the actual time it required for Jim Conley to enact his story of the disposal of Mary Phagan's body at the National Pencil Factory, prepared Monday to continue his examination of the defense's own witnesses along this line and later to put on witnesses for the State further to discredit the reliability of the test made by Dr. William D. Owens and three other men.

The Solicitor made a hard fight to get the evidence in. He made as hard a fight to keep out the testimony of Dr. Owens, but failed. When Harllee Branch, one of the newspaper men who made the trip through the factory with Conley, was called to the stand by the defense to testify in regard to an interview with the negro, Dorsey, as soon as the direct examination was concluded, started to question the witness as to his estimate of the time it required Conley to go through the factory May 30 and illustrate his version of the manner in which the Phagan girl's body was taken into the basement.

An instant and strenuous objection came from the lawyers for the defense. They protested taking the time that it required Conley to go through with the details he had described on the ground that he, knowing the possibility that he might later be charged with the crime itself, might probably have hurried through with it so as to leave the impression that the deed could have been done within the time that Frank was in the factory between 12:56 and the time he left for home.

Dorsey argued that the judge had let in an experiment by persons who knew of the alleged events of the day only by hearsay, so why not let in an experiment by a person who actually had taken a part in them. His argument won.

Victorious in this legal skirmish, the Solicitor was ready to press his advantage when court reopened Monday for the fourth week in the trial of Leo M. Frank on the charge of murdering the Phagan girl. His main endeavor was to show the unreliability of the estimate of Dr. Owens and his associates in the experiment by the defense. He also wanted to approximate as nearly as possible the actual time that it took Conley to reproduce the events, which the State claims were a part of the tragedy.

Tests Seem Fair To Neither Side.

So far as the testimony has developed along this line the time required for the enacting of Conley's story does not appear to be a fair test either for the State or the defense. The testimony already in is to the effect that the elapsed time from the moment Conley entered the factory building in charge of the officers until he went from second floor to basement and back again was about 47 minutes.

This estimate is evidently unfair to the State, as Conley was stopped several times in his narrative and was asked on other occasions to stop and illustrate the position of the dead girl's body. The interruptions served to lengthen the time that the negro took in going through the impressive drama.

The Solicitor from the witnesses yet to be examined will seek to show that these interruptions consumed an exceedingly large share of the time, and that the time occupied in the actual reproduction of the events of the day of the traged, was comparatively brief.

A number of character witnesses were still to be called by the defense, if Frank's lawyers still were of the intention to omit no one who might help the case of the accused man, it was certain that most of the day would be taken up with the testimony of the character witnesses who had not as yet been examined.

The defense also had planned to go into a number of interviews that were published during the progress of the investigation into the murder mystery in an effort to show that the detectives from the first have been obsessed with the idea that no one else than Frank could have been guilty of the crime, and that they have refused to entertain any other theory or follow out the possibility of the guilt of any other person.

If this phase of the investigation is developed, it is likely that Chief of Detectives Lanford will be called to the stand and asked concerning his attitude throughout the search for the murderer.

The State has more than a score of character witnesses to be used in the rebuttal of the testimony given by persons who have sworn to the good character of the young factory superintendent. It is known that a number of them have sensational stories to disclose. What part of their testimony will be permitted to go on the record is problematical.

The defense has fought strenuously the introduction of testimony by which the State has sought to show that Frank has been guilty of grossly immoral conduct.

Frank's lawyers brand these stories as slanderous and untrue. They are able to refute them, they say, by the word of scores of reputable citizens but they assert that Frank is not being tried on any other charge than that of murder and that, therefore, the testimony in regard to alleged acts of immorality is utterly irrelevant, immaterial and illegal.

Doors Closed on Specific Instances.

Since the ruling of Judge Roan, closing the doors to the introduction by the State of evidence relating to particular incidents of alleged misconduct, Solicitor Dorsey has been unable to get substantiation of his charges of immorality before the jurors. The sole exception to this was in the cross-examination of Miss Irene Jackson, one of the defense's witnesses. Frank, according to Miss Jackson, three times to her knowledge came to the girl's room, opened the door and looked in upon the girls there and then turned and walked away.

The State will construe this as one of the indications of Frank's attitude toward his young women employees. The defense will set forth that the young women were supposed to be at work at 7 o'clock and Frank looked into the room fifteen minutes later to see whether they had arrived or not.

BOTH GLYNN AND SULZER TRY TO RUN STATE

Each Sends Representative to Open Bids on $1,000,000 Capitol Construction Contract.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 18.—Forces were marshaled to-day for another week of bitter warfare in the fight between Governor William Sulzer, the impeached Executive of this State, and Lieutenant Governor Martin H. Glynn, for possession of the gubernatorial prerogatives pending Mr. Sulzer's trial on charges of high crimes and misdemeanors next month.

A physical clash between the two aspirants was expected to-day at a meeting of the Trustees of Public Buildings, which was scheduled to open bids for $1,000,000 worth of work on the burned portion of the Capitol. Under the law the secretary of the Governor is a member of the Trustees of the Public Buildings. Chester C. Platt, private secretary to Mr. Sulzer, was designated to go to the meeting and receive the bids turned in by State Architect Pilcher.

Lieutenant Governor Glynn, who claims to be the constitutional acting Governor, directed his secretary, Frank A. Tierney, to get the bids and to prevent them from falling into Platt's hands.

This was just one of the incidents in the tie-up of the State machinery which involves millions of dollars in various ways.

Tom Lawson Backs Anti-Tammany War.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 18.—A national campaign against Tammany, backed by a $2,000,000 fund and directed by a country-wide committee, was indicated to-day in telegrams exchanged between Thomas W. Lawson and Lyn J. Arnold, president of the Knickerbocker Press, of this city.

Lawson, who promised a few days ago to give $100,0000 and to undertake the raising of twenty times that sum for fighting the Tamany organization, says New York City and State is under contrôl of "the system" and that Sulzer's impeachment can be made an opportunity "to let daylight into the black cave where works the system's machinery."

"I believe," he adds, "if publicity is set to work rightly, as it can be with right men and money, hell will be to pay for the system before the Sulzer trial is half over."

Arnold replied, also by wire, that his paper to-morrow morning will call upon patriotic men to form a committee to receive cotributions and perfect an organization in Sulzer's behalf.

Sees Wrath of Lord In Drouth in Kansas

ZION CITY, ILL., Aug. 18.—"Kansas and adjoining States have reaped a harvest of wrath of the Lord. It will do them no good to pray for rain. The drouth which has affected the land there has been the Lord's direct answer and warning that he will not send rain to grow hogs to pollute the people."

This explanation of the drouth in Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri and Nebraska where corn crops were ruined, was offered by Wilbur Glenn Voliver, successor of John Alexander Dowie, as the head of Zion City.

Life's Worth Living in Georgia

If you prefer city life, there are no better cities in the world than those in Georgia. If you prefer village life, the smaller towns in Georgia offer every inducement.

If you prefer country or farm life, Georgia offers greater inducements than any State in the Union. Georgia lands work the year round, from two to five crops being gathered off of the same land each year---crops that are profitable.

Climate and Soil

The climate is such that farmers do not have to house stock during the winter, there being good grazing the entire year. For raising cattle and stock Georgia offers greater inducements than can be found elsewhere.

The soil is suited for almost anything that grows and can be utilized the entire year. The prices at which good farm land can be purchased at present in Georgia are so low that it is a matter of comment---some thinking that the land is not so good as stated. The land is good, but there are thousands of acres that are now lying idle and the good people of Georgia are anxious for good farmers to come among them. Consequently the land is cheaper here than elsewhere.

LEO FRANK'S OWN STORY TO ADD FINAL TOUCH TO STATE'S GREATEST TRIAL

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

It is rather an extraordinary thing that on this Monday, the beginning of the fourth week of the most remarkable murder trial ever held in Georgia, the interest should be in nowise abated or lessened, and that the opening of court to-day saw the biggest, hungriest and most insistent crowd of curious spectators yet on hand at the opening of court.

Far from letting go the Phagan mystery, the public to-day seems to be gripping it even more eagerly than ever before.

Opinion still is widely divided as to the guilt or innocence of Leo Frank, and there have been many switches of conclusion and reversals of theory, pro and con, within the past week, and no doubt there is much more of the same sort of thing to come.

People to-day believe Frank guilty who started out believing him innocent, and the rule is working right around the other way, moreover!

Despite the many things that have been said and the countless things that have been written of the Frank trial and all that led up to it, it remains, on the threshold of its fourth week, the most absorbing melodrama ever enacted in Atlanta—the most bitterly fought and the most uncompromisingly contested trial known to the criminal history of the State of Georgia.

The principal parties to the case are, of course, Mary Phagan, the dead girl; Leo Frank, defendant at bar, and Jim Conley, the grimly accusing negro.

Four months ago no one of these people was known to many Georgians.

Mary Phagan, a sweet little working girl, had a circle of perhaps a hundred friends—not 1 per cent of the population of Atlanta ever had heard of her.

Frank Little Known.

Leo Frank, the superintendent of the National Pencil Factory, was hardly known by very many more people—he had a business and college acquaintance, and a limited circle of social intimates. Not more than 2 or 3 per cent of Atlanta's population ever had heard of him.

Jim Conley, the negro, more than well known in police circles, along the way of the "Butt In" bar in Peters street, and a familiar figure enough along Darkest Decatur, numbered among his respectable acquaintances not more than 50 people—if nearly so many—perhaps.

Now—less than four months after the terrible deed enacted in the pencil factory on Saturday, April 26—there is not a hamlet a crossroads store or a country or city home in all Georgia that has not heard of every party to the sordid story, and that has not discussed everyone of them, together and singular, from every point of view imaginable!

It is more than morbid curiosity upon the part of people that prompts this great and never-flagging interest in the Phagan case—it is more than the mere fascination of crime that links the heart and mind of the people to it.

In the case of Leo Frank there is that indescribable element we call "human interest," that vague and elusive thing that tugs at the heartstrings and nags at the conscience—there is the knowledge upon the part of the public that a monstrous crime has been committed, and that responsibility for it must be fixed, no matter the cost and no matter the effort!

The public does not clamor for Leo Frank's life so much, nor for Jim Conley's—it demands that responsibility for Mary Phagan's brutal murder be fixed, and it will not be satisfied until that responsibility IS fixed.

At the same time, I believe—and I have believed all along—that the public wants to see justice done and fair play indulged in.

If Frank is not guilty he has been punished already beyond reason or reparation. He should be turned loose, with every amend decency and mistaken zeal may summon to their embarrassed effort at righting a frightful wrong.

If, however, he is guilty, and that is shown, then the inconvenience and discomfort accorded him thus far will matter little, if anything.

It is a tremendously big game the lawyers are playing in the stuffy little courtroom in the old City Hall Building.

On one side is the majesty of the law of the land, that must be maintained at any and all cost—that majesty of the law that may be invoked in behalf of the humblest no less than the highest. On the other hand is the defendant—an abstract thing in the sight of the law.

On one side is the great State of Georgia, calling for a "tooth for a tooth and an eye for an eye"—on the other side are those guaranteed rights of citizens embodied in Frank, that must not be challenged lightly or without complete and compelling reason.

It Is a Big Game.

It is a big game—it involves that most precious of all gifts of God, a human life, and a human reputation, a home and the happiness thereof. It is a game, nevertheless, that involves on the contrary a sinister charge of utter unworthiness upon the part of the man who still protests his rights to these precious gifts, jealously given of a Divine Power, and as jealously guarded by His laws, no less than by the laws of human beings.

One can not get away from the conclusion, cited many times, that, after all is said and done, Frank's character will determine the verdict in the case now on trial.

His character will be found to be his greatest asset and his most sure dependence, in this his hour of pressing peril—as his lack of it, if shown, must prove to be his final and everlasting damnation.

Frank, by injecting his character in issue, has challenged the worst upon the part of the State.

He has cited scores of witnesses to uphold it—he has made a brave, and maybe an abundant, showing.

The State, however, says it will break down that character—that it will show Frank's unspeakable depravity, even as charged glibly and smugly by the negro, Conley, as yet uncorroborated by any person the most abandoned would care to believe.

If the State can do this thing——

Can it be possible that Frank, through all these years, has been leading a double life?

Can it be true that he has, while professing to be an honorable and upright man, a faithful husband, a dutiful and worthy son, a deserving and decent friend among his neighbors and his kind, nevertheless been, really, a moral degenerate, an ignoble and deceitful creature—and can it be that these things, so long and so cleverly concealed, at last led him to murder?

The State's Contention.

The State holds that his family circle, his intimate social acpuaintances, and his business associates, would, as a matter of fact, be the last people in the world to know the truth of Frank's double life—for, say they, Frank would employ every artifice and summon to his aid every possible device to keep those very people from discovering the truth concerning him.

This, so the State contends, is precisely what Frank did do—and in that way they justify his alleged intimacy with Conley and his quick calling upon Conley for help, when eventually he found himself with the blood of a human being on his guilty hands.

The State is asking a good deal when it asks the public to believe this of Frank, in the light of the evidence of his good character tendered last week, and it hardly is possible that the public WILL believe it, unless the State makes its charges crystal clear.

Men will ask themselves—and will ask themselves wisely—whose reputation is safe, if it may be brushed away and broken down by the uncorroborated word of such a creature as Conley?

But, Conley uncorroborated in one thing—while Conley corroborated is quite and altogether another!

The State is yet to be heard in rebuttal of Frank's character witnesses—and so judgement must be suspended pending their revelations.

The only point is—and it has been an evident point so long that to reemphasize it seems trite—the State must make good on its sinister charge of perversion and degeneracy upon the part of Frank, or its case will be greatly weakened, perhaps beyond repair.

I have an idea that Frank's statement on the stand may weigh heavily in the minds of the jury.

Frank the Star.

Indeed, it is not improbable that the very best jury speech and jury argument put forth in defense of Frank, with all due appreciation and respect of and for Mr. Rosser and Mr. Arnold, will be made by Leo Frank himself!

His statement, although not sworn to, will carry an appeal that hardly can be framed of other lips—either that, or it will fall flat and stale and of no consequence whatever.

The trial long ago resolved itself into a matter of Frank vs. Conley.

It is the defendant's word against the negro's.

Both have self interest in the verdict—the life of one or the other must pay the forfeit of Mary Phagan's murder.

The forthcoming statement of Frank, and the rebuttal of the character witnesses, constitute the two events ahead that may, within themselves, make or mar this case, as one may come to view it eventually.

And it is this situation, no doubt, that holds up the interest to-day, as the fourth week begins—for, despite all that has gone before, the case is not yet nearly ended, and there still remains many things undetermined.

To The Young Expectant Mother

Women of Experience Advise the Use of Mother's Friend.

There is a certain degree of trepidation in the minds of most women in regard to the subject of motherhood. The longing to possess is often contradicted by the inherent fear of a period of distress.

But there need be no such dread in view of the fact that we have a most noble remedy in what is known as Mother's Friend. This is an external application that has a wonderful influence and control over the muscular tissues of the abdomen. By its daily use the muscles, cords, tendons and ligaments all gently expand without the slightest strain; there is no pain, no nausea, no nervousness; what was dreaded as a severe physical ordeal becomes a calm, serene, joyful anticipation that has its impress such as our foremost teachers of Eugenics are striving to drill into the minds of the present generation.

In almost every community there are women who have used Mother's Friend, and they are the ones that recovered quickly, conserved their health and strength to thus preside over families destined by every rule of physiology and the history of successful men and women to repeat the story of greater achievement.

Mother's Friend is prepared after the formula of a noted family doctor by the Bradfield Regulator Co., 128 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Write them for their instructive book to expectant mothers. You will find Mother's Friend on sale by all drug stores at $1.00 a bottle.

Widow of Wealth 'Turkey Trots' at 78

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., Aug. 18.—In proceedings to test the competency of Mrs. Mary N. Gray to manage her $50,000 estate, it was testified that the 78-year-old widow had these fads:

Joy rides from Honesdale to New York.

Turkey trotting in the Wayne Hotel corridor.

Giving huge tips.

Wearing four skirts and a sweater to keep out evil spirits.

Robert H. Gray, of Denver, a nephew, says her physician has drawn exorbitant fees.

Patient Dies After 300 Neck Operations

BALTIMORE, Aug. 18.—After undergoing more than 300 operations during three years for the removal of a growth in his throat, George McDowell, 31 years old, formerly of Spartanburg, S. C., died in a hospital here while surgeons were making a last attempt to save his life.

For the last eighteen months McDowell breathed through a silver tube inserted in his throat. He had been under so many operations that he became immune to the effects of cocaine.

Barnesville Stages Hurry-Up Election

BARNESVILLE, Aug. 18.—Barnesville is in the midst of one of the liveliest and most unique municipal contests in many years. The white primary will be held August 25, and those nominated will be elected the next day.

A Mayor and three Aldermen are to be elected. For Mayor there are two candidates, James M. Cochran and Alderman A. H. S. Franklin. For the three aldermanic places there are already seven candidates, J. E. Bush, T. J. Berry, B. H. Butts, M. Burns, M. B. Fitts, W. T. Summers and W. C. Stocks.

Wilson's Own Dentist InNavy,Mann Charge

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18. — The charge that "the navy is making a farce" of the retirement age law, and the further disclosure that President Wilson has appointed his personal dentist to the reserve corps are made by Minority Leader Mann.

"While the retirement age in the navy is 62," said Mr. Mann, one of thees new dental surgeons is now over seventy-six. But he happens to come from the same town as the Secretary of the Navy. One of the surgeons is 62 years and another who is 42, was the personal dentist of the President."

Down Went His Gum, On Went His Train

ATLANTIC CITY, Aug. 18.—Chewing gum or tobacco while on duty has been forbidden the motormen by the management of the Short Line road.

Glen Grice bought a penny stick of gum at Ocean City just before he boarded his train for a run to this city. After the train had attained a 30-mile gait, Grice swallowed the gum. It lodged in his throat and shut off his wind.

The motorman fell over unconscious and the train, heavily loaded with passengers, ran for three miles before the conductor could stop it.

PASTOR TRIES TO SAVE M'NAUGHTON

Savannah Minister Declares That Flanders, Alleged Victim, Died From Natural Causes.

SAVANNAH, GA., Aug. 18.—The Rev. John S. Wilder, pastor of the South Side Baptist Church, has returned from Atlanta, where he appeared before the State Prison Commission in behalf of Dr. W. J. McNaughton, the Emanuel County physician who is in jail under sentence of death in September for the alleged murder of Fred Flanders.

All of the evidence has now been presented to the Prison Commission with the exception of one or two affidavits, which will be sent to Atlanta early next week. The commission is expected to act on the case on the first Monday in September. Immediately after the decision of the commission is rendered the matter will be taken up with the Governor. Everything will have to be done during the first week in September, because September 5 is the date set for the execution.

"I feel that nothing short of a pardon would vindicate an innocent man and correct one of the greatest mistakes ever made in Georgia," said Mr. Wilder, who expresses the utmost confidence that Dr. McNaughton will not be allowed to hang. "I have always contended that Flanders was not murdered, but died from natural causes. I think this has now been indisputably established. We have the sworn statements of seventeen of the most prominent physicians in Georgia, including an expert who gives more arsenic possibly than any other physician in the Southern States, all of them agreeing that Flanders did not have the symptoms of arsenic poisoning, but the symptoms of nephritis, or Bright's disease. If these medical authorities are correct, then no murder has been committed, and Dr. McNaughton should go free."

Cool Days Promised As Breezes Return

The breezes, which had been on a strike for the past few days, were back at work Monday, keeping Atlanta's business section cool. The thermometer registered 70 degrees at dawn, after a night cool enough to make a blanket appreciated.

Although September is usually one of the hottest months in Atlanta, Forecaster VonHerrmann says it will be an unusually cool month this year.

Fair weather Monday night and Tuesday is predicted by the local bureau.

THAW'S ESCAPE FROM ASYLUM COMPLETE

Noted Prisoner Flees U. S. on Yacht—Can Not Be Extradited, Says Whitman.

it was formerly known. They spent money freely and devoted considerable time to scouting about the country.

In answer to queries they said they were preparing to locate for the summer and wanted to find a quiet, restful spot. Friday evening they returned in an eighty-horsepower automobile. The size and strength of the car also caused much curiosity. They had with them men who registered as Roger Thompson and Eugene Duffy. A little later the party was joined by a fifth man, who registered as Thomas Flood. It was he who took the launch to Beacon. Flood was afterward identified as the reckless driver of the touring car who took Thaw across the Connecticutt State line at 70 miles an hour. He was the most reckless of the party.

Saturday morning the men left the Holland early and were not seen about the hotel again. From the talk of the men an impression arose that they were professional gun-fighters recruited from gangs in this city and were paid liberally to risk getting Thaw to safety. One of them, after drinking considerably in the barroom at the Holland Hotel, said: "It was his business to help good fellows."

Reward of $500 Offered.

Following the escape, Superintendent Raymond F. C. Kieb, of Matteawan Asylum, offered a reward of $500 for Thaw's arrest as a "dangerous fugivtive."

Dr. Kieb's belief is that Thaw made his way around Long Island and is now bound for Europe. Dr. Kieb feels that his personal reputation and integrity as a public official are at stake, and has personally hired a private detective agency to trail Thaw.

So closely has Roger O'Mara, the Pittsburg private detective, been connected with Thaw since the shooting of White that some persons jumped to th conclusion that O'Mara was concrnd in some way with Thaw's escape. This was heightened by the fact that one of the men at the Holland Hotel slightly resembled him. Another posed as "Roger" Thompson. A Pittsburg telegram states, however, that O'Mara was in Pittsburg yesterday.

Mrs. Mary Thaw, mother of Harry K. Thaw, who has spent nearly a milli nodollars in trying to restore his liberty, was surprised to learn of her son's escape. She said she had come here in response to a requst from Harry that she pay him a visit.

The New York police department is keenly interested in the search for Thaw and have sento ut a general alarm with a description of the fugitive. The detective bureau will flood the country with circulars bearing Thaw's picture.

"There is no doubt in my mind that Thaw will return at once to the vices to which he was addicted, including not only drink and drugs, but moral perversion. The moment he takes a drink of whisky or a bottle of wine he at once becomes not only irresponsible, but he is almost certain to revert to the delusions of persecution which he has cherished, and is likely to single out any of the persons he believes has wronged him."

Jerome Fears Thaw.

In this connection, friends of former District Attorney William Travers Jerome have warned him to be on his guard. Jerome prosecuted Thaw and did more than any other man to keep Thaw in Matteawan. Jerome has admitted time after time that he would never be safe with Thaw at liberty.

"I feel morally certain he will try to kill me as soon as he is liberated, if he ever is freed, and for that reason I am doing all in my power to keep him in Matteawan," said Jerome once.

Thaw shot Stanford White on the Madison Square roof garden on the night of June 25, 1906. The jury in the first trial disagreed but at the second trial Thaw was acquitted. He was then placed in Matteawan Asylum, an institution for the criminally insane. His case was the most sensational in the criminal history of North America and aroused wide interest throughout the civilized world.

His aged mother had stood by him loyally to the end and to-day expressed heartfelt satisfaction that her boy had at last been able to secure his freedom, even though he could not effect it in a legal way. Thaw was committed to Matteawan by Justice Dowling early in 1906.

The escape of Harry K. Thaw from Matteawan Asylum Sunday morning about 7:45 o'clock was the climax of the dramatic career of the young Pittsburg millionaire.

A careless sauntering into the courtyard of the institution, a gradual drawing nearer to the gate as the time came for the early rounds of the milkman, a lightning dart through the gate as it was opened to receive the vender of milk, a leap into a six-cylinder racing auto that stood across the road, a cloud of dust as the big machine lurched forward and gathered speed—and the slayer of Stanford White was gone like a rocket for the Connecticut State line, 30 miles away.

Ten minutes after Thaw dashed through the asylum gates under the very eyes and arms of Howard H. Barnum, a keeper, the big black car was plunging through the hamlet of Stormville, ten miles away.

Swaying from side to side, siren shrieking and the opened exhaust keeping up a continuous roar, the big machine passed through the village at 70 miles an hour.

Early risers saw Thaw and the men who had aided him to escape crouched in the machine to escape the clouds of dust and the rush of the wind.

Escape Carefully Planned.

Thaw's escape evidently was carefully planned and consummated without a hitch. He was aided by five men, four of whom came to Matteawan and registered at the village hotel four days ago. The fifth, supposed to be the driver of the big car, came Saturday and registered under the name of Thomas Flood, of New York.

The others gave their names as Roger Thompson, Richard D. Bustle, Michael O'Keefe and Eugene Duffy, all of New York. They brought with them a black limousine and a black touring car, the most powerful machines ever housed at a Matteawan garage. The limousine was abandoned after Thaw made his spectacular dash for liberty.

The four men who came first spent most of their time in the barroom of the hotel, and earned the name of "easy spenders." They talked volubly on a number of subjects, but refused to divulge the nature of their business in Matteawan. Thompson replied to all questions with a grin and the statement that his business was "helping good fellows who have gotten into trouble."

Signal Is Given.

At 7:30 o'clock Sunday morning Harry Thaw, long since risen and fully dressed, paced slowly back and forth in his room, with now and then a glance through the barred windows. Ten minutes before the execution of the escape plans, Thaw took his last look through the bars.

He saw the big black touring car, trailed by the limousine, loafing slowly along the road, apparently with no particular destination or purpose. He saw the touring car give one crazy lurch across the highway, the signal agreed upon. In front of the cars the milkman's wagon, that was to open the doors of the asylum to freedom, jangled and clanged with its load.

Thaw gave a last glance around the bare room in which he had spent his time since he was adjudged insane, thrusting into his pockets the few knicknacks he prized. Carelessly he sauntered through the corridors and out into the courtyard, whistling.

Howard Barnum, the keeper on duty at the gate, saw nothing unusual in the apeparance of Thaw. The slayer of Stanford White, by his conduct at the asylum, had become a "trusty," and no thought of his escape was entertained. He paid no attention when Thaw moved toward the gate.

He Dashes Through Gate.

As the jangling milk wagon drew up in front of the asylum gates, the touring car and limousine came alongside and stopped, but their engines kept throbbing. Thaw moved closer to the gate. He stopped whistling and stood poised, ready for the dash. The milkman drove up with a clatter. Barnum opened the gate without a glance at Thaw. A figure dashed past him, brushing his coat sleeve—and Harry Thaw was running across the road toward the automobiles.

The man in the driver's seat swung open the door of the tonneau. Four pairs of hands dragged Thaw into the machine. There was a grinding crash as the gears were thrown into position, a blinding cloud of dust and smoke—and the big car plunged up the road.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

YOU MUST DECIDE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am in love with a young man who lives in the same neighborhood and is of a very high standard. He has told me he loves me and would like me to become his wife, but as he is a Hebrew and I am a Christian would like your advice, for I can not live without him. G. M. S.

This is a matter too serious for a third party to determine. Marriages of this nature are sometimes happy, but the risk is great. When it means an estrangement from one's family and friends, I would throw my influence against it.

BE PERSISTENT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 19 and deeply in love with a young lady one year my senior. One day I proposed to her and she said her parents would not permit the marriage because of the difference in nationality.

Please let me know what to do, for I love her. HEARTBROKEN.

You are too young to marry, even though you had their consent, so do not feel discouraged. Go on loving her; attend to your business duties faithfully; develop yourself mentally, and don't despair or worry. Make yourself such a desirable suitor that their objections will vanish.

DON'T MAKE THE EFFORT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a girl of 18 and in love with a man one year my senior. We have never kept company. He tells everyone he loves me, but while he is in my presence I fail to see it. How may I find out if he is true to me? I. H.

The man who tells "everyone" he loves a girl, and gives her no evidence, doesn't love her very much.

Unless you have made mutual vows of love, he can not be untrue to you. A man must make vows before he can break them. Do not fret yourself about him. Time for that when you are engaged.

YOU ARE A LITTLE EXACTING.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18, and for the past four months have been keeping steady company with a young man of 20. When I first became acquainted with this young man he was making a nice salary, but I told him that if he wanted to go with me he must change his profession, which he did, therefore starting at the bottom of the ladder again. It is also understood that he will not care to be married before three years, to which my parents and myself agree, provided we become engaged in about a month from now, which he absolutely refuses to do, claiming that he does not want to become engaged before next year. My parents have therefore forbidden my going with him under any other conditions.

Now, do you think that if he really loves me, as he claims he does, he would allow a matter of a few months to break our keeping company? The only reason he gives for not wanting to be engaged is that he is making a small salary, but if I and my folks are satisfied, I don't see why he should object. IN DOUBT.

He gave up his profession for you, starting at the bottom of the ladder again. I think he has conceded his share, and, under the circumstances, you should not nag him into an engagement until he is ready. Love is worth too much to risk it by the exacting attitude which I am afraid you are taking.

Two Birds—One Stone.

Norah had arrived from Erin's Isle a week before, and was with difficulty being "broken in" to the routine of an English household. Cleanliness was not a very strong point with her, and her cooking, apart from "spuds," was hardly all that could be desired.

"If you are not quite sure on any point, come and ask me at once," said her mistress.

Dinner was just about to be served when there was a clatter along the hall, and the breathless Norah poked her head around the dining room door.

"Please, ma'am," she asked, "an' how will I be knowin' when the puddin' is done enough?"

"Stick a knife into it," said her mistress, with a resigned air. "If the knife comes out clean, the pudding is ready to serve."

"Yes, ma'am," said Norah; "and I'll be after that crathur that's bollin' over."

"And, oh, Norah"—the mistress had an after-thought—"if the knife does not come out clean, you might stick all the rest of the knives into the pudding."

In a Nutshell

By MINNA IRVING.

WE heard with equanimity
That coal was soaring high,
We bore it when the price of meat
Went kiting to the sky;
When eggs and butter followed suit
We stood it like a sport,
But, lo, the worst has come at last—
The peanut crop is short.

Oh, what is summer time without
The tuber of delight?
We ought to bust the peanut trust,
We ought to make a fight;
We ought to put our woe in print,
We ought to go to court,
We ought to take the warpath when
The peanut crop is short.

The Mistakes of Jennie .:. By HAL COFFMAN

Being a Series of Chapters in the Life of a Southern Girl in the Big City

"No, no, my boy; I could not be so selfish."

CHAPTER XXV.

AFTER the row Jennie had with the installment man, she still owed $28 for her clothes. The man had come for his weekly payment on the clothes, which Tom had to pay to keep the man from literally tearing them off Jennie's back, for Jennie didn't have the money to pay him, and if Tom hadn't been there at the time Jennie would probably have had to do like other girls have done in such an emergency—gone out and GOT the money, never mind HOW.

When Jennie told Tom she still owed $28 for her clothes—that she foolishly bought and did not need—Tom left Jennie in the front room, saying he wanted to go in and talk to her mother a while.

Jennie's mother was lying in bed, and, sick as she was, managed a cheery smile at seeing Tom and told him she always regarded him as her boy, and that she had always hoped that some day he would marry Jennie. Tom did not tell Jennie's mother how much Jennie still owed on her clothes, for he knew that she had trouble enough without worrying any more. Instead, he told her that he had a little money saved up—for the time that Jennie would consent to marry him—and that he wanted her to take it and to go down to the beach somewhere, take a good rest, get well again and take Jennie with her.

At this the good woman cried and said over and over, as she patted Tom's hand:

"No, no, my boy. I could not be so selfish as to take your money that was meant for yours and Jennie's happiness."

A VERY NEAR THING .:. A Complete Short Story

VANSITTART was going to smash. At least, it looked ominously like it. Nobody said it openly. Nominally, nobody was supposed to even suspect that it was likely. But men whispered it to one another in the city; and when men whisper about a thing it is oftener far more serious than if they talked about it in their loudest voices.

"There's about one chance in a million for me!" he told himself. "If the Oriental Bank floats, I'm safe; if it closes down, I'm finished. And it will close down unless a miracle happens, and—Lily will know that the gods have given her her revenge!"

Vansittart's world would have been astonished, perhaps cynically amused, had it seen him now. After locking the door of his room from the inside, to render intrusion impossible, he opened a secret drawer in his desk by touching a spring, and took from it a bundle of letters and a photograph.

The letters were love letters, and the photograph that of a girl.

A fair-haired girl, with a pretty face, without Vansittart's pitiless power, but brave and patient, with love and faith in her eyes. And the letters had been written by a girl to the man to whom she had given her heart, whose wife she expected to be.

"By love!" muttered Vansittart, as he put the letters down, "she's had to wait for her revenge, but it looks as if Fate is going to give it to her at last."

It had been an ordinary, commonplace story of a man's selfishness and falsity and a girl's outraged trust and love. Vansittart had been engaged to Lily Gordon, a girl clerk in the city, before he had begun to rise, and had left her without a word to fight life's battle for herself as soon as he began to grow rich.

Too Late.

"I was a cur, a mean cur!" he muttered. "But it's too late to think of it now. If I go down she'll know. Will she be glad, I wonder?"

He tried to laugh, but there was a harsh discordance in the sound. Replacing the letters and the photograph in the desk, he went out.

He felt he could not sit there waiting for ruin to come.

There was a man in the city, another speculator, named James Harper, whom Athol Vansittart had helped many times, by whose side he had stood in more than one threatening crisis. Harper had not the power to save him in his turn, but Vansittart felt that he must talk to someone if something in his brain were not to snap.

So he went to him now.

Harper was a keen-featured man, with a trick of half curving his lips in what promised to be a smile and never became one. He was alone in his office when Vansittart entered and grasped his hand cordially.

"You've come to talk over things, old chap?" he said. "I'm glad of it. I'd like to cheer you up. But wait a minute."

He closed the inner door.

"Anything wrong?"

"Oh, no; only a new girl I've got to help with my letters, and I don't want her to hear too much of our talk. Business is one thing, but a confidential chat between friends is another. I hope it's not so bad with you as some fools are making out?"

"I'm afraid some fools are rather wise," returned Vansittart, grimly. "It is no use blinking things. I'm done for if the Oriental closes down."

Harper's tone was sympathetic, but he was pretending to pick up something he had dropped on the floor and his eyes were very eager.

"Look here, Harper," Vansittard said with an effort; "I've come to you because I believe you're the only true friend I've got. As I said, I shall pull through if the bank stands firm. But I don't think it can. It's in a bad way itself, and if it can't raise a big loan practically at once it will close its doors. And if it does that I can't face the music."

"Surely, it's not so bad as that?"

Very Desperate.

"I tell you it is!" Vansittard answered, fiercely. "I shall owe more than I can pay. I shall be disgraced as well as ruined. But I'm not going to stop to face it. Harper, if—if anything happens to me, do your best to prevent too much mud being thrown on my name. It's all you can do."

There was a threat of self-destruction in his tense expression, if not on his lips. Harper knew it, but he did not endeavor to stop him or to argue with him. He only gripped his hand once more, with a few conventional words of sympathy.

And when Vansittart had gone Harper laughed.

Laughed, and then sat considering and frowning, until he suddenly struck his hand on his desk with a low, triumphant exclamation, as though he had hit on a way of accomplishing something that had seemed impossible before.

He left his office hastily, and when he had gone the inner door opened and there came out a girl, with love and terror on her colorless face.

It was late before Vansittart went home. He had gone back to his office and waited for news, but none had come. He left the place at last with a morbid conviction strong on him that he would never return to it. He hailed a hansom, but the man had to ask him twice before he was told where to drive him.

It seemed to Vansittart a matter of indifference where he went. It was not that he had abandoned all hope. He clung to the gambler's belief that there is always a last chance. But he was too restless and excited to fix his mind on anything except the news he was waiting for.

Ah, what was that?

The Crash.

The street was quiet, all but deserted. There was a gas lamp opposite Vansittart's door, and the illumination was gleaming on a pink something. It was the placard of an evening newspaper which a hawker was offering for sale.

He hastened toward it. In bold, merciless letters, the words stared at him:

"FAILURE OF THE ORIENTAL BANK."

He bought a paper, oblivious that he gave a sovereign for it. In the space reserved for late news were two smudged lines, stating that the Oriental Bank had closed its doors that evening and posted a notice outside that they would not reopen on the morrow.

So it was all over. It was useless to hope against hope any longer. His career was finished. He was a ruined man, with disgrace awaiting him if he lived.

He let himself into his house with a latch key, and went straight to the library, where he had been in the habit of working. At first he switched the electric light on full, but at once lowered it to a tiny shimmer. No need of much light for what he was going to do!

A revolver was ready to hand when he opened a drawer. There was nothing else for him to do.

* * * * * * * *

"No, no! Listen to me, Athol. I've come to tell you—I've come to tell you it's a lie."

Lily was beside him, struggling with him to get the revolver away. He stared at her stupidly.

"A lie?"

"The placard. The bank was not stopped. Mr. Harper had the false placard and the two lines of false news put in one copy of the paper. I have proof of it; I have found the man who printed it!"

The Plot.

He was hard to convince. But she told him how she had been in the inner office while he was talking to Harper, and how, after he was gone, Harper's manner had been so suspicious that she had followed him to see what he meant to do. He had gone to a printer. It was not for a long time after he had left the shop, however, that she half forced and half frightened the printer to confess that Harper had paid him handsomely to turn out the sham placard and insert the two lines in the paper. He had said it was for a joke, but the girl had not believed it. She had guessed that he intended to use the placard and doctored newspaper to drive Vansittart to desperation by leading him to believe that all was lost.

"So I came here to tell you," she said. "I saw you come in, but you did not see me. So I had to knock, and when the servant opened the door I ran past her. I had seen the light flash from the window into the street, and that helped me to find my way to you. The placard is a lie!"

Vansittart looked at her; there was

.:. One Woman's Story .:.

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XXII.

SO agitated had Mrs. Danforth been at the news of Mary's break with Gordon Craig that she lay down on the couch in the tiny parlor until the dishes were washed and put away. This task the daughter performed quickly and noiselessly. She was thankful that her mother had asked no more questions just then, for she felt that she had not the courage to reply to them. Her work done, she glanced nervously at the clock. It was now a quarter past eight. Bert Fletcher would be here soon. She must prepare her mother for the call. She went into the parlor and, drawing a chair close to the couch, took the pale and worn woman's hand in hers.

She Started Nervously.

"Mother, dear," she said, "I think you ought to go to bed now, for you do not feel well enough to see company."

Mrs. Danforth started nervously. "Company!" she exclaimed. "Why, what company could you be expecting?"

Mary smiled bitterly at the suggestion implied by the question.

"That's true, mother," she said, a hard ring in her voice. "I am not troubled with friends or guests, am I? But this evening will be an exception, for I am expecting a caller—Mr. Fletcher."

Her mother sat up and eyed her keenly. "Mr. Fletcher?" she asked. "Is he the man who was so nice to you one evening last winter?" There was eagerness in the tone, and as she noted this the girl appreciated that her loving, gentle mother was actually anxious to have her marry if it would mean freedom from care for herself and the girl.

"Mary, why don't you answer me?" demanded Mrs. Danforth.

Mary started guiltily. "I beg your pardon, mother," she said. "Did you ask me a question? I must have been absorbed in my own thoughts. What did you ask, dear?"

"Only if this Mr. Fletcher is the man who brought you home one night in a cab when it was stormy?"

"Yes," assented Mary, "that is the man."

"Well, I remember that you once said he was very kind," remarked her mother, watching the girl's face.

"Yes," said Mary, "he is kind—even if he is not a cultured gentleman and does murder the king's English. But, after all, truth and fidelity are more than education and manners. I have had enough of men of culture and of nothing else." She tried to change her sharp speech into a laugh that her mother might not suspect how sore her heart was.

Mary Remembered.

The widow replied with one of her sighs, but this time the sound was indicative of hope and satisfaction.

"He evidently knows that you are a lady, and he treats you as if you were. So he must be something of a gentleman himself. I am ready to like him if he is good to you. Oh, my child," lifting one of her daughter's hands to her pale lips and holding it there, "nobody, not even you, knows what I have gone through in seeing you overworked and in trying to save and manage here at home. There have been times when but for you I would have prayed to die."

Mary remembered how, less than two hours ago, she had said to herself: "If it were not for mother I would want to die." But she smiled reassurance into her mother's face.

"Since we need each other, mother," she said, jestingly, "let us both determine to live for each other. And there's a better time coming for us both."

The mother looked at her anxiously. "You mean that, Mary? You are not keeping the truth from me or trying to pacify me by seeming hopeful when you are not, are you, dear?"

"No, mother," replied the girl. "I am speaking the truth when I say that I believe there is a better time coming for you."

She did not add "and for me." Perhaps she did not think of it.

"I do not like to seem inquisitive," Mrs. Danforth went on, "but I am wondering how long ago you broke your engagement to Gordon—Mr. Craig, I mean."

The girl hesitated a moment before replying, and she avoided her mother's gaze.

"Not so long ago," she said indifferently. "You know I always think that when people find they are not suited to each other it is best for them to agree to disagree with as little fuss and talk as possible."

There was so much finality in her manner that the elderly woman ventured to say no more about the Texan. Yet she was not satisfied, and soon asked timidly:

"This—this Mr. Fletcher—do you like him very much, Mary, my dear?"

"I have told you, mother," said the girl, "that he is a kind man, and has been good to me—so why should I not like him?"

Her mother began another question, but a ring at the bell checked it.

"Good Night, Dear."

"Good night, dear," she said, rising hastily and hurrying into her own room.

When the door had closed behind her mother, Mary stood, her hands over her eyes. Perhaps she was praying, perhaps trying to collect her thoughts. But as the bell sounded forth a second summons she went slowly into the kitchen and pressed the button releasing the catch of the lower front door. For another minute she stood poised as if now, at this last moment before her guest's arrival, she would escape him, would avoid receiving him. Then, recovering her self-control and courage, she passed out into the narrow hall, opened her front door and stood waiting for the man whose footsteps she heard on the stairs ascending toward her.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THE most restful way for spending one's vacation is to watch one's neighbors. If they are idle, it makes the one on a vacation just indignant enough to make his blood circulate, and if they are working, the sight of their labors makes his own idleness soothing in contrast.

The man who lived next door interested himself with the Lysander John Appleton family, who were occupying their summer home. He watched them the day they moved in: Two women of regal bearing, a boy with a forehead like a Mansard roof, and a meek-looking man who might be a servant, the Appleton family being an ideal American family.

It was the women who interested the idle man the most. They were of such queenly bearing and had such perfect figures he longed for the fingers and skill of a Rodin. "I never," he murmured, "saw more perfectly-formed women."

They entered the house, closed the door, and for a half hour there was no outward evidence of occupancy, and then the man on the side porch saw a woman emerge from the back door the sight of whom made him throw back his head and laugh.

She had a figure like that of a feather-bed, and if she had ever had a waist line it had long ago moved up and become lost in the foothills of her mountainous bosom. She shook and quivered as she walked like a bowl of calves'-foot jelly, and while he gazed at her in bewilderment the door opened again and there emerged a younger woman so thin that she looked the same coming as going.

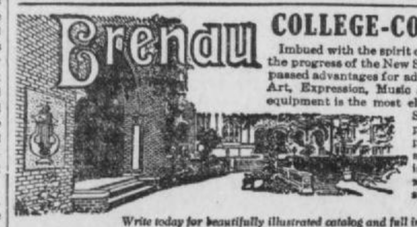

For a week he saw two women with perfect figures enter and emerge at the front door, and a feather bed and a bean pole from which garments drooped like a flag at half mast emerge and enter at the back door. Then one evening when he saw Lysander John sitting alone on the porch in front he walked across the lawn and asked for an explanation.

"They are the same women," said Lysander John sadly. "If you are interested, I will show you the means of the transformation."

He led the way upstairs to a dressing room where two long, vise-like garments hung over the back of a chair.

"The modern magician's wand," he said, pointing to two corsets."

The Ten Commandments of the Summer Wife

By DOROTHY DIX.

He is as a phonograph.

ARISE, sister, gird up thy straight front, put glad raiment upon thyself and take thy vacation; yea, take it though thou hast to fight for it with tooth and nail, for she that hath wrestled with the robber that lieth in wait in the butcher shop and the despoiler who abideth in the grocery store, and who hath provided the wherewithal her family is fed three times a day for three hundred and sixty-five days, needeth to slip the yoke for a space while the galled place healeth.

2. When thou takest thy vacation, go it alone. Be not as those foolish wives who say, "I have never been parted from my husband, and lo, where he goeth there will I go also," for belike thou hast gotten on thy husband's nerves and he would fain have a rest from thee.

3. Reflect that nine months of the year can a man rejoice and be exceeding glad to be married. Ten months can he steel his heart with fortitude to endure it, but on the twelfth month he noticeth that his wife's nose is crooked, and he knoweth her cooking. Therefore get thee hence on the twelfth month, and when thou shalt return to him he will make a feast at thy coming.

They shall mock thee.

4. Stay not too long, though, on thy vacation, for it is not good that a husband should be left alone to his own devices until he can find the secret spot wherein the clean shirt hideth itself and the fresh collars are secreted. Verily it was written in the Book of the Prophets that a little absence maketh the heart grow fonder, but too much absence inclineth it to another skirt.

5. When thou rockest in the chair that swayeth back and forth on the Summer hotel gallery, boast not thyself of thine automobile, and thy butler, and thy social prestige, and the diamonds thou hast left behind thee in thy husband's safe; for the women thou braggest to are the Daughters of Missouri, that even require to be shown, and they shall mock thee behind thy back as a liar.

Go it alone.

6. Tell not the secret of thy life. Reveal not the weaknesses of thy husband, and pull not forth from thy closet the skeleton where it is hidden because thou happenest to stroll in the twilight with a sympathetic sister, for lo she shall tell the tale to another, and she shall repeat it to still another, and scandal shall be heaped upon thy name.

7. When thou playest bridge, get thee a strangle hold upon thy purse, for peradventure the society dames with whom thou sportest shall shear thee even as a lamb is sheared on Wall Street, and thou shalt have to write home for more money.

8. Take not the lone Summer man away from the maidens when he fleest to thee as to a temple of refuge, because thou already hast a husband and cannot expect him to marry thee. Flirt not with such an one, but stand thou to one side and give the virgins their chance, for lo in these days a husband is scarce and hard to come at.

9. Listen not to the man who wandereth on the beach with thee in the moonlight and who sayeth, "Would God I had met thee in time," for behold he is but as a phonograph with one record, and hath already said the same thing to 981,735 other women. Also he draweth but twenty-five bones per in a department store, whilst thy husband hath skill with the shekels, so that thou adornest thyself in purple and fine linen and split skirts therewithal.

10. Forget not that gossip stalketh through the halls of a Summer hotel, seeking whom it may destroy; therefore bear thyself as though thou possest in a moving picture film and converse as though thou consortest with a dictagraph. So shalt thou meet thy husband with a glad smile when he cometh down on the Saturday afternoon train, and thy heart shall not quake with fear when thou thinkest of what one of the old cats who knit pink sweaters in the hotel lobby may reveal unto him.

Selah.

'Tain't No Use.

The tramp approached the proud citizen and asked for alms.

"'Go to the ant, thou sluggard.'"

"'Tain't no use, mister. Me aunt's jist as tight-fisted as me uncle an' all de rest uv me relashuns. I fear I'll have to go to work at last."

Childlife.

"Come, Willie," said his mother, "don't be so selfish. Let your little brother play with your marbles a while."

"But," protested Willie, "he means to keep them always."

"Oh, I think not."

"I say, 'Yes,' 'cause he's swallowed two of them already."

.:. The Coralbank Case .:.

By MATTHEW JAMES.

ONE of the smarest little robberies that has ever come under my notice," said Detective Hunter, of Scotland Yard, as he musingly lit his first cigar one night recently at my rooms in Portman Square, "was that perpetrated in the autumn of last year upon a Mr. Silas Jay, then residing in a pretty little house known as "Coralbank" and situated about half a mile beyond Windsor."

I was on the alert in an instant, for there were few things I like better than listening to one of Detective Hunter's professional experiences.

"Perhaps," he said, after a few moments' reflection, "I had better give you the particulars as they were narrated to me by Mr. Silas Jay himself, since I personally had nothing to do with the case."

The story ran as follows:

First, I must explain that Mr. Jay, who was a bachelor, was a man of many prejudices. He suspected everybody, and regarded all recognized and established institutions with unqualified distrust. Those that were national were torpid, and therefore mere shams, while those that were not were established chiefly for the fattening of financiers by any process, honest or otherwise, but more generally otherwise.

The existing police system held a prominent position in the former category, while banking houses figured no less conspicuously in the latter. This last opinion induced hmi to distribute his capital among six or seven banks, in order that, should any one of them fail and swindle him out of his money, his fortune would not be very materially impaired. Well, among these banking houses was one situated in Windsor, which, for the sake of convenience, he always used when at home, and in this bank the sum of $60,000 was deposited.

The Rumor Spreads.

How the rumor reached him I was never able to discover, but one day in October he presented himself in great excitement at the offices of the bank in question, declaring that he had heard it whispered they contemplated suspending payment, and demanding an immediate surrender of his credit balance of $60,000.

The manager indignantly repudiated the suspicion, but the old gentleman was thoroughly frightened, and finally the money was handed to him over the counter in the shape of a hundred $500 and two hundred $50 notes. These, as he afterwards explained to me, he intended depositing the following day in another of the local banks. But this intention was frustrated.

Early the next morning it was discovered that during the night an entry had been effected into the house, and the alarmed Mr. Jay, descending hastily to the library, discovered, to his mortification, that the larger of the two percels of bank notes, of the value of £10,000, had been abstracted from the drawer in which he had locked it. The smaller but more valuable parcel he had placed, for greater security, in a secret compartment of his secretary, and this, to his intense relief, he found to be intact. The ingenuisness of the contrivance had baffled the thief, who had been forced to retire without securing the bulk of the money.

Mr. Jay dispatched a servant with a telegram, which he had himself indited requesting the authorities at Scotland Yard to send down a detective at the "earliest possible opportunity."

Half an hour later the servant returned without having dispatched the telegram and accompanied by a tall, shrewd-looking, businesslike man of about thirty-five. He was immediately conducted to the library, where, without loss of time, he introduced both himself and his errand to the astonished Mr. Jay. He spoke with a quick, intelligent precision that was not without its effect on his listener.

"Mr. Walter Craft."

"Mr. Silas Jay, I believe?" he said, briskly. "I chanced to be in the telegraph office when your servant entered, and, observing the direction of the message he was about to dispatch, took the liberty of interrupting it until I had seen you. But first allow me to introduce myself."

He took a card from his pocket and laid it on the table. Mr. Jay picked it up and read the name, "Mr. Walter Craft, detective inspector, Scotland Yard."

"As you see," resumed the stranger in a matter-of-fact tone, "I am connected with the establishment to which your telegram was directed, and, this being so, I took the further liberty of making myself acquainted with its contents. The closing words, 'earliest possible opportunity,' particularly appealed to my professional recognition, of the value of time; so, being on the spot, I have come straight to you to offer my services in discovering the perpetrator or perpetrators of the robbery which took place here last night, the chief particulars of which I have already elicited from your servant."

Mr. Jay rose from his chair, "I am glad you came," he said.

The detective bowed, and then, resuming his brisk, businesslike air, which appeared to afford his listener no small satisfaction, said:

"Then let us begin at once."

"Had you any other money in the house?" His keen, gray eyes searched Mr. Jay's face.

The latter hesitated. He was at all times a suspicious man. But the detective's keen insight into the position of things had strongly prepossessed himself in his favor, while his character was no doubt unimpeachable. So, after a moment's consideration, he told the story of the untouched parcel of bank notes, even going so far, in the exuberance of his spirits at the thief's failure, as to touch the secret spring which opened the hidden compartment and reveal to the detective the notes within. As he did so, however, he appeared to regret the action, for he made a movement as if to reclose the compartment, but the detective stopped him.

"Pardon me," he said quickly, "but did I understand you to say that you drew these notes from the bank with those that are missing?"

Silas Jay nodded.

"In that case," said the detective, emphatically, "I must ask you to allow me to examine these notes. A great deal may depend on my doing so."

The Suspicion.

Silas Jay reluctantly drew them from their hiding place and handed them to the detective. The latter turned them over, one by one, his fingers lingering long over the task. Then, with a half-suppressed sigh, he handed them back to their owner and watched that gentleman as he once more replaced them in the secret compartment of the secretaire, and heard the sharp, metallic click of the spring as it flew into position.

When this was done he asked to be allowed to see the servants, and one by one they were called into the library. He said but little to them, however, chiefly impressing upon them the necessity for silence on the subject of the robbery, and dismissed them once more to their respective duties. Then he turned to Mr. Jay.

"Now," he said briskly. "I think I may confide to you the fact that my investigations so far have not been without their reward. To-morrow morning I shall return and shall probably require to again examine—and, if may be necessary to photograph—the notes still in your possession. I will now bid you good-day, as there are several things that need to be done in the meantime."

At half-past ten the following morning there was a loud pealing of the front door bell, and a few minutes later a servant announced that two police constables in uniform requested to see Mr. Jay on a matter of sonsiderable importance. They were shown into the library, and awkwardly touched their helmets to the master of the house. They were typical country policemen—thickset, stolid-looking individuals, who might certainly form part of the arm of the law, but possessed no iota of its brains.

"Are you Mr. Silas Jay?" inquired one, in a slow, expressionless voice.

Mr. Jay admitted that such was the case.

"Well," explained the constable "we're in search of a feller who's wanted up in Brummagem for a little lob o' 'ousebreakin'. From information received"—he coughed to emphasize the professional phrase—"we know he's in this district, and we are hinformed that a man answerin' to his description was seen a-comin' into your 'ouse yesterday afternoon."

Silas Jay turned pale as a horrible suspicion crossed his mind. With a quick movement he pressed the secret spring of his secretaire, and a sigh of unutterable relief escaped his lips as he beheld the precious bank notes lying safely within their ingenious hiding place. Then, closing the compartment, he turned abruptly to the constables, who were watching him in evident curiosity, and said:

"He promised to be here at eleven this morning, and it barely wants a quarter to that now."

Instantly the men were on their feet.

"I wonder if he'll come?" said one.

"If he does," replied the other, "we've got 'im, and then we're safe for a stripe or two."

Eluded.

Simultaneously they moved to the window and stood looking out down the gravel paths that skirted the lawn and across the tall gates that led on the road. As for Silas Jay he was too bewildered even to think coherentiy and sat, with his chin resting on his hands, staring straight before him. An exclamation from one of the constables roused him.

"Here 'e is!" exclaimed the man.

Mr. Jay leaped to his feet and ran to the window. At the same instant a man who had just turned in at the gate came to a standstill and glanced irresolutely in the direction of the house.

"You infernal fools!" exclaimed Mr. Jay, with all his old disgust for the police returning in full force. "The fellow has seen your confounded uniforms through the window and has taken the alarm!"

It certainly looked as if this was actually the case, for at that instant the man turned and swiftly retreated through the gates and out on to the road, where he was immediately lost to view behind the tall hedge which shut in the lawn. With a smothered oath, Silas Jay threw up the widow, and, climbing out as quickly as his age would allow, started in hot pursuit. One of the constables followed his example, and, being a younger man, soon outstripped Mr. Jay.

When the latter reached the gate and looked down the road he beheld the bogus detective far away in the distance, speeding along through a cloud of dust, mounted on a bicycle. He was getting up a good pace, and, upon seeing Mr. Jay, waved his hand in token of his determination to catch the now rapidly disappearing thief. When Mr. Jay returned to the house he found that the other policeman had taken himself off.

The next day he was so restless that he could bear the house no longer, so he determined, as there was nothing to hinder him from doing so, to take the hundred $500 notes into Windsor and there deposit them in one of the local banks. He touched the concealed spring of his secretaire and the secret compartment flew noiselessly open. And then, with a wild cry, he staggered back against the wall and fell in a heap upon the floor. The bank notes were gone!

As soon as he recovered he rushed into Windsor and wired to Scotland Yard, and the chief sent me down to investigate. Both detective and his confederates, the country constables, were unknown—in that capacity, at least—to the authorities. When I communicated this information to Mr. Silas Jay I thought he would have a fit.

"What are you going to do?" he asked.

"I am afraid," I said, "there is but little left for me to do. I have been to the bank, and find that, owing to the ridiculous discussion which took place, the manager, in handing you the notes, omitted the customary precaution of taking down their numbers. All we can do, therefore, is to endeavor to trace the criminals by means of their description. But this is a tedious process, and not always crowned with success."

He handed me the card which the bogus detective had given him.

"An alias I suppose," I said. "And Walter Craft is not an inappropriate name for one of his calling."

A gleam of something like self-contempt shone in the old man's eyes.

"Scarcely as appropriate as my own," he exclaimed savagely, "for if any man richly deserves the name of Jay, I am certainly he!"

PERFECT HEALTH WOMAN'S CROWN OF GLORY

Did you ever observe a woman who has reached the age of 60 or even 70 in perfect health and say to yourself, "I hope I may grow old as gracefully as she does?" In order to reach a lovely old age women should guard against woman's diseases as they are the greatest menace to joy and gladness. Lydia E. Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

Happiness the Real Secret, Says One of the Stage's Prettiest Girls

"Being happy is the secret of being well, looking well and feeling well."

This is Miss Lois Josephine's recipe for obtaining and maintaining a beautiful face and figure.

Miss Lois Josephine in two poses.

"I AM determined to be happy," said Lois Josephine to me, smiling the while with the wistful sweetness that is the heritage of Irish blood. "I think that being happy is the secret of being well, and doing your work well, and looking well, and feeling well! Well, with all these wells to be acquired, my search for happiness is going to be untiring."

"Just how does one go about being happy—deliberately happy?" I asked. The blue-bird of happiness is an elusive-winged creature, and even when he is found at last at your own fireside he flies away as you clasp him in the welcoming circle of your hands.

"To be happy," answered Miss Josephine, with a tiny shadow of a smile that ought to lure happiness right to her side, never to depart, "to be happy, you like all the things you have to do, you trust your friends, you love all the beauty of nature around you—and you avoid unnecessary contact with tasks that you can not teach yourself to like. Oh, truly, I think that if you are happy you will be healthy and wealthy and wise and—and, yes, beautiful!"

Now, Miss Josephine is the Sunshine Girl in "The Passing Show of 1913" up at the Winter Garden in New York, and most charmingly does she and her partner, Wellington Cross, dispense gayety and sunshine as they dance their "joy of living" steps for you. Perhaps it is here that Miss Josephine found her inspiration to be a sunshiny girl in everyday life, but to be happy seems to me to be a most excellent way to acquire beauty.

Her Program.

"I am going to be so happy and contented with life that I will just naturally attract sunshine instead of shadow," went on the dainty girl whose picture delights you to-day. "I am going to be so pleased with my life and work that my expression can never be bitter or discontented, but instead must be sweet and friendly.

"Bitterness, discontent, envy, worry, anger, malice—I am going to banish them from my mind more and more earnestly as I get more and more power to pursue a search for happiness. If only girls knew what foes to beauty these evil feelings were they would all join me in a happiness hunt and get such sweet expressions that every one would be exclaiming: 'Well, I declare, if Mamie Jones isn't getting to be a beauty—she has the most attractive expression!'"

Suddenly Miss Josephine trilled out a merry laugh.

"Want to see one practical detail of my hunt for happiness? Well, I am making my feet happy, too! I wear flat-soled tennis shoes with buck instead of tennis soles, since rubber draws the feet, and so rest and relax the muscles and tendons of my feet. Narrow, tight, high-heeled shoes do not make your feet comfortable; they actually hurt your health, and they do great harm to the serenity of your face. You know the desperate expression you often see on the face of a girl whose shoes are too tight or are pitching her forward, with the strain coming heavily on already tired muscles. Well, an expression like that may carve its way in ugly lines right into a face. So I recommend making your feet happy if you want your face to look happy!

Ventral Courtesy.

"I am very polite to my digestion. I don't ask its overtaxed organs to handle heavy meats and rich sauces all through the hot summer. Instead, I eat vegetables and salads and the light meats, and give my system tonic food, instead of task food, in summer. An ideal summer program is to have meat on your dinner menu only two or three times a week. For instance: Chicken on Sunday, steak on Tuesday, lamb on Thursday, fish on Friday, and on the other three days try soup and a few extra vegetables for your dinner. Simple menus will give your 'digestery' a rested, happy feeling that will tell in a happy, rested-looking face.

"If you like it as well as I do, you will be delighted to drink three glasses of buttermilk during the day, and on rising and on retiring you will enjoy a bit of watercress with salt. Fine tonics for the system—both of these. Then to make your skin and muscles rejoice in the general prosperity, try a morning and evening rub with equal parts of alcohol and witch hazel. That will add a fine glow to the general beauty-dealing feeling of happiness you want to acquire. Oh, it is great fun working out a system whereby you will acquire happiness and all its attendant blessings of beauty and health and power to advance in the world."

As we left Miss Josephine's pretty home on a cross street, just west of Broadway, a friend called to the little blue linen-suited figure: "Hello, little bluebird!" And the bluebird is for happiness, you know.

LILIAN LAUFERTY.

Its Virtue.

President A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard, said at a dinner in his honor in Chicago:

"Early marriages are the best. It is neither good for the man nor for the community that he should wait until he is 28 years old before marrying."

President Lowell paused a moment and then smiling, he continued:

"Another trouble about late marriages is that the man's habits—his bad habits—are formed, and it's hard to break him of them. You know, perhaps, the story of the cigarette?

"A man of the old fashioned 'manly man' type—the soft, full-stomached type that drinks too much, belongs to too many lodges and must be superior to woman in everything—this man took umbrage over his wife's cigarette, the one modest cigarette that she took after dinner, though he, of course, smoked like a chimney all day long. And so he said, one evening:

"'I believe you think more of that nasty, poisonous cigarette than you do of me, your husband.'

"'Well, dear,' his wife replied, smiling and blowing a cloud, 'I can keep my cigarette, you know, from going out.'"

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Mildred Farley was a dressmaker," this gentleman went on. "If you read the newspapers you know that, and also know that she worked hard at her duties for some weeks before her death. But what is very strange in her connection, and, together with some other reasons unnecessary to state here makes it difficult for the police to settle down to the belief that her death was the simple suicide it at first seemed, is that no one has succeeded in discovering for whom she worked, and to what home she carried the various dresses she finished in that time. For though it may not be material to know this, and may not help the affair forward one jot toward its rightful issue, yet because it is a mystery and an unsolved one, those whose business it is to see every doubtful case made clear, have sent me to this house to see if some light can not be thrown by you upon it."

He paused and looked at Genevieve. She at once raised her eyes and surveyed him steadily.

"You think, then, that I knew Mildred Farley?" was her question, clearly and coldly uttered.

At Loggerheads.

"Did you not?" he inquired.

Her lips broke into a smile. "Ask Dr. Cameron," she suggested, and seemed to think she had answered his question.

Their visitor glanced at the doctor, met only a dubious shake of the head, and continued in a more formal tone.

"If you did not know Miss Farley, it is strange she should have made the dresses of your trousseau, Mrs. Cameron."

"I don't understand you," was that lady's reply. "My dresses were made by any one but that girl. This I can assure you most positively, sir."

"You can. We are then brought round to my first question: who was it that did make your dresses, Mrs. Cameron?"

It was smilingly said, but it caused her to flush with great indignation.

"Is it necessary that I should tell you?" she somewhat haughtily inquired.

"If you do not, I cannot prevent certain people I know from thinking it was Mildred Farley."

"And why?" Dr. Cameron now broke in. "What reasons have they or any one to connect my wife with that poor unfortunate?"

"Only a very material one which I leave to Mrs. Cameron to explain. In the room of that dead girl were found scraps and ends of silk and velvet, which were preserved by the police as pieces of the goods she had been lately making up into dresses. Among these was a morsel of trimming—here it is—and as this trimming or some just like it was seen by chance upon a dress worn by Mrs. Cameron, it struck one of our agents that she was in all probability the lady who had profited by this poor girl's handiwork."

"The conclusion of a man!" exclaimed Mrs. Cameron, with chill sarcasm. "I suppose there are in this city to-day, twenty ladies with just that trimming on their gowns."

"And with this gray velvet for a dress? And this—I do not know how to call it—for another? And this soft white silk so suitable for a bride's adorning, and"——

"Enough, enough," cried Mrs. Cameron, putting up her hands merrily as a half dozen samples of various goods and colors fell in a shower into her lap. "I own to these, but I do not own to Mildred Farley. You waste your time; you will never find that she did any sewing for me, however she came into possession of these pieces." And with a half careless, half disdainful smile, she flirted the bits aside, looking so imperious and so charming, that for a moment her visitor seemed a trifle abashed and half rose as if to go. "You see if I had anything to tell, I would," she murmured, graciously. "But I have not. I cannot explain any more than you how these samples from my dresses should have been found where they were. I can only look at them and wonder. Is that enough, sir?"

"Hardly," his look seemed to say, but he rose. "And you will not tell me where your dresses were made?" he smiled.

She shook her head, laughed and rose with an arch air.

The Back Porch.

"It is a secret I have kept even from my husband, but if you must have it, you must. And rising on tiptoe with a look of merry defiance at the doctor, she whispered something in the visitor's ear.

He listened, stared at her a moment and broke into a genial laugh.

"And so this is your secret," he cried. "Well, I know how to respect the secrets of a lady when such respect does not interfere with my duty."

And with a gallant bow he took his leave, expressing the hope that he had not made his call to lengthy.

After he was gone Dr. Cameron turned to his wife.

"And what did you whisper in that big man's ear to calm him so suddenly?"

"Ah, you want to know my secret too," she laughed. "Well, I told him that the work which has been so much admired had been done by no woman. That in my vanity and desire for originality I had had the poor taste to employ a man, and that I was secretly ashamed of it."

"She told you that?" cried Mr. Gryce. "And you believed here? Humph!"

"She spoke the truth," asserted his companion—the gentleman whose name we purposely suppressed in the last chapter."

"You think so?"

"I do. There was something in her tone, whisper though it was, which brought conviction. I do not question her word in the least."

"Well, we will see; I did not hear her and so may be pardoned for having my doubts. I will talk with you again, sir. The play may not be worth the candle, and it may; a few days more will determine."

"And Molesworth?"

"Is very well as he is."

This conversation, fragmentary though it is, will show something of the stand which Mr. Gryce was taking in this matter. He had Molesworth under his eye and as good as under arrest, and yet he was not satisfied. Something—was it instinct or experience?—told him that this affair possessed complications of no ordinary nature, and that to a conscientious man like himself there were doubts to be solved and possibilities to be sounded, before he would dare proceed against the doctor as against a presumably guilty man.

But with the kindred remembrance of what the woman in Mrs. Olney's boarding house had said about Mildred Farley's frequent comings and goings with her great box, he did not consider it so foolish now, and only wished he had probed the subject deeper at the time. It was not so late yet, however, but that proper inquiries in the right places would settle the question as to whether these two girls were the same. He had only to pass a word or two with the complaisant butler at Mr. Gretorex's house, to learn enough to have the laugh, to say the least, on his somewhat credulous superior. To Mr. Gretorex's house he therefore went, and to Mr. Gretorex's butler he at once addressed himself.

He found this person quite ready to talk in his easy, French way.

The Butler.

"Zat girl? I—none of ze help know somezing bout zat girl, only Mees Gretorex always was at home when she come. A vell for ze face? Oui, so zick you no can see if she was black or white. But she was ver pretty—look good, Sacre! She walk good—proud like a comtesse. She no look at me. One time Pierre try, I try to speak wiz her. It was no good. If she was much deaf she do just so; for she look not to me, she look not to Pierre."

"You're right, Count," laughed a voice over their shoulders, "and one of us ain't a bad looking man, either."

It was Peter, who liked a bit of gossip as well as his neighbor, and who now came forward smiling.

"I feel ze compliment, M. Pierre, and it is ver much good for you to say so," retorted the "Count" with a grandiose bow. "It is ze opinion of ze ladies in ze house."

The butler then winked slyly at Gryce, and satisfied that he had effectually discomfited the footman, proceeded to put questions to the detective as to his reasons for the interest he showed in this girl, which that functionary had wit and experience enough to successfully parry.

Peter helped him; for Peter was a rival of the butler's in more than one field, and in his good-natured way invariably took part against him in any controversy, and it was from Peter that Mr. Gryce finally got the acknowledgment that this young woman, or lady, as he persisted in calling her, usually wore a long, black ulster and made her appearance in the evening.

Now this was satisfactory. In the closet of Mildred Farley at Mrs. Olney's house there was a long, black ulster, and she, as we know, was accustomed to take her work home evenings.

"But she didn't have the ulster on the last time she came, oh, no," continued Peter. "I don't know what it was made the difference, but she looked foine. O, now! well I'm tellin' ye I wouldn't have known her at all, at all, but for her ould brown veil and little handbag. Them wur the same as before and so was the air of her. Not a word nor the divil of a look for one of us; but being the night o' the wedding, she got out o' me head, for sure I had enough else to moind."

Her Handbag.

This last admission was a surprise, but Mr. Gryce was accustomed to surprises, so he kept quite still; the more so that he saw the butler was about to speak, and he always preferred to glean his facts through the questions of other people rather than his own.

"Zat girl here on Miss Gretorex's wedding night? I zink you was mistake, Pierre."

"Mistaken is it I am! when these two hands let her in meself at the back door. It wasn't only here she was, but it's helpin' Miss Gretorex to dress she was, and divil a minute she had to spare, aither, being just in the nick of time to be of any help at all, at all, to her. I didn't see her leave, though."

Mr. Gryce felt his interest cool. Reason told him how improbable it was that this person with all her mysteries, could have been the runaway bride of Julius Molesworth. Even if this house had not been miles distant from the C—— Hotel where he had himself seen her at 7 o'clock of that same night, the great improbability of her fleeing from her own nuptials to assist in this very humble capacity at those of another, was too manifest for his consideration even. Yet because habit was strong in him and habit forbade him to leave a subject till he had exhausted it, he put in a word which he thought must settle the matter.

EVANS DECLARES CLOUDY DAY IS BEST FOR GOLF

By Chick Evans.

TO my mind a gray day gives the ideal golfing weather. This sort of a day frequently precedes or follows rain and there is something in the moist freshness of the atmosphere and absence of glare that is wholly delightful. The clubs at such a time seem unusually light and if they are your own there is a wonderful balance and the blades appear to lie supremely well. The grip also seems perfect because the moisture of the air gets into the leather and gives that feeling of absolute security to the grip. While this feeling in damp weather is true of all grips, it is particularly true of the oiled leather kind.

For some reason, whether it is a quality of the atmosphere or because one's clubs feel so good, the flight of the ball seems steadier and the picture of the little white globe floating in a true and steady line against a dull gray background of sky is a sight to warm the heart of every golfer.

Sun's Glare Hampers Player.

On a bright, warm day the glare from the sun is often distressing to the eyes of the golfer, and a round of golf under a midsummer sun leaves him exhausted. But an overcast day is a comfort to the eyes and a strengthening tonic to the whole physique. One's game itself is better, too, for the moist greens hold the iron shots and permit accurate placing.

The game of golf evolved under gray skies, along wide, moist, grassy places by the sea. In Great Britain there are hundreds and hundreds of overcast days. Then, on these matchless courses, in sight and sound of the waves, with the smell of the sea and the moist freshness of its breath in one's nostrils, the game is enjoyed in all of its natural flavor.

Prairie Courses Harder.

We miss, perhaps, a good deal of this subtle enjoyment of the game on our sun-baked courses. When the greens are like lightning and the fairway cracked and seamed iron shots will not stay where put and fine points of the game are impossible of application. But while we miss much, we are spared that frequent British affliction—a downpour of rain in the midst of an interesting match.

I love an overcast day for golf, the gray sky and moist breeze are like an inspiring draught, but heaven preserve me from a rainy day upon the links.

Tuesday Society Night at 'Drome

R.F. Maddox Sweepstakes Feature

TUESDAY night has been selected as "society night" at the Motordrome, and a special card has been arranged to delight the large attendance that is expected to witness the events.

The feature event on the program is to be the Robert F. Maddox Sweepstakes, to be run in three heats of six riders each. The award will be on points.

Then there is a three-cornered race among Jock McNeil, Harry Glenn and Harry Swartz, which also promises a lot of excitement.

Here is the program:

Motordrome Purse.

(Heats, 1 mile finals, 2 miles; winner in each heat and second man in fastest heat.)

First Heat—Graves, Swartz and Lockner.

Second Heat—Richards, Luther and Glenn.

Third Heat—McNeil, Lewis and Glenn.

Three-Cornered Match Race.

(Three heats, 1 mile, 2 miles and 3 miles.)

First Heat—Glenn, McNeil and Swartz. One mile.

Final Motordrome Purse, two miles.

Second Heat — Three-cornered match race, two miles.

(French point system, 10 for first, 6 for second and 2 for third; three heats, 2, 4 and 6 miles.)

First Heat—Two miles: Graves, Richards, Luther, Lewis, Renel and Lockner.

Third Heat—Three-cornered match race, two miles.

Second Heat—Maddox Sweepstakes, four miles.

Third heat—Maddox Sweepstakes, six miles.

BOXING

News of the Ring Game

Tommy Walsh, of New Orleans, who looks after the affairs of Joe Mandot, has also taken George "Knockout" Brown, the Chicago middleweight, under his management. He has matched Brown to meet Jack Dillon, the Indianapolis fighter, in a ten-round bout at a show to be brought off at Terre Haute, Ind., on Labor Day.

* * *

Tom McCarey, the fight promoter, has offered to assist Jim Coffroth, the San Francisco promoter, in getting a star bout for his show on Labor Day afternoon. As Champion Willie Ritchie has agreed to fight Freddie Welch at Vancouver on that day, Coffroth has been left without an attraction. McCarey is willing to let Coffroth have Johnny Dundee, Ad Wolgast or any fighter that is under contract to him.

* * *

Charley White, who defeated Frank Whitney here last week, will meet Johnny Griffiths in a twelve-round bout at Akron, Ohio, on Labor Day. Griffiths recently defeated Young Saylor and also knocked out Phil Brock in three rounds. After this scrap White may go to the coast for a set-to with Harlem Tommy Murphy.

* * *

Jimmy Clabby, the veteran middleweight, is in San Francisco trying to get a match with Bob McAllister. Jim Coffroth is trying to match the pair for a September date. Clabby is one of the real marvels of the boxing game and should be a big hit on the coast.

* * *

The San Langford-Joe Jeannette match, which has been hanging fire for some time, is now a settled affair. Tom McCarey has received assurances from both fighters that they will be ready to go the marathon route on October 7.

* * *

If the proposed match between Willie Ritchie and Freddie Welch goes through it will be the first international contest for the lightweight championship since George Lavigne and Dick Burge fought in England a number of years ago.

* * *

It is impossible to any longer overlook Gunboat Smith as a candidate for the heavyweight championship honors. Smith has gone right along whipping every man he has been matched with. His latest victory over Jim Flynn has certainly added a big feather in his cap.

* * *

Charley Lee is one boy who looks to have the makings of a real fighter. The way Charley dishes out punishment when he himself is taking a beating makes it look as if he is a battler of much class.

* * *

Young Shugrue is coming to the front in rapid strides. The other night the Easterner handed "Fighting Joe" Hyland a great lacing in ten rounds. Shugrue is now after a return match with Matty Baldwin.

* * *

Al Palzer, the big Iowa farmer, plans to celebrate his return to form again with a bout against Frank Moran at New York on September 3. Both fighters expect to start training shortly for the scrap.

FRANK GOTCH RETIRES AGAIN FOR STEENTH TIME

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Aug. 18.—Frank Gotch, greatest of all wrestlers, is through with the mat forever. In a letter to the sporting editor of The Minneapolis Daily News, received today, Gotch says:

"While the Minnesota State fair people made me an excellent offer to wrestle Zbyszko on September 5, I have turned it down, as I will all other propositions to return to the game.

"I have enough money am happily married, and will spend the balance of my days with the people of Humboldt, Iowa, which means more to me than living in a mansion in New York City or in a castle in England. I shall always be an interested follower of the wrestling game, but will be satisfied to sit on the outside of the ring in the future."

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

TWO MINUS ONE.

(Paraphrasing a well-known author.)

Two things greater than all things are,
One is a bush league baseball star
Who smites the ball with a heart of vim
And earns the kale they have paid for him.

P.S.—The other thing doesn't count.

It is said Fred Merkle is the lad who smote John McGraw on the jowl. This shows that ivory never melts.

In golf, which Mr. Merkle is alleged to play every morn, the slogan is: "Keep your eye on the ball." In baseball, which Mr. Merkle is alleged to play every afternoon, the slogan is: "Keep your eye on the base."

Charlie Ebbets is said to be figuring on a new manager, thus showing that he is willing to go to any expense to get something new to dedicate.

One is not surprised to read that Miller Huggins wants an entirely new team. But one might be surprised to read that he is satisfied with the team he has.

Occasionally a youth from California gets a trimming in a tennis tournament. We said occasionally.

Ban Johnson announces that the world's series will open on October 6. The announcement is received with great enthusiasm among ticket speculators.

It is claimed that tickets speculation on the world series has been reduced to a minimum. Figuring thusly, a maximum would be approximately 175 per cent of the gate receipts.

The report that Clark Griffith has offered $100,000 for Ty Cobb leads one to suspect that he is hitting .400 in the hop league.

We note in the newspapers that one Ar Chung, a Chinese lightweight, made one Pat McCarty quit. The A. O. H. will now proceed to start a libel suit.

It is rumored that Freddie Welch has saved $100,000 out of his earnings. This reveals the fact that his earnings were $100,000.05.

THIS PARAGRAPH IS WRITTEN TO IMMORTALIZE ONE HUMID KALLA PASHA, AN HONEST WRESTLER. HUMID IS HONEST ENOUGH TO ADMIT THAT THERE AIN'T NO SUCH THING.

Connie Mack Can Develop Youngsters, But He Fails in Grooming Managers

Connie Mack is regarded as being one of baseball's smartest managers. He has the knack of developing raw recruits into marvels, but he doesn't produce managers who can make good.

While the Athletics were winning two world's championships Topsy Hartsel and Harry Davis were his two lieutenants, and when they started to fade as major leaguers Mack found managerial berths for them.

Davis didn't even last a complete season as director of the Cleveland Naps, and now Topsy Hartsel has been dropped as manager of the Toledo (A. A.) club.

Toledo and Cleveland looked for their teams to play Connie Mack baseball, which means a pennant, but neither could produce the Connie results, although they were members of Mack's board of strategy.

"Handy" Anderson, who is playing third for Waycross, has developed into a remarkably fine player for a youngster. He joined Waycross from a school team, and made good with a rush. He plays short splendidly and is at home in the field. His batting is a feature, and he seldom fails to reach first when he gets one placed to his notion.

Stewart, the new pitcher with Brunswick, has a cross-fire ball that is mighty hard to hit. He has worked it with success on the best batters and fooled them every time. His brother, playing with Americus, is also able to work some deceptive balls over the plate.

TOMMY LONG AND CHAPMAN PLAY TO-DAY

HERE'S a grain of comfort. The Crackers will be able to send their regular line-up against the Barons this afternoon, when the first game of the series begins at 3:30 o'clock—note the change in the time.

Manager Smith said this morning that Tommy Long had about got over his severe cold and would be in left field this afternoon. Chapman's wrenched ankle has come around in good shape and Harry will be back of the wood.

As to the first slabman to get a whack at the Moles, Bill is going to try out the Gil Price jinx again. Gil has had something on the Barons all season; they haven't seemed able to make a start against the big left-hander, and Gil himself is eager to tackle them in the jump game.

A report from Birmingham announces the purchase of Ed Ery, leading pitcher of the Georgia-Alabama League, who is to report here to-day. "Rube" Evans, the big left-hander, has been suspended for failure to keep in condition, and Bill Prough was called away from the club by a sister's illness, so Molesworth's slab staff is badly in need of bolstering.

The Barons' manager said this morning that Prough was expected on almost any train from the direction of Athens, Ala., and that Ery was being looked for hourly, also. McGilvray is out of the line-up, too. Hardgrove is scheduled to pitch this afternoon.

J. Clabby On Coast; After 20-Round Bout

"Jeems" Wants to Step With Bob McAllister or Sailor Petroskey.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 18.—Jimmy Clabby, of Hammond, Ind., one of the foremost of American middleweights, dropped into town yesterday, accompanied by Jimmy Regan, a promoter, who dabbles in pugilism up at Butte, Mont.

Clabby has received tempting offers to take his Queensberry wares to Australia, but would prefer to linger in San Francisco a while if he receives the right kind of encouragement. Prior to the McAllister, Petroskey bout, Clabby expressed a desire to meet the winner. Of course there was no winner, but Clabby was equal to the emergency. He said he would not mind boxing both McAllister and Petroskey, but would prefer to tackle the Olympic Club graduate first.

It is understood that Promoter Jim Coffroth has taken up the matter and will endeavor to bring about a meeting between Jimmy and Bob. And for the sake of those who admire really clever glove play, it is to be hoped that Coffroth succeeds in his undertaking.

Thousands at Burial Of Mine War Victims

CALUMET, MICH., Aug. 18.—A big public funeral for the two copper strikers killed in a fight Thursday night between Deputy Sheriffs and strikers was held here yesterday. A special train brought the bodies here from the Champion mine and thousands of strikers from every part of the copper district attended the services.

Sports and Such

FAMOUS IN SPORT—VII.

The Fight Manager.

THE FIGHT MANAGER IS AN ever-present example of the value of human endeavor, so long as you can get somebody else to do the endeavoring. It is the mission of the Fight Manager to live by the toil of other men, and, so far as we are a judge, he does his duty. We never heard of one who starved to death.

Managing fighters has all of the advantages of managing a bank, with none of the risks. When a bank gets in bad you can not shake it and pick up another one; but the average Fight Manager continues to blow expensive cigar smoke into the eye of the Sporting Editor long after dozens of fighters he has managed have gone back to sparring for pork chops in the outskirts of Detroit and Cincinnati.

Lest you be thus encouraged to rush blindly into the business, it is our duty to warn you that certain natural gifts are essential. The successful Fight Manager must have tireless vocal chords, a barb-proof hide, a property smile and the imagination of a mining-stock salesman. Also, the gall of a policeman.

It is by no means necessary that he have a fighter. Many men have tried to get by with merely a fighter and have failed. It is much better to tow around some muscular misfit with a ten-ounce brain and by persistent talking and "gettin' in with the right guys" convince the public that he is a fighter. A real fighter usually has enough intelligence to want to audit accounts every now and then, and this is a serious handicap to real success in this profession.

But for the kind of man that fits into the profession it is certainly the kind of profession for him to fit into. Two or three thousand per cent profits are common. For instance, Lute McCarty won $4,000 in his last fight, and when every one had gotten his there was $26 left for the estate. That's a business.

(Get set for the next one—"The Queer Ride.")

BARRY ACCEPTS GREER'S CHALLENGE.

LONDON, Aug. 18.—Ernest Barry, of London, professional sculling champion of the world, to-day accepted a challenge from Frank B. Greer, of Boston, Mass., professional sculling champion of the United States, for a race on the Thames in November for the championship of the world. The stakes are to be $2,500 each.

HANLON GETS PLAYERS.

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—E. J. Hanlon, president of the Sioux City Western League club, obtained from the Detroit Americans the outfielder and pitcher he needed for his team, it was learned today. Hanlon's visit here was brief and he did not give out the names of his new players.

JEFFRIES 'DOPE STORY' GAINS NEW HEARING

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—The direct statement that James J. Jeffries, after his defeat by Jack Johnson at Reno, sought and secured proof that he had been drugged before the battle with the negro was made in a signed article written by a New York sporting editor and published in an evening paper to-day.

The statement follows, in part:

"Jeffries hired one of the greatest detective agencies in the world to run down the facts. The details he gathered make up a complete story of the most sordid plot that ever turned fair sport into a sure-thing gamble. Possibly Johnson would have won in any case, but the clique that handled the betting made it a certainty by drugging Jeffries with the help of men who were in his confidence and who had the run of his camp. They cleaned up a fortune through betting commissioners stationed in many cities. In Paris alone they wagered $24,000 and won $40,000. In Reno and San Francisco and Los Angeles and New York their gains went into the hundreds of thousands.

"The 'tip' for the big killing was received by the waiting commissioners less than 24 hours before the fight when the gamblers knew that Jeffries was 'safe.'

"The grst plot was broached in a back room; the last man necessary to its success accented his part in a meeting in a Reno alley two nights before the fight, after having learned that he could make no more money with Jeffries and that he could win thousands by turning Judas. One man whose available cash was also secretly wagered on Johnson smilingly posed as a friendly adviser of Jeffries during the fight."

English High Cost Cure, 'Don't Eat'

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, ENG., Aug 18.—A report issued by the Board of Trade on an official investigation of the rise in the cost of living shows that for 9,000,000 people in England and Wales, belonging to the working classes, with incomes of $6.25 a week or less, the cost of living has increased in seven years $435,000,000, or nearly $1 a week for each person. People have been able to meet the advances only by reducing consumption.

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

Intense rivalry in Empire League cities is in evidence now in every game played. Charges and counter charges are being hurled at first one team, then another, while the president of the league gets his full share, too.

* * *

Babe Wilder, the wonder of the league, has lost the last three games he pitched for Cordele. The losses were not his fault, as errors behind him let his opponents score enough to win.

* * *

Brouthers, playing in the field for Americus, came mighty near pulling off a fatal play for his team recently. He tried to get a stone in center field, thinking it was the ball which had just been hit safely. A fellow fielder saw the mistake and nipped the real article up in time to save a run.

* * *

Left Fielder Powers, of the Waycross team, has returned to Jacksonville. He was declared ineligible and Waycross had nothing to do but let him go. He is a fleet fielder and has made a neat record during his stay with Waycross.

* * *

Ten victories to one defeat is the pitching record held by Dacey, of the Americus team. He was signed originally as a fielder but has developed into a pitcher as good as the best in the league.

* * *

Outfielder Schuyler, of the Brunswick team, is climbing rapidly in batting. He hits the ball hard regularly.

* * *

Day came back strong against the Valdosta team after they knocked him out of the box and won his game with ease for Thomasville. His shut-out record in the Empire is a good one.

* * *

Otto Jordan seems good on picking up good players. He has landed Wise, a catcher, and from the way the fellow plays he is slated for faster company. Gordon and Vaughan, pitchers, will both land in the Sally and perhaps higher. Gordon has already gone to Macon and ought to make good. And the Valdosta team has others just as reliable.

* * *

Umpire baiting in the league has ruined a number of games recently and the fans generally are in hopes of changes before another season arrives that will make this impossible. Attacks on umpires by players have received only minor treatment.

* * *

By winning four straight games, two from the league leaders, Waycross climbed out of the cellar position for the first time since early in July, when the second half of the season started.

* * *

Added to his fielding ability Doc Fenton, playing center for Waycross, has started hitting at a terrific clip. He got two home runs in succession and four hits in succession the next day. His put-out record is eight for one game, and has no equal in the league.

* * *

Red Stiles, who started the season with Waycross and went to Thomasville when he was released, has been suspended for the balance of the season at his own request.

TINKER READY TO QUIT JOB AS REDS' MANAGER

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—The repeated rumors that all was not well in the affairs of the Cincinnati camp and that the days of Joe Tinker as manager were numbered, were partly confirmed to-day.

The hustling leader of the Reds admitted he was ready to quit. The policies of Garry Herrmann, president of the club, does not jibe with his own, he said, and unless his superior was willing to reconstruct some of his pet theories the team would soon be under a new leader.

Tinker's declaration to-day was caused by the receipt of a telegram from Herrmann notifying Joe that he had "violated baseball law" by airing their differences.

* * *

"I REALIZE that I must take a stand with regard to the management of the club, or step down and out," said the Red manager. "The showing of the team has been a great disappointment to all concerned and I have held off because I felt that I am not a success myself, so far as I have gone. Since the club has not been making money I felt that it was up to me to stand for some things that I would not otherwise have endured."

* * *

THE selling outright of his players to minor leagues was what caused the break, according to Tinker, who felt that he should be allowed to make profitable trades with the other National League teams.

"I would rather go out to my fruit farm in Oregon," he added, "than to try to handle a club when I am not backed up by the owners. I shall not let another player go unless I know just what the deal is."

GRAND CIRCUIT MEET OPENS AT CHARLESTON NEXT WEEK

CHARLESTON, ILL., Aug. 18.—The Eastern Illinois Grand Racing Circuit opens the season with a program at Charleston next week, the dates being August 19 to 23. There will be three events of $1,000 purses each and ten events of $400 purses, assuring an attractive program. The second week of this circuit was awarded to Urbana, the dates being August 26 to 29. Entries to both meetings have been satisfactory.

PITCHER COMSTOCK SOLD TO DETROIT FOR $5,000

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Aug. 18.—Pitcher Ralph Comstock, of Minneapolis, who has been doing sensational work in the American Association, to-day was sold to the Detroit Americans for $5,000. Catcher Rondeau and a pitcher to be named later. Comstock had been reported sold to Comiskey's club, but there was some hitch in the deal.

Barons Loaded for Grouch Fight

Next Series an Elimination Bout

By O. B. Keeler.

BESTOWING a parting and futile imprecation upon the Pepper Kids, Atlanta fandom will now direct its clamorous attention to the advancing Barons, here for three games.

Indications point to another grouch fight.

Moley still might be considered a pennant contender, if you are good at considering. The reason Moley isn't more of a p. c. is because the Crackers licked him a straight series in Slagville recently.

So you may see quite easily the esteem and affection Moley would hold for our crowd, who also can be considered a pennant possibility—granting for the second time that the consideration faculty is working well.

* * *

THE approaching combat, therefore, takes on the status of an elimination bout for the Hope Championship. If the Barons obtain the measure of revenge they naturally are seeking, the stuff is absolutely off for us, barring miracles.

And miracles do not happen in baseball as frequently as one might suppose.

On the other hand, if Messrs. Moley, Prough, et al. again fail to come through, M. P. & Co. are entirely to the frittz, so far as 1913 is concerned.

And as for our own little outlook, that depends very largely on what is happening to the Gulls.

* * *

OF course, as long as Mique Finn can keep his justly celebrated $30 ball club steaming along at anything approaching its present clip, it really doesn't make a blamed bit of difference whether the Crackers win double-headers and things or lose them.

That is the strategic disadvantage of being seven or eight laps back of the pacemaker.

ON the whole, we are beginning to frog up a little stuff about the prospects for 1914—proclaiming loudly, nevertheless, our entire willingness to die game on the platform as adopted by the 1913 convention.

* * *

THAT Chattanooga series, now, fell in on us at a thoroughly unfortunate place.

Chapman was injured and the services of the speedy and hard-hitting Tommy Long were lost after the first indecisive struggle.

* * *

That of itself would make an acceptable alibi, if this were the open season for alibis.

Except, in that case, the Pepper Kids could put witnesses on the stand to testify to their own dismemberment and the fact that they had so few pitchers that the huge Pole had to be unloaded three times in one series.

That, however, is strictly an alibi with a flareback. If the full staff of Chattanooga hurlers could have been sent against the Crackers in order, and the Pole left in the lumber pile, it would have been an agreeable surprise for the Town Boys.

That's the kind of a pest the Pole is.

* * *

WELL, here are the Barons, and, as stated somewhere up ahead near the baggage car of this alleged train of thought, the meeting is in the nature of a grouch fight.

That usually makes business good—also baseball. No man full of red corpuscles cares to see a baseball game played as if between roommates.

Then, too, Bill Smith's birthday comes along next Wednesday, and there is going to be a little party at Ponce DeLeon in his honor. There will be a band, and about nine thousands guests are expected—if it doesn't rain.

This will be a good chance for the great body of fans who like Bill and his work to come out and let him know about it.

LARGE CROWD SEES YOUNG AND WILLARD WORK OUT

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 18.—Packed to capacity training camp crowds saw "White Hope" Jess Willard and "Bull" Young, matched to box twenty rounds before the Pacific A. C. at Vernon next Friday night, go through with their work-outs yesterday afternoon.

Leach Cross, matched to box Mexican Joe Rivers on Labor Day, returned from Catalina Island yesterday and will immediately open his camp at Doyle's resort, Vernon. Rivers will start work to-morrow. The local boy is to select a camp site at one of the beaches.

EARLY BASEBALL MEETING.

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—The annual meeting of the baseball league will be held here in October instead of December, according to B. B. Johnson. The earlier date was chosen on account of the world tour of the Chicago club.

A. A. C. WILL HAVE WATER SPORTS NEXT SATURDAY

There will be a lot of splashing, plain and fancy, at East Lake next Saturday when the second annual "water sports day" is to be observed by the Atlanta Athletic Club.

The water sports committee now is at work on the program, on which there are to be nine events, including swimming, canoeing, boat racing and fancy diving.

A dinner-dance will top off the afternoon's diversions.

JEANETTE AND LANGFORD TO CLASH IN 10-ROUND GO

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Sam Lanford, the Bostan "Tar Baby" and Joe Jeannette, the Hoboken heavyweight, have signed article to box ten rounds at Madison Square Garden the latter part of September. The match was closed yesterday.

FEW REFEREES HAVE COMMAND OF RING MEN

By Otto C. Floto.

IT may be "old stuff," this harping and dwelling on the duties and action of a referee in the ring, yet it is always a timely subject to those interested in fights and fighting. Not so long ago, in an Eastern city, the writer sat at the ringside and watched two huskies clinching each other and holding on for dear life. The referee, only a man of average strength, was exhausting himself prying them apart—and quite an unsuccessful job he made of it. The thought then struck me how easily all this violation of the rules could be remedied. The referee has but to live up the meaning of the code as promulgated for 50 years or so and all trouble is quickly eliminated.

In the first place, there is no rule which tolerates clinching; neither is there a rule strenuously forbidding it. But there is a rule which says positively there must be no holding. A man battling in the ring can keep on hitting an opponent just as long as he has both or one arm free and providing also that he is not holding his opponent while striking him. No matter how much one man holds, the other man can keep on whaling away if his arms are free.

The trouble with the average referee is that he has absolutely no command of the fighters. They simply do as they please, regardless of his commands. I have seen many officiate in the ring, but I can recall only one who never yet has gone between the men to separate them. This man is Billy Roche. Somehow or other he manages to separate the men whenever he walks to them and says, "Break!" I have seen other referees do this a hundred times and no attention paid to it, but I have never yet heard Roche say it that the men didn't part.

RITCHIE-WELCH MATCH POSTPONED TILL SEPT. 20

VANCOUVER, B. C., Aug. 18.—The Welsh-Ritchie bout, scheduled to be fought here on Labor Day, has been postponed until September 20. Welsh is suffering from a sprained ankle. Ritchie will stay here and meet the best available local man on Labor Day. Ritchie showed a very fair spirit when the accident occurred, and instead of calling off the match readily agreed to the postponement.

BROOKLYN MAKING CHANGES.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Aug. 18.—The Brooklyn club yesterday announced the unconditional release of Outfielder Scheer. Catcher Edwin was sent to Toronto. The club has exercised its claim on Outfielder Hub Northern of Toronto and relinquished its claims on Pitcher Williams of Nashville and Pitcher Echardt of Indianapolis.

KETCHEL GETS LONG SCRAP WITH EDDIE JOHNSON

DENVER, COL., Aug. 18.—Steve Ketchel's manager, Larry Lichenstein, to-day accepted the terms of Jimmie Fitzpatrick to have the Englewood lightweight star meet Eddie Johnson, the "fighting Dane," before the Pueblo Athletic Club, September 15. This contest is scheduled to take place during "state Fair Week" and the fighters will go twenty rounds, weight to be 133 pounds at 3 o'clock.

NATIONAL COMMISSION PUTS KEOKUK IN GOOD

CINCINNATI, OHIO, Aug. 18.—The National Baseball Commission yesterday restored the Keokuk club, of the Central Association, to good standing, the club having paid an award of $175 to Player R. A. Madigan. The National Commission revoked its order of August 6, which put the Keokuk club outside the provisions of the national agreement for failure to pay the player as authorized.

Player James Vaughn complained that Ray Caldwell, of the New York American club, refused to pay a loan of $16 which he alleged was borrowed from him by Caldwell in the spring of 1912. The Commission held that Caldwell had made no defense after a copy of the petition had been forwarded to him, and declared Caldwell ineligible to play unless the debt is settled through the office of the New York club within five days of the finding.

PALZER TO MEET MORAN AT NEW YORK NEXT MONTH

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Al Palzer, the big Iowa farmer, plans to celebrate his return to form again with a bout with Frank Moran of Pittsburg, at the St. Nicholas Club here on September 3. The Pittsburg heavy has improved steadily of late and believes he can give the mastodonic Western a very interesting evening.

Both fighters expect to start training shortly for the bout.

CHAMPAIGN WINS FLAG IN ILLINOIS-MISSOURI LEAGUE

CHAMPAIGN, ILL., Aug. 18.—Champaign won the pennant of the four-club race of the Illinois-Missouri League, after a brush with Lincoln, which was only decided by the final game of the season. As Lincoln won the six-club race last year a post-season series will be played between Champaign and Lincoln. Champaign played a doubleheader with Streator as the season's windup, winning both games, 6 to 1 and 2-1.

DUNDEE AND AD WILL NOT BOX BEFORE THEIR BOUT

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 18.—Ad Wolgast and Johnny Dundee have telegraphed that they will live up to their articles of agreement with Promoter T. J. McCarey and will not enter the ring until they face each other here on admission day.

Dundee returned from San Francisco yesterday morning and Wolgast is to follow inside the next few days.

"My alleged match with Tommy Murphy was only to bluff Wolgast out of fighting young Azevedo," said Manager "Scotty" Monteith. "We had no intention of breaking our contract. We do not want anybody else to get a chance at Ad before us. Dundee will stop Wolgast inside the twenty round limit."

MEAT IS GOING UP AND UP AND UP

Experts Say Country Will Have Worst Shortage of Beef in Its History.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—This country will experience next winter the greatest shortage of beef in its history. Prices, which already have advanced 25 to 50 per cent in a year, are to be 10 to 13 per cent higher by January 1. Meat will sell at unheard of figures.

The representative of a big packer in Chicago said yesterday: "Forty cents a pound for the choice cuts seem a certainty, 45 cents in a probability, and even 50 cents a possibility before spring."

George L. McCarthy, proprietor of The National Provisioner, said today that the stock population in the United States is more depleted at present than it has been at any previous time in ten years. That in itself, Mr. McCarthy said, is sufficient cause for very high retail prices. But the drought in Kansas, Oklahoma and the Southwest has aggravated the situation bad before, till it may now be called alarming.

Sky-High Prices by Midwinter.

The expert buyer for Richard Webber, a butcher with an extensive business in New York, didn't hesitate to say that prices are going sky-high by midwinter. The average price paid by the laborer for beef to-day, he said, is 16 cents a pound. The same cuts will cost 18 cents or more in a few months.

The same authority predicted that the average price of sirloin steaks will creep up 3 cents in as many months, while the average price of porterhouse steaks will advance 4 to 5 cents in the same period.

The corn-killing drought in Kansas and neighboring States has deprived the cattle-raising sections of feed for their stock. Fodder remains, but the corn itself, necessary to fatten the steers for market, will have to be shipped into sections of country naturally grain exporters, at an expense that will preclude the idea of satisfactory profit by cattle raisers at anything near the present prices.

For ten days a steady rush of cattle to the big stock markets of the Middle West has been in progress. The raisers can't afford to hold and feed the cattle. In many instances, cows are being sent to market in such numbers that the generation of calves due next spring will be much less than the average.

Rushed to the Slaughter Houses.

Cattle receipts in the Western markets first rose above the normal when the hot weather killed the pasturage. Carload after carload of steers went to Chicago and Kansas City. The general movement to the slaughter houses is still in progress. In the first three days of the present week 129,000 cattle were received at the Western markets, nearly as many as in the entire week a year ago.

The same condition to a certain extent holds true in the hog market, and receipts have been nearly doubled since the drought.

The general situation is about as bad in the East. Mr. McCarthy said that farmers over a great part of the East are selling cattle just now that they would be holding had the hay crop been up to the standard.

Live stock prices are naturally slumping while the markets are loaded with stock. But in spite of the fact that steers and hogs are costing the packers less than at any time for several months no reduction in the wholesale price of meats is announced, and the housewife has obtained no benefits because of the present abnormal conditions in the markets.

The drought, according to stock men, will result in immense profits for the packers because of their ability to buy now and when the cattle raisers are at a disadvantage and to set prices this winter when there is a scarcity in the cattle receipts.

Patten, Again in Pit, Cleans Up $500,000

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—James A. Patten, whose deals in grain and cotton in the last decade have attracted world-wide attention, is once more the central figure in a speculation that is causing the corn pit on the Board of Trade to boil with excitement.

Mr. Patten started to buy corn three weeks ago, when the first reports that hot weather and drought were damaging the crop began to come in. His paper profits at the present time are said to be at least $500,000.

WIVES OF DIGGS AND CAMINETTI WILL TESTIFY

Women To Be Asked to Tell of Their Knowledge of Husbands' Elopement

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 18.—Interest in the trial of Maury I. Diggs on the charge of violating the white slave law will be given fresh impetus to-morrow, when Mrs. Diggs and the wife of F. Drew Caminetti will take the stand as witnesses for the defense.

Mrs. Diggs, who is a handsome, dark-eyed woman, was expected to be called as the first witness. Last Friday she appeared in court with her young daughter, Evelyn, and was one of the most observed persons that sat facing the bench presided over by Federal Judge Van Fleet.

Mrs. Diggs and Mrs. Caminetti will be asked by the defense to tell of their knowledge of the relations between their husbands and Marsha Warrington and Lola Norris.

It is the contention of the attorneys for the defense that one of the reasons for the flight of Diggs and Caminetti to Reno with the two girls was that they believed their wives were about to have them prosecuted by the officials of the juvenile court of Sacramento. It is maintained by the defense that Mrs. Caminetti told her husband that she had complained to Judge Hughes, of the juvenile court of Sacramento, about Diggs and Caminetti in an effort to induce them to sever their relations with Miss Warrington and Miss Norris.

The Government contends that Diggs and Caminetti were reckless debauchers who had decided to go to Reno to desert their wives and induce the girls to lead immoral lives, in violation of the Mann act.

Promoter in Jail, Oil Wells Are Idle

GADSDEN, Aug. 18.—The conviction of E. C. Drew, the Fort Payne oil well promoter, will, it is believed, bring to a close the drilling for oil in DeKalb County.

Nobody appeared to have much faith in oil being found there except Drew. With five years in the penitentiary confronting him, Drew still contends that he will continue his drilling and that eventually he will find oil. But, no matter whether oil is found or not, Drew is held guilty of using the mails to defraud, first because the company in which he sought to sell stock was not regularly organized and second because he applied the money to other purposes than that for which it was intended.

New Boll Worm Invades Carolina

GREENVILLE, S. C., Aug. 18.—From Dunklin Township, in this county, come alarming reports of the invasion in that section of a small worm which is said to be playing havoc by devouring cotton bolls.

Large fields of cotton, it is said, are infested with the worm, and the farmers are greatly exercised. They are unable to account for the presence of the worms, and they say they are the first of the kind ever seen in this section.

The worms are rapidly spreading over the lower section of the county, and it is feared that unless something is quickly done to stop the ravages of the pest the crop in that section will be seriously damaged.

Mount Zion Plans Big Camp Meeting

GRIFFIN, Aug. 18.—A coming event for the next week that is attracting unusual attention is the opening of the annual camp meeting at the old historic Mount Zion camp ground next Friday night.

Camp meetings have been held annually at that camp ground since 1832, excepting the years of the Civil War.

U. S. Gunboat Nearly Wrecked by Typhoon

SHANGHAI, Aug. 18.—The United States gunboat Wilmington had a narrow escape from destruction in the harbor here to-day during a typhoon. Her anchor began to drag and was going toward shore when rescued by a powerful tug.

The storm did great damage to shipping.

OBITUARY

The funeral of William F. Robinson, who died at a hospital Sunday, will be held at the residence, 529 Greenwich avenue, West End, at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon. FAMOUS STARS NEW TO SOUTH BOOKED HERE

Manager George of the Atlanta Announces List—Season Opens With Musical Show Sept. 3.

The first harbinger of the new theatrical season has reached Atlanta in the person of Homer C. George, manager of the Atlanta Theater. Returning from his vacation, he stopped by the New York office of Klaw & Erlanger and crowded his grip with news of coming shows. The Shuberts and the Frohmans will be well represented.

The attractive playhouse will open with a predominance of musical shows as usual. According to Mr. George, the first breaths of fall that come with September nights are not sufficiently bracing for anything "heavy," and the first productions will be bright and breezy.

"Mary's Lamb" will be the opener, September 3. "Little Miss Fix-it," "who" caused much talk in New York, will be the second, and "The Merry Countess," one of the big hits of the Shuberts, will come third. An early big attraction will be Otis Harlan in a Savage production of "Little Boy Blue."

Favorites Are Coming.

In the galaxy of stars who are to perform to Atlanta audiences Mr. George points out a number of new ones to the South. Of course many favorites will return. To the trained theatergoer no announcement could produce a keener thrill than the statement that Rose Stahl, who delighted so many in the "Chorus Lady," will come early in her new play, "Maggie Pepper," and that William Faversham will appear in an all-star cast of "Julius Caesar."

But to take them as they come—Mr. George announces the tentative program in this wise:

Miss Annie Russell, three nights, the minstrels of Al G. Field, followed a month later by a reunion of the Dockstader and Primrose shows. In [illegible] will come [illegible] George Evans and then Nell O'Brien.

Big Scenic Plays.

May Irwin is coming in November with her big Cohan Theater success of last season. Robert Hilliard will appear as Detective William J. Burns in a thrilling drama. Early in December Klaw & Erlanger will present that wonderful scenic play, "Ben Hur," for a week.

"Tine Feathers," a new Eugene Walters success, will be here in December, as well as the memorial players from Stratford-on-Avon, producing the drama as it was in Shakespeare's time.

And fascinating Mme. Nazimova is coming in "Bella Donna," and the wonderful Mme. Pavlowa, the Russian dancer, with "her special permit from the Czar" to leave that country.

Henry Miller is coming in "The Rainbow" and Otis Skinner in "Kismet," said to be his greatest success.

And one of the most important of all the announcements is that the unusual play, "Damaged Goods," by the famous French dramatist, Brieux, will be shown. It probably created more comment than any play presented in New York last season, its first production being semi-private, under the auspices of a medical organization.

Other popular plays booked are: "Within the Law," "Ready Money," "Romance," "Peg o' My Heart," "The Conspiracy," "Little Women," "Blue Bird," "The Girl of My Dreams," "Broadway Jones," "The Governor's Lady," "Stop Thief," and others.

Adrianople Guarded By 400,000 Moslems

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 18.—War Minister Enver Bey is hurling an army of 400,000 men into Thrace to defend Adrianople against the Bulgarians. Representatives of the Porte to-day declared that Europe's demand that Turkey give up Adrianople to the Bulgarians will be rejected.

Turkish soldiers have obtained the port of Dedeaghatch.

Negro Slayer Taken To Macon for Safety

MACON, Aug. 18.—Doc Mathis, a negro charged with having shot and killed R. L. Jo[illegible]y, a prominent Lee County planter, was brought to Macon yesterday and lodged in the Bibb County jail for safekeeping. Threats of lynching had been made.

He was trapped at his home at Williamsburg, and fired at the arresting officers several times while they were approaching his house.

'Cattle Queen' Freed Leases All 'Movies'

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS, COLO., Aug. 18.—In celebration of her acquittal on the charge of "rustling" cattle Anna Bernard, known as the "Cattle Queen," leased all the moving picture houses in the town for the night and treated her friends to screened thrills.

Drawing for Last 2,000,000 Acres U.S. Lands Is Announced

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Two million acres, the best wheat land on earth, according to James J. Hill, will be distributed to settlers by the United States September 23 at a public drawing by number at Glasgow, Mont. The land consists of a tract 80 by 40 miles and is known as the Fort Peck Reservation. It is the last Government reservation to be divided by Uncle Sam.

The tract borders on the Missouri River and formerly was the property of the Sioux Indians. Of the acreage to be allotted 457,000 acres are agricultural land for which applicants will be charged a nominal price of from $5 to $7 an acre, and 738,000 acres is in grazing land, for which $2.50 to $3 will be charged. Applications for the land will be received from September 1 to 20.

Fear Kept Man Off Cars All His 83 Years

LIZTON, IND., Aug. 18.—William Northcutt, aged 85, is dead, after spending his whole life without ever once riding in a railroad train, automobile or street car.

He claimed they were too fast and too dangerous.

3 NEGROES SLAIN; 20 OTHERS JAILED

With three negroes killed and a fourth seriously wounded in free-for-all cutting scrapes Sunday, twenty negroes are under arrest at police headquarters, two charged with murder and the remainder charged with fighting, frequenting blind tigers, and a host of misdemeanors.

The two against whom the charge of murder has been placed are B. C. Smith and Ed Smith, alias Ed Campbell. The third murderer, who is still at large, is said by the police to be Phoney Johnson, a negro desperado with a long police record.

Ed Smith, while resisting arrest after shooting Peter Jackson at 72 James street, was shot in the hand by Officer Palmer. B. C. Smith was captured after a hard chase by Officers Davis and Fielder and Louis Castro.

Most of the trouble started in blind tigers throughout the city. Johnson, after getting drunk, went to the home of Munch Harris, 282 Butler street, and stabbed him to death. B. C. Smith killed John Henry Wilkerson at 80 Decatur street about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and half an hour later Peter Jackson was shot by Ed Smith.

SLIT SKIRT HEALTH AID, SAYS EXPERT

DENVER, Aug. 18.—Wilbur F. Cannon, former pure food commissioner, has rushed to the defense of the X-ray and slit skirts with these five reasons:

The X-ray and slit skirts permit circulation of air about the body.

The absence of many underskirts relieves the strain on the hips and prevents kidney trouble.

Absence of the usual amount of clothes makes frequent bathing necessary and frequent bathing opens the pores and makes the bath quite healthy.

Absence of many clothes makes the body movement freer, thus saving energy.

There is less labor required in the care of clothes, such as washing, ironing and mending.

VOTE ON COURT CHANGE.

JACKSON, Aug. 18.—The City Court of Jackson was amended by the last session of the general assembly, subject to a ratification of the people. The matter will be voted on September 3. As amended, the Solicitor will receive a salary instead of fees.

'Battle' Still Delayed By Strike of 'Heroes'

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—No naval battle was fought on Lake Michigan commemorating the fight that made Commodore Oliver H. Perry a hero, because several hundred "heroes" were on strike to-day.

Miss Catherine K. Brown, of New York, who attempted to obtain "strike-breakers" to act as "heroes and patriots" in the big spectacle, was guarded constantly by detectives. She received threats from the strikers, who were acting under instructions from Industrial Workers of the World leaders.

GOOD PRICE FOR CATTLE.

VIDALIA, Aug. 18.—The record sale of cattle for one day in this section was made yesterday when farmer Clayton McLeod sold a drove of 81 to a local firm of stock dealers. The value of the cattle was estimated at about $20 a head.

MORGAN'S SON WEARS MANTLE, SAYS FRICK

Steel Magnate Says the Young Man Has Risen to the Situation.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 18.—Henry C. Frick, who is staying at the West End Hotel, broke his rule of never giving an interview in favor of the Hearst papers.

"Whom do you regard as the late Pierpont Morgan's successor in the financial world?" he was asked.

"I think his son," answered Mr. Frick." He is a most able man, a highly conscientious, great worker. In taking over the reins he has certainly risen to the occasion, and situation. I have the utmost confidence in him and believe he will wear his father's mantle with the greatest credit to himself and to the country generally."

"What do you think of the general business conditions in America?"

"I am an optimist. I am always a firm believer in our country. I see absolutely no reason for alarm at the present moment. A general feeling of hopefulness seems prevalent. The crops promise well, and good, average crops should give a strong impetus to trade and insure continued prosperity."

"What, in your opinion, is most needed to give business a boost?"

"The one greatest need is for a let-up in Governmental lawsuits and interference which continually threaten capital and inevitably create a atmosphere of general uncertainty and mistrust."

"What do you think of the effects of the tariff bill?"

"I don't believe it will lead to any great business disturbance. Its effects have been largely discounted, and our country is big and prosperous enough to quickly shake off any unexpected evil result."

"Can you say anything about the new currency bill?"

"I have not made a special study of it, but I believe it must, in any event, be an improvement on the present system."

COTTON GOSSIP

Browne, Drakeford & Co., Liverpool, cable: "Market declined in consequence of general favorable weather reports. Bulls disappointed."

* * *

The volume of retail buying in the local cotton goods market last week in most houses was substantially ahead of a year ago, according to The Journal of Commerce. There is an absence of speculative buying and great caution is being exercised, yet total requirements for merchandise are becoming formidable, and it seems as if the retail trade has liquidated in the past six months more than in any recent similar selling period. Any broad buying for future account in the cotton goods markets would bring on a sharp advance.

* * *

The course of the cotton market during the week depends entirely on the weather news. It was the gossip among ring speculators late Saturday that if rains should come it would undoubtedly bring out selling and lower prices would follow. On the other hand, the bulls contend if rains should not come we should expect some 20 to 40 points advance during the next few days. There was some selling Saturday on predictions by Kofler, of New Orleans, that indications pointed to rains over Sunday, but this was entirely ignored by the bulls, who were buyers right up to the close.

* * *

"If the volume of trade was larger the market would make a better response to news," remarked a conservative Saturday, "but it is restricted in all directions by the last threat of drouth in Texas and Oklahoma, and for the great part of every session the market is a very tame affair."

* * *

Some of the most radical bears say that we could wipe out Oklahoma altogether and still make a big crop.

* * *

Washington makes a special prediction for rainy weather this week in the southwestern States.

* * *

San Antonio, Texas, wires good rains reported at Ardmore, McAlester, Waco, Taylor, Austin, Yoakum, Cuero and Victoria; light showers Dallas, Fort Worth, Belton; sprinkle at Temple, San Antonio weather unsettled.

* * *

Washington weather summary for the week: "Temperatures near the seasonable average, with local showers and thunderstorms indicated for the southwestern States during the coming week. No indications at present time of disturbance in West Indies."

* * *

Telegraph companies report rains fell over Sunday in Dallas, Houston, Fort Worth, San Antonio, Austin, Granger, Taylor, Hubbard, Okla., Weatherford, Okla., raining hard Galveston.

* * *

The early weather map shows cloudy over the southern half of Texas and Eastern Tennessee; fair elsewhere; 70 at Taylor, Texas; little precipitation in the central and eastern States, but detailed Government records will show much more rain, as they comprise rainfall of Saturday. Temperatures are lower and indications are unsettled to showers in the western States; generally fair over the central and eastern States.

* * *

The New Orleans Times-Democrat herewith presents the reports of its correspondents as to the condition of the crop on August 12. The consensus of opinion is to the following effect:

"1. With the exception of Texas and Oklahoma, distinct improvement has been the rule. The two States just named have suffered from drouth and excessive heat, and the deterioration has been considerable.

"2. The crop has been exceedingly well cultivated and the result begins to be manifest.

"3. The boll weevil has been active in many districts, but the farmers have waged a vigorous campaign against the pest, and the damage does not appear to have been important, except in certain parts of Southwest Texas.

"4. The supply of labor is generally said to be sufficient and no trouble is expected on this score.

"5. Most correspondents report that farmers are inclined to sell at current prices at least enough of their crops to put them out of debt."

COTTON

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Trading was extremely active at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 14 to 17 points lower than the closing quotations of Saturday. Reports were coming from private houses that light rains had occurred throughout Oklahoma and Texas late Saturday. This, coupled with extremely weak cables, was responsible for the lower opening. The market was without suport at the decline. The ring was apparently long and were throwing cotton over from the general selling that was going on. Wall Street and many of the large spot houses were also noticeable sellers. Liverpool was aid to be down on the rains reported from Texas and was sold from this side. After half an hour of trading prices showed further recessions of 3 to 5 points from the initial range.

During the forenoon the market developed a better tone through father free buying from certain strong interests, based on special telegraphic reports on Texas rainfull and weather conditions, which was considered rather bullish. Price movement ranged a few points better than the opening range.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Miller & Co.: It continues a weather market.

Charles Fairchild & Co.: We would be inclined to buy and hold for much higher prices.

Orvis Bros. & Co.: An undue risk attaches to the short side at present prices.

Logan & Bryan: Beneficial rains will doubtless result in lower prices.

BETTER TRADE IN DRY GOODS THIS YEAR THAN YEAR AGO

Marshall Field & Co. in their weekly review of the dry goods trade say:

Buyers have been in the dry goods market this week in much larger numbers than during the same period a year ago. Merchants are ordering forward their fall lines and filling in their stocks thoughout all departments. Buying has proceeded with precaution in individual cases, but retailers generally are so much in need of merchandise for immediate requirements, that the total volume of shipments is keeping up remarkably well.

"Much needed rains have brightened the prospects for a good fall business in a large portion of the territory that was feeling the drouth.

"Silks are a big item of the trade at present and practically all buyers in the market are placing orders for this class of merchandise in liberal quantities.

"Judging from the extraordinary demand that has developed and in view of the serious labor troubles that have prevailed for some time in the silk industry, there will be a scarcity of all kinds of silks before the season is far advanced.

"The sale of black silks has improved greatly within the last few weeks.

BAR SILVER.

LONDON, Aug. 18.—Bar silver steady at 27¼d.

STOCK GOSSIP

It looks as if the reports of damage to the corn crop has exerted what influence was intended last week, and that we will have a better stock market to-day. Expect higher prices and would keep long of Union Pacific, Copper, Reading and Steel.—G. D. Potter.

* * *

The proposed consolidation of the Tuolomne and Butte Main Range Mining companies is off. At a meeting of the directors of the Butte Main Range Company, held last week, it was voted to withdraw the offer to sell the property. The directors of the Tuolumne Company are scheduled to meet to-day to consider the proposition.

Steamboat Burns At Memphis Wharf

MEMPHIS, TENN., Aug. 18.—The Mississippi River packet Bob Lee, Jr., operating between Memphis and Ashport, was burned early to-day at the Memphis wharf.

J. S. Parker, steward, was burned seriously. Part of the crew jumped into the river and waded ashore.

Wilson's Appointee Attacked in Senate

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—It is understood the nomination of Preston McGoodwin, of Kentucky, to be Minister to Venezuela will be rejected by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Democrats oppose him on the ground that he is not a Democrat. Republican members say they care nothing about his politics, but the nominee is not fitted for the post.

BIG SWEET POTATO YIELD.

VILALIA, Aug. 18.—The Toombs County soil and climate are ideal for sweet potatoes was clearly demonstrated by Farmer Joe Todd, who has just disposed of his experimental acre of potatoes at $1.25 per bushel, which price nets him about $187.50 on the acre.

$1,203 DOG CROP IN BUTTS.

JACKSON, Aug. 18.—Until the tax digest was gone over it was never dreamed that Butts County had a dog crop worth $1,203. It was feared but few dogs would be returned for taxation since the repeal of the dog tax law.

Grain Notes

J. R. Williston & Co. have made up an estimate of the wheat crop of the United States and Canada for the current year. They say: "It looks at the moment as if the total wheat crop of the United States and Canada will be about 65,000,000 bushels less than last year, or a total of 871,267,000 bushels, as against 936,267,000 bushels in 1912. For the United States alone the crop will be about 25,000,000 bushels less than last year, resulting from an increase in winter wheat of about 75,000,000 bushels and a decrease in spring wheat of 100,000,000 bushels, making the total United States crop this year about 765,000,000 bushels, as against about 730,000,000 bushels last year. Canada raised 206,000 000 bushels last year. Latest reports indicate a loss of about 40,000,000 bushels."

Broker Tries Suicide; Saved by Pulmotor

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Harry Lattimer Bloodgood, broker and society man, attempted suicide by gas, but was saved from death by the use of a pulmotor.

Bloodgood was found in his home with his face covered by a large tin funnel attached to the end of a tube through which gas was flowing. He was seemingly lifeless. The pulmotor soon revived him.

Bloodgood is a brother-in-law of Clara Bloodgood, the actress who killed herself in Baltimore a few years ago.

Circulation Statements Made to the U.S. Gov't., Showing Relative Standing of N. Y. Evening Newspapers

In accordance with a Congressional Act of August 24, 1912, every newspaper is compelled by law to print, twice a year, its net paid daily average circulation. In order that every business man may know the true newspaper situation in New York we reproduce below the circulation statements made by each of the evening newspapers to the Government. This is the first time, in some cases, that advertisers have been able to find out what they are really getting for their money, and the statements published below should prove interesting reading to all business men.

What Do You Suppose Interests Them on Board the Train?

National Affairs, Great Discoveries, News of Historical Inportance? Not at All—Something Simpler.

"It hath not yet been shown what we shall be" is a fine sounding sentence, descriptive of our future greatness. "It hath not yet been shown what petty, little human mice we are" is a sentence that would describe pretty well the human race of to-day.

You have only to observe the mental occupations of your fellow passengers on Pullman coaches running between Atlanta and New York to be convinced of the vacuity of human minds, their absence of thought, their aversion to study.

Here are men traveling nearly a thousand miles, propelled by force buried in the coal several million years ago.

They travel in rooms lighted with the electric power that flashes in the clouds, on rails and wheels of steel.

Their journey is the result of millions of years of the earth's development, and hundreds of thousands of years in the development of human intelligence, AND THEIR MINDS ARE ON GAMES OR AMUSEMENT OR FOLLIES OF ONE KIND OR ANOTHER.

You see solemn old men and distressed old women reading—novels usually vapid or vulgar—when they are not playing bridge or solitaire.

If you see someone interested in a newspaper, what do you suppose most attracts his attention? Let us look over his shoulder and see.

No, gentle or fierce reader, he has not been reading important news of the Balkan war.

He hasn't wondered whether the United States would spread as it should all the way down this continent and stop just south of the Panama canal—for the present.

He hasn't been reading bulletins of scientific discovery, or news of importance in the world and its history.

He has been reading the important fact that Sommers "pitched" and Graham "caught" for Chattanooga, while Dent "pitched" and Dunn "caught" for Atlanta.

He has been reading the numbers of runs, hits and errors—if you know what they are—and finding out who won in various games of baseball throughout the country.

The human race has not grown up to its possibilities.

It is a race of children, easily tired, incapable of concentrated, earnest thought.

It is a race of men who work like beavers, or ants, or prairie dogs through the day, each in his own little direction, indifferent to the others, and who unite in intellect in the evening, not upon any subject worthy of the brain of a man, but in intense interest in some poor little make-believe game.

These men, "heirs of all the ages," have their magnificent minds concentrated on a childish game that could have been played and was played in another form by the savages that lived here before language was perfected.

Many a weary century must pass before the human mice of the present day will be really MEN.

Woes of "Affinity" Earle's Soul-Mates.

The folly of certain "advanced ideas" on marriage, that rise, phoenix-like, from the ashes of dead loves, comes with fresh proof in a London cable telling of a suit for divorce by the third wife of Ferdinand Pinney Earle, the New York artist, who has been in the limelight for years because of his love affairs.

The unsophisticated daughter of an English architect, Mrs. Earle No. 3—"the loveliest, sweetest, dearest of them all"—said she knew nothing of the American "affinity" advocate when she married him, two months after their first meeting. Now the mother of his child, she seeks her freedom on the ground of cruelty. Thus it was with Emilie Fischbacher and Julia Kuttner, both of whom Earle married and later lost.

Advocates of a nondescript affection may conjure up new forms of wedlock as an improvement on the old-fashioned vows, but such theories are like "silly moths that singe their wings and fall into dust." Discord and strife are the invariable accompaniments of defiance of the laws of decency and honor.

It is a fact that monogamic races have made the greatest progress in civilization. It was the monogamic barbarians, the virtuous Saxon vandals, that drove the hardest bargains with the Roman emperors. They preserved their rugged, healthy state from the weakening vices of a decadent age.

Pioneers who have cut the hard granite, hewn the tall trees, conquered the wilderness and forwarded the arts and sciences—who have made America the greatest miracle in the annals of the nations—all have had a wholesome regard for the sanctity of the marriage covenant. They rarely entered lightly into wedlock. Enemies of the free love that feeds on empty promises of a superfine conjugality, they were ever loyal to the lesson of Cana in Galilee.

Artist Earle's marital misfortunes are the common lot of all so-called idealists who set their own opinions against the experiences of the centuries. The religious element of the marriage relation can not be ignored without bringing counter obligations that gall and bind the offenders with worse cords than those that fret the flesh.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox Writes on Unfit Mothers

Poverty Does Not Make Them So, as Many Are Rich. Criticism Committees Should Be Established Everywhere.

Written for The Atlanta Georgian

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

"THE unfitness of mothers of dependent children, complained of by 'organized charity' is in my opinion all caused by poverty.

"The Mothers' Pension law recently enacted by the legislatures of eighteen States will, to a great extent, make the unfit mother fit because the pension removes the cause of her unfitness, which is her poverty.

"It is the common observation that the very fine and very fit mother becomes comparatively unfit to take care of her children after a few years of hopeless struggle with poverty.

"The mistake of organized charity is their allowing good mothers of dependent children to be made unfit by the poison of poverty, the poison of hopelessness, the poison of overwork in trying to earn the living for their children at hard work and give proper care to their children at the same time.

"Organized charity contends that a mother should have her children taken away from her because poverty has made her temporarily unfit.

"The real friends of the poor, the advocates of mothers' pensions, believe that the mother should have the cause of her unfitness removed and not her children. HENRY NEIL."

Unfit Mothers Caused by Poverty Open to Doubt.

MOTHERS' pensions now extend from coast to coast.

One can now travel from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean going through mothers' pension States only, starting on the coast of New Jersey and going through Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Utah, Nevada to the coast of California.

Other mothers' pension States are Washington, Oregon, Idaho, South Dakota, Minnesota, Massachusetts, New Hampshire—eighteen in all.

Three cities that have local mothers' pension laws are Kansas City, St. Louis and Milwaukee.

Meantime the statement of Mr. Neil that the unfit mothers are caused by poverty is open to doubt.

Some of the most unfit mothers to be found on earth are women of wealth.

Two little girls on board a large ocean liner were the daughters of a New York banker, and their mother was an educated woman, and their father was a man of parts; yet there were never seen on earth more insufferably disagreeable children than these. They were ill-mannered, impertinent, unkind and ungracious. The chief steward in the dining salon was obliged to rebuke them for their impertinence and their annoying treatment of other passengers.

The children she had should have been taken away from such parents and placed under wise and worthy instructors.

A woman who has been reared with excellent opportunities for culture is the mother of four children. There is no financial strain upon the family, yet the children have never been taught any of the gracious and lovely traits which help to build a worthy character and a pleasing personality.

Every School and Church Should Have a Criticism Committee.

Loud, harsh voices, flat contradictions, continual quarreling and the most disagreeable qualities distinguish this family.

Such parents are certainly unfit to bring up families.

A fund for the erection of a large scientific institution, such as Dr. Elmer Gates has always longed to see established, would be a benefit to the world, an institution where the brain cells of vulgar and disorderly children, as well as the perverted and viciously inclined, could be developed into constructive qualities.

Every school and church in the land ought to have a "criticism committee," such as existed in the Oneida community years ago.

To this committee every person who had a complaint to make of the manners or conduct of another member of the community went, and the committee called the offending person with the complainant, and the whole subject was calmly and thoroughly investigated. And reproof was administered where it belonged, and if it was proven that any personal or selfish or jealous feelings prompted the complainant, he was the one reproved and publicly placed under ban, and made to see how unworthy was his action.

An Institution for Brain Building Would Also Be Good.

Unselfishness was the religious keynote of the society, and had it let sex problems alone it would have been one of the greatest factors for bettering the world which ever existed in America.

If our schools and colleges and churches could adopt this excellent idea of the Oneida community and established the "Criticism committee" and then carry Dr. Elmer Gates' dream of a brain-building institution into realization, the children of the idle rich might stand as good a chance of becoming agreeable and useful citizens as do the children of the poor today.

PRESBYTERIAN DOCTRINE

Editor Georgian:

Your recent statement, "The Presbyterian teaching of infant damnation seems to us horrible," is a gross misrepresentation, to say the least of it. And it is up to you to quote authorities and prove it, or else retract it. If I knew that you were a Methodist, I would tell you it was John Wesley, and not John Calvin, who once held such a belief. I come of Presbyterian ancestry dating back about two centuries, and claim to know something of the denomination at large. But I have never read or heard of one Presbyterian of any note who so believed and taught.

: A DEAD FIRE :

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

WHERE some lean trapper lingered long ago
To make himself secure against the night,
It stays a scar whereon no blade will grow,
Its old, cold ashes sifting to and fro,
Its charred sticks black where once was leaping light.

All green and lovely lies the forest floor
Around this patch of ever-barren soil;
Nearby the pinks and daisies bloom once more
Abundantly as in the years before,
Watching the queer gray serpents writhe and coil.

In all the world of grim and ghostly sights
There is no sight more like to lasting pain,
Suggesting hopeless days and long, sad nights;
It is the ashen wraith of past delights—
It is the heart of one who loved in vain.

WIRELESS HUNT FOR THAW BEGUN; FLEES FROM U.S. IN YACHT

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—The long, tireless arm of the wireless stretched out over the Atlantic to-day in the search for Harry Kendall Thaw, the Pittsburg millionaire who escaped from Matteawan State Asylum for the Insane, in which he had been confined for five years after his acquittal for the murder of Stanford White.

Following his escape from Matteawan at 7:45 o'clock yesterday morning, Thaw was traced to South Norwalk, Conn., and he is believed now to be speeding toward South America.

Search is going on by land and sea. On the land detectives are tracing five men who helped Thaw to get away in automobiles after he left the asylum's gates.

Papers and books found in Thaw's rooms at the asylum indicated that the slayer is bound for Brazil or some other South American country.

However, the authorities make room for the theory that Thaw may have left the maps and books for a blind and is really on his way to Erope.

Trans-Atlantic liners have been asked to watch for a 60-foot ocean greyhound type of yacht with a yellow funnel. According to persons who saw the yacht in the South Norwalk Harbor, the craft bore the name "Katherine." However, the plans of escape were so carefully laid that the detectives believe that they included efforts to hide the identity of the vessel.

Flight Plot Well Laid.

In this connection, belief prevails that the yacht was changed in appearance after she put to sea. A forward mast could have been rmoved, her funnel repainted and she could otherwise have been changed to elude detection.

Thaws escape by plot after five years of futile fighting in the New York courts combine all the romantic and sensational elements of fiction. From the moment that he dashed through the gates, eluding Keeper H. H. Barnum, while milk was being delivered at the institution, Thaw disappeared as completely as though the earth had swallowed him up.

Residents of villages near the Connecticut border and on a line between Matteawan and South Norwalk saw two automobiles, one roadster and the other a touring car, dashing by at 70 miles an hour and some thought they recognized Thaw and two other men crouching in the touring car. Then all trace was lost until the thread is picked up again at South Norwalk.

There it was learned that three men left a dust-covered motor car about 16 o'clock and immediately went on board the yacht. The yacht at once put to sea under a full head of steam ndd soon was lost to sight.

Can Not Be Extradited.

District Attorney Whitman says Thaw can not be extradited if located.

"There is no indictment pending against Thaw in New York and he can not be brought back because he was legally adjudged insane after being acquitted of murder," said Mr. Whitman.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, wife of the escaped lunatic, for whose love Thaw declared he shot and killed Stanford White, is playing at a theater in this city and to-day she felt that her life will be in constant danger until Thaw again is apprehended.

"He threatened to kill me and I know how remorseless he is," declared Mrs. Thaw. "I must have protection every minute of my life. Thaw is a man with a high dramatic instinct and I know if he should come to take my life the tragedy would be staged with all the theatrical effect that accompanied the killing of Mr White."

A rigid investigation is going on at the Matteawan Institution following ugly hints that Thaw had collusion inside the institition to aid his escape. Barnum was grilled so unmercifully that he nearly broke down. Time after time he declared that he used every means in his power to keep the prisoners safely. It was said that application would be made both to Governor Sulzer and Lieutenant Governor Glynn at Albany for a State investigation.

Seek Men Who Aided.

The only satisfactory method of finding Thaw, according to the police, is to fix the identity of the men who were waiting for him outside the institution with two automobiles. Something is known of these men. Ten days ago two men calling themselves Richard J. Butler and Michael O'Keefe, appeared at the Holland Hotel in Beacon, or Fishkill Landing as it was formerly known. They spent money freely and devoted considerable time to scouting about the country.

In answer to queries they said they were preparing to locate for the summer and wanted to find a quiet, restful spot. Friday evening they returned in an eighty-horsepower automobile. The size and strength of the car also caused much curiosity. They had with them men who registered as Roger Thompson and Eugene Duffy. A little later the party was joined by a fifth man, who registered as Thomas Flood. It was he who took the launch to Beacon. Flood was afterward identified as the reckless driver of the touring car who took Thaw across the Connecticutt State line at 70 miles an hour. He was the most reckless of the party.

Saturday morning the men left the Holland early and were not seen about the hotel again. From the talk of the men an impression arose that they were professional gun-fighters recruited from gangs in this city and were paid liberally to risk getting Thaw to safety. One of them, after drinking considerably in the barroom at the Holland Hotel, said: "It was his business to help good fellows."

Reward of $500 Offered.

Following the escape, Superintendent Raymond F. C. Kieb, of Matteawan Asylum, offered a reward of $500 for Thaw's arrest as a "dangerous fugivtive."

Dr. Kieb's belief is that Thaw made his way around Long Island and is now bound for Europe. Dr. Kieb feels that his personal reputation and integrity as a public official are at stake, and has personally hired a private detective agency to trail Thaw.

So closely has Roger O'Mara, the Pittsburg private detective, been connected with Thaw since the shooting of White that some persons jumped to th conclusion that O'Mara was concernd in some way with Thaw's escape. This was heightened by the fact that one of the men at the Holland Hotel slightly resembled him. Another posed as "Roger" Thompson. A Pittsburg telegram states, however, that O'Mara was in Pittsburg yesterday.

Mrs. Mary Thaw, mother of Harry K. Thaw, who has spent nearly a milli ndollars in trying to restore his liberty, was surprised to learn of her son's escape. She said she had come here in response to a requst from Harry that she pay him a visit.

The New York police department is keenly interested in the search for Thaw and have sento ut a general alarm with a description of the fugitive. The detective bureau will flood

BIG SENDOFF IS GIVEN PATHFINDER TOURISTS

Cheered by hundreds of lusty-voiced good roads rooters and with the martial strains of the Fifth Regiment band and the hearty good wishes and godspeeds of scores of Atlanta's most prominent citizens and officials ringing in his ears, E. L. Ferguson, official "pathfinder" for the all-Southern open-the-year-round transcontinental highway, Monday morning glided up Alabama street to Peachtree for the start of the long auto-hike to San Francisco.

Mr. Ferguson's "official" family consisted of Mrs. Ferguson, two little Fergusons and Hugh Grant, representing The Sunday American, inaugurator of the monster campaign, who will accompany the party as far as Birmingham.

There seldom has been a warmer "sendoff" than that prepared for "Pathfinder" Ferguson and party on Monday morning. All were in readiness—those entered in the last week, including the Mayor, the chief of police and the fire chief—and scores of other prominent citizens and autoists besides.

Makeup of the Parade.

First comes the Fifth Regiment band, to be followed by the transcontinental car occupied by Mr. Ferguson and party and in the order named, Mayor Woodward, in his private car; Chief Beavers, Fire Chief Cummings and other city officials, in addition to scores of cars piloted by the drivers who compete from time to time at the 'Drome. A number of motorcyclists were also in the line of march.

Stretched out on long, snaky Peachtree, after the departure from The Georgian-American office on East Alabama street, the parade assumed an imposing appearance, much to the delight and admiration of enthusiastic citizens.

The crowd caught the "drift" of the affair. This was no mere parade Here was a man, without a peer in the art of "trail blazing," starting out for far-away San Francisco, from Atlanta—obviously a monster project in which Atlantans should take particular pride and one filled with all sorts of possibilities, not only for the Gate City of the South, but the entire Southland, including the great Southwest, and the Pacific Coast country.

Big Papers Behind Project.

With these things in mind they gave this man Ferguson a send-off which will be heralded all the way to 'Frisco, through the medium of a score of leading Southern newspapers, including The Georgian and American, The Birmingham News, The Montgomery Advertiser, The New Orleans Item, The Dallas Times-Herald and The Houston Daily Post.

Mr. Ferguson left Atlanta with virtually every detail of the first lap to Birmingham complete. Traveling almost due west from Atlanta, the party will reach the Georgia-Alabama line at Tallapoosa late Monday afternoon. Here the party will spend the night, resuming the journey early Tuesday morning in company with President John Craft, of the Alabama Good Roads Association, and State Highway Commissioner Keller, who will make the entire trip through Alabama.

Arriving at Anniston early Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Ferguson and party will be received officially by the Mayor, the president of the Chamber of Commerce and other prominent citizens and officials. The Alabama city, it is understood, has planned a big reception for the tourists following a lively campaign conducted recently in the interest of good roads between Anniston and Birmingham.

Birmingham Plans Greeting.

In line with tentative plans, as a result of a choice of two routes between Anniston and Birmingham, Mr. Ferguson probably will decide to spend Tuesday night in Anniston, leaving there Wednesday morning. Pell City and Riverside will be reached in the order named; Wednesday night will be passed en route, and Birmingham, the end of the first lap of the long journey, will be reached shortly before noon Thursday.

If reports are accurate, the Magic City good roads boosters will give the transcontinental tourists a reception and send-off never before equaled in the Alabama metropolis. Prominent officials of the Alabama Good Roads Association, city and county officials, representatives of The Birmingham News and others, headed by Nappi's Band, will meet the party several miles outside of the city and escort it downtown, where a monster demonstration has been planned.

From Birmingham the tourists will go direct to Montgomery, where Governor O'Neal, a good roads enthusiast, will receive them officially.

Thaw on the way to trial.

Organist Would Bar Babies at Recitals

Eugene Wyatt, famous English organist, was of the opinion Monday that if he performed a second time at the Auditorium-Armory he would of a necessity exclude infants in arms from his audience.

His recital Sunday afternoon was frequently interrupted by the ambitious wails of prospective Carusos. Gardens and an occasional Scotti Professor Wyatt is the first of a number of organists to be presented by the Music Festival Association before an official city organist is selected. He made afine impression on a large audience.

WIVES OF DIGGS AND CAMINETTI WILL TESTIFY

Women To Be Asked to Tell of Their Knowledge of Husbands' Elopement

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 18.—Interest in the trial of Maury I. Diggs on the charge of violating the white slave law will be given fresh impetus to-morrow, when Mrs. Diggs and the wife of F. Drew Caminetti will take the stand as witnesses for the defense.

Mrs. Diggs, who is a handsome, dark-eyed woman, was expected to be called as the first witness. Last Friday she appeared in court with her young daughter, Evelyn, and was one of the most observed persons that sat facing the bench presided over by Federal Judge Van Fleet.

Mrs. Diggs and Mrs. Caminetti will be asked by the defense to tell of their knowledge of the relations between their husbands and Marsha Warrington and Lola Norris.

It is the contention of the attorneys for the defense that one of the reasons for the flight of Diggs and Caminetti to Reno with the two girls was that they believed their wives were about to have them prosecuted by the officials of the juvenile court of Sacramento. It is maintained by the defense that Mrs. Caminetti told her husband that she had complained to Judge Hughes, of the juvenile court of Sacramento, about Diggs and Caminetti in an effort to induce them to sever their relations with Miss Warrington and Miss Norris.

The Government contends that Diggs and Caminetti were reckless debauchers who had decided to go to Reno to desert their wives and induce the girls to lead immoral lives, n violation of the Mann act.

LAWYERS URGED BY ACCUSED TO PERMIT CROSS-EXAMINATION

That Leo Frank, accused of the murder of Mary Phagan, will take the stand in his own defense Monday morning was the announcement made by Attorney Reuben Arnold just before the trial was resumed at the opening of the fourth week.

A large crowd was attracted to the courtroom by the probabilitythat the prisoner would tell his story Monday and the keenest expectancy prevailed. It was problematical whether there would be any cross-examination. Ordinarily, of course, the accused in a murder case, merely makes his statement and the jury can believe it or discard it entirely as it chooses. It is said, however, that Frank has earnestly urged his lawyers to allow the Solicitor to cross-examine him.

When court reopened Monday Solicitor Dorsey took up the cross-examination of Harlee Branch, a reporter for the Atlanta Journal.

Branch was asked:

"Can you give any estimate of the time taken in conversation in Conley's re-enactment of the crime?" He replied that it took about fifteen minutes.

Q. You never said it was about half the total time, did you?—A. I don't recall.

Attorney Arnold took the witness.

Took Two Minutes To Write Notes.

Q. You said it took about fifteen minutes to cover the time lost in conversation?—A. Yes.

Q. He began at 12:18 and you left at 1:08? That would be about 50 minutes that you were there?—A. Yes.

Q. How long was he writing the notes?—A. Two minutes at the most. He did not write fast or slow?

Q. How long did he stay in the wardrobe?—A. About one minute.

Q. Did you see Conley in the newspapermen's room here in this courthouse reading a newspaper since this trial began?—A. I saw him looking at one as though he was reading it.

Mr. Branch was excused and Lou Castro, former ball player and at present fight promoter, was called as a witness by the defense to testify to time it took to walk certain distances.

Q. Did you walk from Marietta and Forsyth streets to the second floor of the pencil factory?—A. Yes.

Walk Required Castro Four and Half Minutes.

Q. How long did it take you?—A. Four and one-half minutes.

Q. Did you walk from the National Pencil Company to the corner of Whitehall and Alabama streets?—A. I did.

Q. How long did it take you?—A. Three minutes and twenty seconds.

Q. Did you walk from Broad and Hunter streets to the Pencil Factory?—A. Yes.

Q. How long did it take you?—A. One and one-half minutes.

The witness was excused.

Dorsey Plans To Use Defense's Witnesses.

Solicitor Dorsey, successful Saturday in introducing testimony as to the actual time it required for Jim Conley to enact his story of the disposal of Mary Phagan's body at the National Pencil Factory, prepared Monday to continue his examination of the defense's own witnesses along this line and later to put on witnesses for the State further to discredit the reliability of the test made by Dr. William D. Owens and three other men.

The Solicitor made a hard fight to get the evidence in. He made as hard a fight to keep out the testimony of Dr. Owens, but failed. When Harlee Branch, one of the newspaper men who made the trip through the factory with Conley, was called to the stand by the defense to testify in regard to an interview with the negro, Dorsey, as soon as the direct examination was concluded, started to question the witness as to his estimate of the time it required Conley

'Battle' Still Delayed By Strike of 'Heroes'

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—No naval battle was fought on Lake Michigan commemorating the fight that made Commodore Oliver H. Perry a hero, because several hundred "heroes" were on strike to-day.

Miss Catherine K. Brown, of New York, who attempted to obtain "strike-breakers" to act as "heroes and patriots" in the big spectacle, was guarded constantly by detectives. She received threats from the strikers, who were acting under instructions from Industrial Workers of the World leaders.

Patient Dies After 300 Neck Operations

BALTIMORE, Aug. 18.—After undergoing more than 360 operations during three years for the removal of a growth in his throat, George McDowell, 31 years old, formerly of Spartanburg, S. C., died in a hospital here while surgeons were making a last attempt to save his life.

For the last eighteen months, McDowell breathed through a silver tube inserted in his throat. He had been under so many operations that he became immune to the effects of cocaine.

Broker Tries Suicide; Saved by Pulmotor

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Harry Lattimer Bloodgood, broker and society man, attempted suicide by gas, but was saved from death by the use of a pulmotor.

Bloodgood was found in his home with his face covered by a large tin funnel attached to the end of a tube through which gas was flowing. He was seemingly lifeless. The pulmotor soon revived him.

Bloodgood is a brother-in-law of Clara Bloodgood, the actress who killed herself in Baltimore a few years ago.

DORSEY STRIVES TO USE DEFENSE'S WITNESSES TO SMASH TIME THEORY

to go through the factory May 30 and illustrate his version of the manner in which the Phagan girl's body was taken into the basement.

An instant and strenuous objection came from the lawyers for the defense. They protested taking the time that it required Conley to go through with the details he had described on the ground that he, knowing the possibility that he might later be charged with the crime itself, might probably have hurried through with it so as to leave the impression that the deed could have been done within the time that Frank was in the factory between 12:56 and the time he left for home.

Dorsey argued that the judge had let in an experiment by persons who knew of the alleged events of the day only by hearsay, so why not let in an experiment by a person who actually had taken a part in them. His argument won.

Victorious in this legal skirmish, the Solicitor was ready to press his advantage when court reopened Monday for the fourth week in the trial of Leo M. Frank on the charge of murdering the Phagan girl. His main endeavor was to show the unreliability of the estimate of Dr. Owens and his associates in the experiment by the defense. He also wanted to approximate as nearly as possible the actual time that it took Conley to reproduce the events, which the State claims were a part of the tragedy.

Tests Seem Fair To Neither Side.

So far as the testimony has developed along this line the time required for the enacting of Conley's story does not appear to be a fair test either for the State or the defense. The testimony already in is to the effect that the elapsed time from the moment Conley entered the factory building in charge of the officers until he went from second floor to basement and back again was about 47 minutes.

This estimate is evidently unfair to the State, as Conley was stopped several times in his narrative and was asked on other occasions to stop and illustrate the position of the dead girl's body. The interruptions served to lengthen the time that the negro took in going through the impressive drama.

The Solicitor from the witnesses yet to be examined will seek to show that these interruptions consumed an exceedingly large share of the time, and that the time occupied in the actual reproduction of the events of the day of the traged, was comparatively brief.

A number of character witnesses were still to be called by the defense. If Frank's lawyers still were of the intention to omit no one who might help the case of the accused man, it was certain that most of the day would be taken up with the testimony of the character witnesses who had not as yet been examined.

Defense Would Show Bias of Detectives.

The defense also had planned to go into a number of interviews that were published during the progress of the investigation into the murder mystery in an effort to show that the detectives from the first have been obsessed with the idea that no one else than Frank could have been guilty of the crime, and that they have refused to entertain any other theory or follow out the possibility of the guilt of any other person.

If this phase of the investigation is developed, it is likely that Chief of Detectives Lanford will be called to the stand and asked concerning his attitude throughout the search for the murderer.

The State has more than a score of character witnesses to be used in the rebuttal of the testimony given by persons who have sworn to the good character of the young factory superintendent. It is known that a number of them have sensational stories to disclose. What part of their testimony will be permitted to go on the record is problematical.

The defense has fought strenuously the introduction of testimony by which the State has sought to show that Frank has been guilty of grossly immoral conduct.

Frank's lawyers brand these stories as slanderous and untrue. They are able to refute them, they say, by the word of scores of reputable citizens but they assert that Frank is not being tried on any other charge than that of murder and that, therefore, the testimony in regard to alleged acts of immorality is utterly irrelevant, immaterial and illegal.

Doors Closed on Specific Instances.

Since the ruling of Judge Roan, closing the doors to the introduction by the State of evidence relating to particular incidents of alleged misconduct, Solicitor Dorsey has been unable to get substantiation of his charges of immorality before the jurors. The sole exception to this was in the cross-examination of Miss Irene Jackson, one of the defense's witnesses. Frank, according to Miss Jackson, three times to her knowledge came to the girl's room, opened the door and looked in upon the girls there and then turned and walked away.

The State will construe this as one of the indications of Frank's attitude toward his young women employees. The defense will set forth that the young women were supposed to be at work at 7 o'clock and Frank looked into the room fifteen minutes later to see whether they had arrived or not.

Shadow of Death on Mary Phagan's Home.

The shadow of death was on the home of Mary Phagan Monday morning. Her grandmother, Mrs. A. E. Benton, of Marietta, died late Sunday night after having a vision in which she saw the slain girl alive and happy. Mrs. Benton had been visiting the Coleman home, No. 704 Ashby street since the trial of Leo Frank began. She was confined to bed the second day of the trial when the details of the finding of the body were rehearsed.

"After my mother was confined to her bed her one hope was that she would live until the end of the trial," said Mrs. Coleman. Poor little Mary was her favorite grandchild and she never ceased talking about her."

Mrs. Benton is survived by two daughters, Mrs. J. W. Coleman and Mrs. J. W. Barmore, of Marietta, and four sons, Jack Benton, of Riverside, and Hardy, Thomas and Durell Benton, of Atlanta. The funeral arrangements have not been completed.

Phagan Jurors Dwell Together in Harmony.

The jury in the Frank case is an ideal one so far as their personalities are concerned, according to Chief Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner.

"These men are considerate of each other and there has not been a single kick yet," said the deputy. "They retire at practically the same time and arise in the same manner. This is different from most juries, on which there are oftentimes cranks. One man will retire at 7 and the next one at 1 o'clock. One man will want a room on the first floor and the other one will want to sleep on the roof.

"They are a cheerful lot, and there is never any discussion as to what they will do. If one wants to go for a walk, all are ready. There has been no kick on the food or the censorship of their mail and reading matter. If these men are as ideal at home as they are on the jury, all must have happy homes."

THAW'S ESCAPE FROM ASYLUM COMPLETE

Noted Prisoner Flees U. S. on Yacht—Can Not Be Extradited, Says Whitman.

the country with circulars bearing Thaw's picture.

The escape of Harry K. Thaw from Matteawan Asylum Sunday morning about 7:45 o'clock was the climax of the dramatic career of the young Pittsburg millionaire.

A careless sauntering into the courtyard of the institution, a gradual drawing nearer to the gate as the time came for the early rounds of the milkman, a lightning dart through the gate as it was opened to receive the vender of milk, a leap into a six-cylinder racing auto that stood across the road, a cloud of dust as the big machine lurched forward and gathered speed—and the slayer of Stanford White was gone like a rocket for the Connecticut State line, 30 miles away.

Ten minutes after Thaw dashed through the asylum gates under the very eyes and arms of Howard H. Barnum, a keeper, the big black car was plunging through the hamlet of Stormville, ten miles away.

Swaying from side to side, siren shrieking and the opened exhaust keeping up a continuous roar, the big machine passed through the village at 70 miles an hour.

Early risers saw Thaw and the men who had aided him to escape crouched in the machine to escape the clouds of dust and the rush of the wind.

Escape Carefully Planned.

Thaw's escape evidently was carefully planned and consummated without a hitch. He was aided by five men, four of whom came to Matteawan and registered at the village hotel four days ago. The fifth, supposed to be the driver of the big car, came Saturday and registered under the name of Thomas Flood, of New York.

The others gave their names as Roger Thompson, Richard D. Bustle, Michael O'Keefe and Eugene Duffy, all of New York. They brought with them a black limousine and a black touring car, the most powerful machines ever housed at a Mattewan garage. The limousine was abandoned after Thaw made his spectacular dash for liberty.

The four men who came first spent most of their time in the barroom of the hotel, and earned the name of "easy spenders." They talked volubly on a number of subjects, but refused to divulge the nature of their business in Matteawan. Thompson replied to all questions with a grin and the statement that his business was "helping good fellows who have gotton into trouble."

Signal Is Given.

At 7:30 o'clock Sunday morning Harry Thaw, long since risen and fully dressed, paced slowly back and forth in his room, with now and then a glance through the barred windows. Ten minutes before the execution of the escape plans, Thaw took his last look through the bars.

He saw the big black touring car, trailed by the limousine, loafing slowly along the road, apparently with no particular destination or purpose. He saw the touring car give one crazy lurch across the highway, the signal agreed upon. In front of the cars the milkman's wagon, that was to open the doors of the asylum to freedom, jangled and clanged with its load.

Thaw gave a last glance around the bare room in which he had spent his time since he was adjudged insane, thrusting into his pockets the few knicknacks he prized. Carelessly he sauntered through the corridors and out into the courtyard, whistling.

Howard Barnum, the keeper on duty at the gate, saw nothing unusual in the appearance of Thaw. The slayer of Stanford White, by his conduct at the asylum, had become a "trusty," and no thought of his escape was entertained. He paid no attention when Thaw moved toward the gate.

He Dashes Through Gate.

As the jangling milk wagon drew up in front of the asylum gates, the touring car and limousine came alongside and stopped, but their engines kept throbbing. Thaw moved closer to the gate. He stopped whistling and stood poised, ready for the dash. The milkman drove up with a clatter. Barnum opened the gate without a glance at Thaw. A figure dashed past him, brushing his coat sleeve—and Harry Thaw was running across the road toward the automobiles.

The man in the driver's seat swung open the door of the tonneau. Four pairs of hands dragged Thaw into the machine. There was a grinding crash as the gears were thrown into position, a blinding cloud of dust and smoke—and the big car plunged up the road.

Barnum, amazed, stood for one instant at the gates. Then he started vainly in pursuit. The first blot on a career of 30 years had come, and it left him stunned. Blindly he stumbled along the road after the big car, then realizing the futility of pursuit hurried back to the asylum and into the office of Dr. Kleb, the superintendent.

"Harry Thaw's gone—escaped," he shouted. Dr. Kleb sprang to his feet.

Car Outruns All Alarms.

In a moment he was telling the story of the escape to police headquarters, and in fifteen minutes the police had thrown their dragnet about the State. Matteawan became the center of a widening circle of telephone and telegraph alarms as Dr. Kleb called town after town only to learn that the big black car with the six men crouching low in it had already passed.

Unable to apprehend Thaw and his confederates by the telephone Dr. Kleb started in pursuit, with about as much chance of success as if he had been chasing a rifle bullet. The ten-minute start, the high power and terrific speed of the car, the slowness of the pursuing cars—all were in aid of Thaw, and the pursuers returned empty-handed to the asylum.

Thaw, at the rate he was traveling, should have been across the State line in half an hour.

After returning to the hospital Dr. Kleb at once placed Barnum under arrest, and posted a personal reward of $500 for Thaw's arrest. Dr. Kleb intimated that Barnum was bribed by Thaw, and that, after opening the gate for the milkman, he allowed it to remain open and stood silently by while Thaw walked out and to liberty.

Benjamin E. Dearybury, 2-year-old infant of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Dearybury, 72 Spring street, died at a private sanitarium at 2 o'clock Monday morning. The body was removed to Poole's and funeral announcement will be made later.

3 NEGROES SLAIN; 20 OTHERS JAILED

With three negroes killed and a fourth seriously wounded in free-for-all cutting scrapes Sunday, twenty negroes are under arrest at police headquarters, two charged with murder and the remainder charged with fighting, frequenting blind tigers and a host of misdemeanors.

The two against whom the charge of murder has been placed are B. C. Smith and Ed Smith, alias Ed Campbell. The third murderer, who is still at large, is said by the police to be Phoney Johnson, a negro desperado with a long police record.

Ed Smith, while resisting arrest after shooting Peter Jackson at 72 James street, was shot in the hand by Officer Palmer. B. C. Smith was captured after a hard chase by Officers Davis and Fielder and Louis Castro.

Most of the trouble started in blind tigers throughout the city. Johnson, after getting drunk, went to the home of Munch Harris, 282 Butler street, and stabbed him to death. B. C. Smith killed John Henry Wilkerson at 80 Decatur street about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and half an hour later Peter Jackson was shot by Ed Smith.

J. S. Brooks, a veteran of the Civil War, died at the Soldiers' Home Sunday. He was 77 years old. The body is at Poole's chapel, pending funeral arrangements.

The funeral of Beulah B. Jones, infant child of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Jones, who died Saturday, was held from the home Monday morning. Interment at Hollywood.

LEO FRANK'S OWN STORY TO ADD FINAL TOUCH TO STATE'S GREATEST TRIAL

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

It is rather an extraordinary thing that on this Monday, the beginning of the fourth week of the most remarkable murder trial ever held in Georgia, the interest should be in nowise abated or lessened, and that the opening of court to-day saw the biggest, hungriest and most insistent crowd of curious spectators yet on hand at the opening of court.

Far from letting go the Phagan mystery, the public to-day seems to be gripping it even more eagerly than ever before.

Opinion still is widely divided as to the guilt or innocence of Leo Frank, and there have been many switches of conclusion and reversals of theory, pro and con, within the past week, and no doubt there is much more of the same sort of thing to come.

People to-day believe Frank guilty who started out believing him innocent, and the rule is working right around the other way, moreover!

Despite the many things that have been said and the countless things that have been written of the Frank trial and all that led up to it, it remains, on the threshold of its fourth week, the most absorbing melodrama ever enacted in Atlanta—the most bitterly fought and the most uncompromisingly contested trial known to the criminal history of the State of Georgia.

The principal parties to the case are, of course, Mary Phagan, the dead girl; Leo Frank the defendant at bar, and Jim Conley, the grimly accusing negro.

Four months ago no one of these people was known to many Georgians.

Mary Phagan, a sweet little working girl, had a circle of perhaps a hundred friends—not 1 per cent of the population of Atlanta ever had heard of her.

Frank Little Known.

Leo Frank, the superintendent of the National Pencil Factory, was hardly known by very many more people—he had a business and college acquaintance, and a limited circle of social intimates. Not more than 2 or 3 per cent of Atlanta's population ever had heard of him.

Jim Conley, the negro, more than well known in police circles, along the way of the "Butt In" bar in Peters street, and a familiar figure enough along Darkest Decatur, numbered among his respectable acquaintances not more than 50 people—if nearly so many—perhaps.

Now—less than four months after the terrible deed enacted in the pencil factory on Saturday, April 26—there is not a hamlet a crossroads store or a country or city home in all Georgia that has not heard of every party to the sordid story, and that has not discussed everyone of them, together and singular, from every point of view imaginable!

It is more than morbid curiosity upon the part of people that prompts this great and never-flagging interest in the Phagan case—it is more than the mere fascination of crime that links the heart and mind of the people to it.

"Human Interest" Abounds.

In the case of Leo Frank there is that indescribable element we call "human interest," that vague and elusive thing that tugs at the heart-strings and nags at the conscience—there is the knowledge upon the part of the public that a monstrous crime has been committed, and that responsibility for it must be fixed, no matter the cost and no matter the effort!

The public does not clamor for Leo Frank's life so much, nor for Jim Conley's—it demands that responsibility for Mary Phagan's brutal murder be fixed, and it will not be satisfied until that responsibility IS fixed.

At the same time, I believe—and I have believed all along—that the public wants to see justice done and fair play indulged in.

If Frank is not guilty he has been punished already beyond reason or reparation. He should be turned loose, with every amend decency and mistaken zeal may summon to their embarrassed effort at righting a frightful wrong.

If, however, he is guilty, and that is shown, then the inconvenience and discomfort accorded him thus far will matter little, if anything.

It is a tremendously big game the lawyers are playing in the stuffy little courtroom in the old City Hall Building.

On one side is the majesty of the law of the land, that must be maintained at any and all cost—that majesty of the law that may be invoked in behalf of the humblest no less than the highest. On the other hand is the defendant—an abstract thing in the sight of the law.

On one side is the great State of Georgia, calling for a "tooth for a tooth and an eye for an eye"—on the other side are those guaranteed rights of citizens, embodied in Frank, that must not be challenged lightly or without complete and compelling reason.

It Is a Big Game.

It is a big game—it involves that most precious of all gifts of God, a human life, and a human reputation, a home and the happiness thereof. It is a game, nevertheless, that involves on the contrary a sinister charge of utter unworthiness upon the part of the man who still protests his rights to these precious gifts, jealously given of a Divine Power, and as jealously guarded by His laws, no less than by the laws of human beings.

One can not get away from the conclusion, cited many times, that, after all is said and done, Frank's character will determine the verdict in the case now on trial.

His character will be found to be his greatest asset and his most sure dependence, in this his hour of pressing peril—as his lack of it, if shown, must prove to be his final and everlasting damnation.

Frank, by injecting his character in issue, has challenged the worst upon the part of the State.

He has cited scores of witnesses to uphold it—he has made a brave, and maybe an abundant, showing.

The State, however, says it will break down that character—that it will show Frank's unspeakable depravity, even as charged glibly and smugly by the negro, Conley, as yet uncorroborated by any person the most abandoned would care to believe.

If the State can do this thing——

Can it be possible that Frank, through all these years, has been leading a double life?

Can it be true that he has, while professing to be an honorable and upright man, a faithful husband, a dutiful and worthy son, a deserving and decent friend among his neighbors and his kind, nevertheless been really, a moral degenerate, an ignoble and deceitful creature—and can it be that these things, so long and so cleverly concealed, at last led him to murder?

The State's Contention.

The State holds that his family circle, his intimate social acquaintances, and his business associates, would, as a matter of fact, be the last people in the world to know the truth of Frank's double life—for, say they, Frank would employ every artifice and summon to his aid every possible device to keep those very people from discovering the truth concerning him.

This, so the State contends, is precisely what Frank did do—and in that way they justify his alleged intimacy with Conley and his quick calling upon Conley for help, when eventually he found himself with the blood of a human being on his hands.

The State is asking a good deal when it askes the public to believe this of Frank, in the light of the evidence of his good character tendered last week, and it hardly is possible that the public WILL believe it, unless the State makes its charges crystal clear.

Men will ask themselves—and will ask themselves wisely—whose reputation is safe, if it may be brushed away and broken down by the uncorroborated word of such a creature as Conley?

But, Conley uncorroborated in one thing—while Conley corroborated is puite and altogether another!

The state is yet to be heard in rebuttal of Frank's character witnesses—and so judgement must be supended pending their revelations.

The only point is—and it has benn an evident point so long that to reemphasize it seems trite—the State must make good on its sinister charge of perversion and degeneracy upon the part of Frank, or its case will be greatly weakened, perhaps beyond repair.

I have an idea that Frank's statement on the stand may weigh heavily in the minds of the jury.

Frank the Star.

Indeed, it is not improbable that the very best jury speech and jury argument put forth in defense of Frank, with all due appreciation and respect of and for Mr. Rosser and Mr. Arnold, will be made by Leo Frank, himself.

His statement, although not sworn to, will carry an appeal that hardly can be framed of other lips—either that, or it will fal flat and stale and of no consequence whatever.

The trial long ago resolved itself into a matter of Frank vs. Conley.

It is the defendant's word against the negro's.

Both have self interest in the verdict—the life of one or the other must pay the forfeit of Mary Phagan's murder.

The forthcoming statement of Frank, and the rebuttal of the character witnesses, constitute the two events ahead that may, within themselves, make or mar this case, as one may come to view it eventually.

And it is this situation, no doubt, that holds up the interest to-day, as the fourth week begins—for, despite all that has gone before, the case is not yet nearly ended, and there still remains many things undetermined.

Widow of Wealth 'Turkey Trots' at 78

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., Aug. 18.—In proceedings to test the competency of Mrs. Mary N. Gray to manage her $50,000 estate, it was testified that the 78-year-old widow had these fads:

Joy rides from Honesdale to New York.

Turkey trotting in the Wayne Hotel corridor.

Giving huge tips.

Wearing four skirts and a sweater to keep out evil spirits.

Robert H. Gray, of Denver, a nephew, says her physician has drawn exorbitant fees.

Down Went His Gum, On Went His Train

ATLANTIC CITY, Aug. 18.—Chewing gum or tobacco while on duty has been forbidden the motormen by the management of the Short Line road.

Glen Grice bought a penny stick of gum at Ocean City just before he boarded his train for a run to this city. After the train had attained a 30-mile gait, Grice swallowed the gum. It lodged in his throat and shut off his wind.

The motorman fell over unconscious and the train, heavily loaded with passengers, ran for three miles before the conductor could stop it.

Wilson's Own Dentist InNavy,Mann Charge

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18. — The charge that "the navy is making a farce" of the retirement age law, and the further disclosure that President Wilson has appointed his personal dentist to the reserve corps are made by Minority Leader Mann.

"While the retirement age in the navy is 62," said Mr. Mann, one of thees new dental surgeons is now over seventy-six. But he happens to come from the same town as the Secretary of the Navy. One of the surgeons is 62 years, and another who is 42, was the personal dentist of the President."

Patten, Again in Pit, Cleans Up $500,000

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—James A. Patten, whose deals in grain and cotton in the last decade have attracted world-wide attention, is once more the central figure in a speculation that is causing the corn pit on the Board of Trade to boil with excitement.

Mr. Patten started to buy corn three weeks ago, when the first reports that hot weather and drought were damaging the crop began to come in. His paper profits at the present time are said to be at least $500,000.

Columbus to Have Eight-Story Hotel

COLUMBUS, Aug. 18.—Vice President J. Ralston Cargill, of the Columbus Hotel Company, which is to erect a $25,000 hotel in Columbus, is asking for bids for the erection of the structure.

It is to stand on the corner of Twelfth street and Second avenue, and is to be eight stories high.

U. S. Will Cremate Dead in Canal Zone

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—The bodies of persons who die in the Panama Canal Zone will be cremated there by the United States as a prevention against the spread of pestilence.

A contract for the crematory plant has been awarded to a Boston firm and erection will begin immediately.

MEAT IS GOING UP AND UP AND UP

Experts Say Country Will Have Worst Shortage of Beef in Its History.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18—This country will experience next winter the greatest shortage of beef in its history. Prices, which already have advanced 25 to 50 per cent in a year, are to be 10 to 15 per cent higher by January 1. Meat will sell at unheard of figures.

The representative of a big packer in Chicago said yesterday: "Forty cents a pound for the choice cuts seem a certainty, 45 cents in a probability, and even 50 cents a possibility before spring."

George L. McCarthy, proprietor of The National Provisioner, said today that the stock population in the United States is more depleted at present than it has been at any previous time in ten years. That in itself, Mr. McCarthy said, is sufficient cause for very high retail prices. But the drought in Kansas, Oklahoma and the Southwest has aggravated the situation bad before, till it may now be called alarming.

Sky-High Prices by Midwinter.

The expert buyer for Richard Webber, a butcher with an extensive business in New York, didn't hesitate to say that prices are going sky-high by midwinter. The average price paid by the laborer for beef to-day, he said, is 16 cents a pound. The same cuts will cost 18 cents or more in a few months.

The same authority predicted that the average price of sirloin steaks will creep up 3 cents in as many months, while the average price of porterhouse steaks will advance 4 to 5 cents in the same period.

The corn-killing drought in Kansas and neighboring States has deprived the cattle-raising sections of feed for their stock. Fodder remains, but the corn itself, necessary to fatten the steers for market, will have to be shipped into sections of country naturally grain exporters, at an expense that will preclude the idea of satisfactory profit by cattle raisers at anything near the present prices.

For ten days a steady rush of cattle to the big stock markets of the Middle West has been in progress. The raisers can't afford to hold and feed the cattle. In many instances, cows are being sent to market in such numbers that the generation of calves due next spring will be much less than the average.

Rushed to the Slaughter Houses.

Cattle receipts in the Western markets first rose above the normal when the hot weather killed the pasturage. Carload after carload of steers went to Chicago and Kansas City. The general movement to the slaughter houses is still in progress. In the first three days of the present week 129,000 cattle were received at the Western markets, nearly as many as in the entire week a year ago.

The same condition to a certain extent holds true in the hog market, and receipts have been nearly doubled since the drought.

The general situation is about as bad in the East. Mr. McCarthy said that farmers over a great part of the East are selling cattle just now that they would be holding had the hay crop been up to the standard.

Live stock prices are naturally slumping while the markets are loaded with stock. But in spite of the fact that steers and hogs are costing the packers less than at any time for several months no reduction in the wholesale price of meats is announced, and the housewife has obtained no benefits because of the present abnormal conditions in the markets.

The drought, according to stock men, will result in immense profits for the packers because of their ability to buy now and when the cattle raisers are at a disadvantage and to set prices this winter when there is a scarcity in the cattle receipts.

To The Young Expectant Mother

Women of Experience Advise the Use of Mother's Friend.

There is a certain degree of trepidation in the minds of most women in regard to the subject of motherhood. The longing to possess is often contradicted by the inherent fear of a period of distress.

But there need be no such dread in view of the fact that we have a most noble remedy in what is known as Mother's Friend. This is an external application that has a wonderful influence and control over the muscular tissues of the abdomen. By its daily use the muscles, cords, tendons and ligaments all gently expand without the slightest strain; there is no pain, no nausea, no nervousness; what was dreaded as a severe physical ordeal becomes a calm, serene, joyful anticipation that has its impress such as our foremost teachers of Eugenics are striving to drill into the minds of the present generation.

In almost every community there are women who have used Mother's Friend, and they are the ones that recovered quickly, conserved their health and strength to thus preside over families destined by every rule of physiology and the history of successful men and women to repeat the story of greater achievement.

Mother's Friend is prepared after the formula of a noted family doctor by the Bradfield Regulator Co., 138 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Write them for their instructive book to expectant mothers. You will find Mother's Friend on sale by all drug stores at $1.00 a bottle.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

YOU MUST DECIDE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am in love with a young man who lives in the same neighborhood and is of a very high standard. He has told me he loves me and would like me to become his wife, but as he is a Hebrew and I am a Christian would like your advice, for I can not live without him. G. M. S.

This is a matter too serious for a third party to determine. Marriages of this nature are sometimes happy, but the risk is great. When it means an estrangement from one's family and friends, I would throw my influence against it.

BE, PERSISTENT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 19 and deeply in love with a young lady one year my senior. One day I proposed to her and she said her parents would not permit the marriage because of the difference in nationality.

Please let me know what to do, for I love her. HEARTBROKEN.

You are too young to marry even though you had their consent, so do not feel discouraged. Go on loving her; attend to your business duties faithfully; develop yourself mentally, and don't despair or worry. Make yourself such a desirable suitor their objections will vanish.

DON'T MAKE THE EFFORT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a girl of 18 and in love with a man one year my senior. We have never kept company. He tells everyone he loves me, but while he is in my presence I fail to see it. How may I find out if he is true to me? I. H.

The man who tells "everyone" he loves a girl, and gives her no evidence, doesn't love her very much.

Unless you have made mutual vows of love, he can not be untrue to you. A man must make vows before he can break them. Do not fret yourself about him. Time for that when you are engaged.

YOU ARE A LITTLE EXACTING.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18, and for the past four months have been keeping steady company with a young man of 20. When I first became acquainted with this young man he was making a nice salary, but I told him that if he wanted to go with me he must change his profession, which he did, therefore starting at the bottom of the ladder again. It is also understood that he will not care to be married before three years, to which my parents and myself agree, provided we become engaged in about a month from now, which he absolutely refuses to do, claiming that he does not want to become engaged before next year. My parents have therefore forbidden my going with him under any other conditions.

Now, do you think that if he really loves me, as he claims he does, he would allow a matter of a few months to break our keeping company? The only reason he gives for not wanting to be engaged is that he is making a small salary, but if I and my folks are satisfied, I don't see why he should object. IN DOUBT.

He gave up his profession for you, starting at the bottom of the ladder again. I think he has conceded his share, and, under the circumstances, you should not nag him into an engagement until he is ready. Love is worth too much to risk it by the exacting attitude which I am afraid you are taking.

Two Birds—One Stone.

Norah had arrived from Erin's Isle a week before, and was with difficulty being "broken in" to the routine of an English household. Cleanliness was not a very strong point with her, and her cooking, apart from "spuds," was hardly all that could be desired.

"If you are not quite sure on any point, come and ask me at once," said her mistress.

Dinner was just about to be served when there was a clatter along the hall, and the breathless Norah poked her head around the dining room door.

"Please, ma'am," she asked, "an' how will I be knowin' when the puddin' is done enough?"

"Stick a knife into it," said her mistress, with a resigned air. "If the knife comes out clean, the pudding is ready to serve."

"Yes, ma'am," said Norah; "and I'll be after that crathur that's boilin' over."

"And, oh, Norah"—the mistress had an after-thought—"if the knife does not come out clean, you might stick all the rest of the knives into the pudding."

In a Nutshell

By MINNA IRVING.

WE heard with equanimity
That coal was soaring high,
We bore it when the price of meat
Went kiting to the sky;
When eggs and butter followed suit
We stood it like a sport,
But, lo, the worst has come at last—
The peanut crop is short.

Oh, what is summer time without
The tuber of delight?
We ought to bust the peanut trust,
We ought to make a fight;
We ought to put our woe in print,
We ought to go to court,
We ought to take the warpath when
The peanut crop is short.

The Mistakes of Jennie .:. By HAL COFFMAN

Being a Series of Chapters in the Life of a Southern Girl in the Big City

"No, no, my boy; I could not be so selfish."

CHAPTER XXV.

AFTER the row Jennie had with the installment man, she still owed $28 for her clothes. The man had come for his weekly payment on the clothes, which Tom had to pay to keep the man from literally tearing them off Jennie's back, for Jennie didn't have the money to pay him, and if Tom hadn't been there at the time Jennie would probably have had to do like other girls have done in such an emergency—gone out and GOT the money, never mind HOW.

When Jennie told Tom she still owed $28 for her clothes—that she foolishly bought and did not need—Tom left Jennie in the front room, saying he wanted to go in and talk to her mother a while.

Jennie's mother was lying in bed, and, sick as she was, managed a cheery smile at seeing Tom and told him she always regarded him as her boy, and that she had always hoped that some day he would marry Jennie. Tom did not tell Jennie's mother how much Jennie still owed on her clothes, for he knew that she had trouble enough without worrying any more. Instead, he told her that he had a little money saved up—for the time that Jennie would consent to marry him—and that he wanted her to take it and to go down to the beach somewhere, take a good rest, get well again and take Jennie with her.

At this the good woman cried and said over and over, as she patted Tom's hand:

"No, no, my boy. I could not be so selfish as to take your money that was meant for yours and Jennie's happiness."

A VERY NEAR THING .:. A Complete Short Story

VANSITTART was going to smash. At least, it looked ominously like it. Nobody said it openly. Nominally, nobody was supposed to even suspect that it was likely. But men whispered it to one another in the city; and when men whisper about a thing it is oftener far more serious than if they talked about it in their loudest voices.

"There's about one chance in a million for me!" he told himself. "If the Oriental Bank floats, I'm safe; if it closes down, I'm finished. And it will close down unless a miracle happens, and—Lily will know that the gods have given her her revenge!"

Vansittart's world would have been astonished, perhaps cynically amused, had it seen him now. After locking the door of his room from the inside, to render intrusion impossible, he opened a secret drawer in his desk by touching a spring, and took from it a bundle of letters and a photograph.

The letters were love letters, and the photograph that of a girl.

A fair-haired girl, with a pretty face, without Vansittart's pitiless power, but brave and patient, with love and faith in her eyes. And the letters had been written by a girl to the man to whom she had given her heart, whose wife she expected to be.

"By jove!" muttered Vansittart, as he put the letters down, "she's had to wait for her revenge, but it looks as if Fate is going to give it to her at last."

It had been an ordinary, commonplace story of a man's selfishness and falsity and a girl's outraged trust and love. Vansittart had been engaged to Lily Gordon, a girl clerk in the city, before he had begun to rise, and had left her without a word to fight life's battle for herself as soon as he began to grow rich.

Too Late.

"I was a cur, a mean cur!" he muttered. "But it's too late to think of it now. If I go down she'll know. Will she be glad, I wonder?"

He tried to laugh, but there was a harsh discordance in the sound. Replacing the latters and the photograph in the desk, he went out.

He felt he could not sit there waiting for ruin to come.

There was a man in the city, another speculator, named James Harper, whom Athol Vansittart had helped many times, by whose side he had stood in more than one threatening crisis. Harper had not the power to save him in his turn, but Vansittart felt that he must talk to someone if something in his brain were not to snap.

So he went to him now.

Harper was a keen-featured man, with a trick of half curving his lips in what promised to be a smile and never became one. He was alone in his office when Vansittart entered and grasped his hand cordially.

"You've come to talk over things, old chap?" he said. "I'm glad of it. I'd like to cheer you up. But wait a minute."

He closed the inner door.

"Anything wrong?"

"Oh, no; only a new girl I've got to help with my letters, and I don't want her to hear too much of our talk. Business is one thing, but a confidential chat between friends is another. I hope it's not so bad with you as some fools are making out?"

"I'm afraid some fools are rather wise," returned Vansittart, grimly. "It is no use blinking things. I'm done for if the Oriental closes down."

Harper's tone was sympathetic, but he was pretending to pick up something he had dropped on the floor and his eyes were very eager.

"Look here, Harper," Vansittard said with an effort; "I've come to you because I believe you're the only true friend I've got. As I said, I shall pull through if the bank stands firm. But I don't think it can. It's in a bad way itself, and if it can't raise a big loan practically at once it will close its doors. And if it does that I can't face the music."

"Surely, it's not so bad as that?"

Very Desperate.

"I tell you it is!" Vansittard answered, fiercely. "I shall owe more than I can pay. I shall be disgraced as well as ruined. But I'm not going to stop to face it. Harper, if—if anything happens to me, do your best to prevent too much mud being thrown on my name. It's all you can do."

There was a threat of self-destruction in his tense expression, if not on his lips. Harper knew it, but he did not endeavor to stop him or to argue with him. He only gripped his hand once more, with a few conventional words of sympathy.

And when Vansittart had gone Harper laughed.

Laughed, and then sat considering and frowning, until he suddenly struck his hand on his desk with a low, triumphant exclamation, as though he had hit on a way of accomplishing something that had seemed impossible before.

He left his office hastily, and when he had gone the inner door opened and there came out a girl, with love and terror on her colorless face.

It was late before Vansittart went home. He had gone back to his office and waited for news, but none had come. He left the place at last with a morbid conviction strong on him that he would never return to it. He hailed a hansom, but the man had to ask him twice before he was told where to drive him.

It seemed to Vansittart a matter of indifference where he went. It was not that he had abandoned all hope. He clung to the gambler's belief that there is always a last chance. But he was too restless and excited to fix his mind on anything except the news he was waiting for.

Ah, what was that?

The Crash.

The street was quiet, all but deserted. There was a gas lamp opposite Vansittart's door, and the illumination was gleaming on a pink something. It was the placard of an evening newspaper which a hawker was offering for sale.

He hastened toward it. In bold, merciless letters, the words stared at him:

"FAILURE OF THE ORIENTAL BANK."

He bought a paper, oblivious that he gave a sovereign for it. In the space reserved for late news were two smudged lines, stating that the Oriental Bank had closed its doors that evening and posted a notice outside that they would not reopen on the morrow.

So it was all over. It was useless to hope against hope any longer. His career was finished. He was a ruined man, with disgrace awaiting him if he lived.

He let himself into his house with a latch key, and went straight to the library, where he had been in the habit of working. At first he switched the electric light on full, but at once lowered it to a tiny shimmer. No need of much light for what he was going to do!

A revolver was ready to hand when he opened a drawer. There was nothing else for him to do.

* * * * * * * * *

"No, no! Listen to me, Athol. I've come to tell you—I've come to tell you it's a lie."

Lily was beside him, struggling with him to get the revolver away. He stared at her stupidly.

"A lie?"

"The placard. The bank was not stopped. Mr. Harper had the false placard and the two lines of false news put in one copy of the paper. I have proof of it; I have found the man who printed it!"

The Plot.

He was hard to convince. But she told him how she had been in the inner office while he was talking to Harper, and how, after he was gone, Harper's manner had been so suspicious that she had followed him to see what he meant to do. He had gone to a printer. It was not for a long time after he had left the shop, however, that she half forced and half frightened the printer to confess that Harper had paid him handsomely to turn out the sham placard and insert the two lines in the paper. He had said it was for a joke, but the girl had not believed it. She had guessed that he intended to use the placard and doctored newspaper to drive Vansittart to desperation by leading him to believe that all was lost.

"So I came here to tell you," she said. "I saw you come in, but you did not see me. So I had to knock, and when the servant opened the door I ran past her. I had seen the light flash from the window into the street, and that helped me to find my way to you. The placard is a lie!"

Vansittart looked at her; there was

Feor for the Loser.

Two costers were in the British Museum, looking at the statue of a Roman gladiator. One of his arms was broken off, his left leg ended at the knee, his helmet was battered, and there were several chips from the face of the warrior. Underneath the statue was an inscription, "Victory."

"Lor' lumme, Bill," said the gentleman in pearlies, "if that there bloke won the victory, what must 'a' bean the state of the bloke what lost?"

.:. One Woman's Story .:.

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XXII.

SO agitated had Mrs. Danforth been at the news of Mary's break with Gordon Craig that she lay down on the couch in the tiny parlor until the dishes were washed and put away. This task the daughter performed quickly and noiselessly. She was thankful that her mother had asked no more questions just then, for she felt that she had not the courage to reply to them. Her work done, she glanced nervously at the clock. It was now a quarter past eight. Bert Fletcher would be here soon. She must prepare her mother for the call. She went into the parlor and, drawing a chair close to the couch, took the pale and worn woman's hand in hers.

She Started Nervously.

"Mother, dear," she said, "I think you ought to go to bed now, for you do not feel well enough to see company."

Mrs. Danforth started nervously. "Company!" she exclaimed. "Why, what company could you be expecting?"

Mary smiled bitterly at the suggestion implied by the question.

"That's true, mother," she said, a hard ring in her voice. "I am not troubled with friends or guests, am I? But this evening will be an exception, for I am expecting a caller—Mr. Fletcher."

Her mother sat up and eyed her keenly. "Mr. Fletcher?" she asked. "Is he the man who was so nice to you one evening last winter?" There was eagerness in the tone, and as she noted this the girl appreciated that her loving, gentle mother was actually anxious to have her marry if it would mean freedom from care for herself and the girl.

"Mary, why don't you answer me?" demanded Mrs. Danforth.

Mary started guiltily. "I beg your pardon, mother," she said. "Did you ask me a question? I must have been absorbed in my own thoughts. What did you ask, dear?"

"Only if this Mr. Fletcher is the man who brought you home one night in a cab when it was stormy?"

"Yes," assented Mary, "that is the man."

"Well, I remember that you once said he was very kind," remarked her mother, watching the girl's face.

"Yes," said Mary, "he is kind—even if he is not a cultured gentleman and does murder the king's English. But, after all, truth and fidelity are more than education and manners. I have had enough of men of culture and of nothing else." She tried to change her sharp speech into a laugh that her mother might not suspect how sore her heart was.

Mary Remembered.

The widow replied with one of her sighs, but this time the sound was indicative of hope and satisfaction.

"He evidently knows that you are a lady, and he treats you as if you were. So he must be something of a gentleman himself. I am ready to like him if he is good to you. Oh, my child," lifting one of her daughter's hands to her pale lips and holding it there, "nobody, not even you, knows what I have gone through in seeing you overworked and in trying to save and manage here at home. There have been times when but for you I would have prayed to die."

Mary remembered how, less than two hours ago, she had said to herself: "If it were not for mother I would want to die." But she smiled reassurance into her mother's face.

"Since we need each other, mother," she said, jestingly, "let us both determine to live for each other. And there's a better time coming for us both."

The mother looked at her anxiously. "You mean that, Mary? You are not keeping the truth from me or trying to pacify me by seeming hopeful when you are not, are you, dear?"

"No, mother," replied the girl. "I am speaking the truth when I say that I believe there is a better time coming for you."

She did not add "and for me." Perhaps she did not think of it.

"I do not like to seem inquisitive," Mrs. Danforth went on, "but I am wondering how long ago you broke your engagement to Gordon—Mr. Craig, I mean."

The girl hesitated a moment before replying, and she avoided her mother's gaze.

"Not so long ago," she said indifferently. "You know I always think that when people find they are not suited to each other it is best for them to agree to disagree with as little fuss and talk as possible."

There was so much finality in her manner that the elderly woman ventured to say no more about the Texan. Yet she was not satisfied, and soon asked timidly:

"This—this Mr. Fletcher—do you like him very much, Mary, my dear?"

"I have told you, mother," said the girl, "that he is a kind man, and has been good to me—so why should I not like him?"

Her mother began another question, but a ring at the bell checked it.

"Good Night, Dear."

"Good night, dear," she said, rising hastily and hurrying into her own room.

When the door had closed behind her mother, Mary stood, her hands over her eyes. Perhaps she was praying, perhaps trying to collect her thoughts. But as the bell sounded forth a second summons she went slowly into the kitchen and pressed the button releasing the catch of the lower front door. For another minute she stood poised as if now, at this last moment before her guest's arrival, she would escape him, would avoid receiving him. Then, recovering her self-control and courage, she passed out into the narrow hall, opened her front door and stood waiting for the man whose footsteps she heard on the stairs ascending toward her.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THE most restful way for spending one's vacation is to watch one's neighbors. If they are idle, it makes the one on a vacation just indignant enough to make his blood circulate, and if they are working, the sight of their labors makes his own idleness soothing in contrast.

The man who lived next door interested himself with the Lysander John Appleton family, who were occupying their summer home. He watched them the day they moved in: Two women of regal bearing, a boy with a forehead like a Mansard roof, and a meek-looking man who might be a servant, the Appleton family being an ideal American family.

It was the women who interested the idle man the most. They were of such queenly bearing and had such perfect figures he longed for the fingers and skill of a Rodin. "I never," he murmured, "saw more perfectly-formed women."

They entered the house, closed the door, and for a half hour there was no outward evidence of occupancy, and then the man on the side porch saw a woman emerge from the back door the sight of whom made him throw back his head and laugh.

She had a figure like that of a featherbed, and if she had ever had a waist line it had long ago moved up and become lost in the foothills of her mountainous bosom. She shook and quivered as she walked like a bowl of calves'-foot jelly, and while he gazed at her in bewilderment the door opened again and there emerged a younger woman so thin that she looked the same coming as going.

For a week he saw two women with perfect figures enter and emerge at the front door, and a feather bed and a bean pole from which garments drooped like a flag at half mast emerge and enter at the back door. Then one evening when he saw Lysander John sitting alone on the porch in front he walked across the lawn and asked for an explanation.

"They are the same women," said Lysander John sadly. "If you are interested, I will show you the means of the transformation."

He led the way upstairs to a dressing room where two long, vise-like garments hung over the back of a chair.

"The modern magician's wand," he said, pointing to two corsets."

The Ten Commandments of the Summer Wife

By DOROTHY DIX.

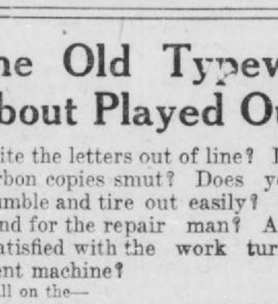

ARISE, sister, gird up thy straight front, put glad raiment upon thyself and take thy vacation! yea, take it though thou hast to fight for it with tooth and nail, for she that hath wrestled with the robber that lieth in wait in the butcher shop and the despoiler who abideth in the grocery store, and who hath provided the wherewithal her family is fed three times a day for three hundred and sixty-five days, needeth to slip the yoke for a space while the galled place healeth.

He is as a phonograph.

2. When thou takest thy vacation, go it alone. Be not as those foolish wives who say, "I have never been parted from my husband, and lo, where he goeth there will I go also," for belike thou hast gotten on thy husband's nerves and he would fain have a rest from thee.

3. Reflect that nine months of the year can a man rejoice and be exceeding glad to be married. Ten months can he steel his heart with fortitude to endure it, but on the twelfth month he noticeth that his wife's nose is crooked, and he knoweth her cooking. Therefore get thee hence in the twelfth month, and when thou shalt return to him he will make a feast at thy coming.

They shall mock thee.

4. Stay not too long, though, on thy vacation, for it is not good that a husband should be left alone to his own devices until he can find the secret spot wherein the clean shirt hideth itself and the fresh collars are secreted. Verily it was written in the Book of the Prophets that a little absence maketh the heart grow fonder, but too much absence inclineth it to another skirt.

5. When thou rockest in the chair that swayeth back and forth on the Summer hotel gallery, boast not thyself of thine automobile, and thy butler, and thy social prestige, and the diamonds thou hast left behind thee in thy husband's safe; for the women thou braggest to art the Daughters of Missouri, that even require to be shown, and they shall mock thee behind thy back as a liar.

6. Tell not the secret of thy life. Reveal not the weaknesses of thy husband, and pull not forth from thy closet the skeleton where it is hidden because thou happenest to stroll in the twilight with a sympathetic sister, for lo she shall tell the tale to another, and she shall repeat it to still another, and scandal shall be heaped upon thy name.

7. When thou playest bridge, get thee a strangle hold upon thy purse, for peradventure the society dames with whom thou sportest shall shear thee even as a lamb is sheared on Wall Street, and thou shalt have to write home for more money.

8. Take not the lone Summer man away from the maidens when he fleest to thee as to a temple of refuge, because thou already hast a husband and cannot expect him to marry thee. Flirt not with such an one, but stand thou to one side and give the virgins their chance, for lo in these days a husband is scarce and hard to come at.

Go it alone.

9. Listen not to the man who wanderet on the beach with thee in the moonlight and who saveth, "Would God I had met thee in time," for behold he is but as a phonograph with one record, and hath already said the same thing to 981,735 other women. Also he draweth but twenty-five bones per in a department store, whilst thy husband hath skill with the shekels, so that thou adornest thyself in purple and fine linen and split skirts therewithal.

10. Forget not that gossip stalketh through the halls of a Summer hotel, seeking whom it may destroy; therefore bear thyself as though thou posest in a moving picture film and converse as though thou consortest with a dictagraph. So shalt thou meet thy husband with a glad smile when he cometh down on the Saturday afternoon train, and thy heart shall not quake with fear when thou thinkest of what one of the old cats who knit pink sweaters in the hotel lobby may reveal unto him.

Selah.

'Tain't No Use.

The tramp approached the proud citizen and asked for alms.

"'Go to the ant, thou sluggard.'"

"'Tain't no use, mister. Me aunt's jist as tight-fisted as me uncle an' all de rest uv me relashuns. I fear I'll have to go to work at last."

Childlife.

"Come, Willie," said his mother, "don't be so selfish. Let your little brother play with your marbles a while."

"But," protested Willie, "he means to keep them always."

"Oh, I think not."

"I say, 'Yes,' 'cause he's swallowed two of them already."

.:. The Coralbank Case .:.

By MATTHEW JAMES.

ONE of the smarest little robberies that has ever come under my notice," said Detective Hunter, of Scotland Yard, as he musingly lit his first cigar one night recently at my rooms in Portman Square, "was that perpetrated in the autumn of last year upon a Mr. Silas Jay, then residing in a pretty little house known as "Coralbank" and situated about half a mile beyond Windsor."

I was on the alert in an instant, for there were few things I like better than listening to one of Detective Hunter's professional experiences.

"Perhaps," he said, after a few moments' reflection, "I had better give you the particulars as they were narrated to me by Mr. Silas Jay himself, since I personally had nothing to do with the case."

The story ran as follows:

First, I must explain that Mr. Jay, who was a bachelor, was a man of many prejudices. He suspected everybody, and regarded all recognized and established institutions with unqualified distrust. Those that were national were torpid, and therefore mere shams, while those that were not were established chiefly for the fattening of financiers by any process, honest or otherwise, but more generally otherwise.

The existing police system held a prominent position in the former category, while banking houses figured no less conspicuously in the latter. This last opinion induced him to distribute his capital among six or seven banks, in order that, should any one of them fail and swindle him out of his money, his fortune would not be very materially impaired. Well, among these banking houses was one situated in Windsor, which, for the sake of convenience, he always used when at home, and in this bank the sum of $60,000 was deposited.

The Rumor Spreads.

How the rumor reached him I was never able to discover, but one day in October he presented himself in great excitement at the offices of the bank in question, declaring that he had heard it whispered they contemplated suspending payment, and demanding an immediate surrender of his credit balance of $60,000.

The manager indignantly repudiated the suspicion, but the old gentleman was thoroughly frightened, and finally the money was handed to him over the counter in the shape of a hundred $500 and two hundred $50 notes. These, as he afterwards explained to me, he intended depositing the following day in another of the local banks. But this intention was frustrated.

Early the next morning it was discovered that during the night an entry had been effected into the house, and the alarmed Mr. Jay, descending hastily to the library, discovered, to his mortification, that the larger of the two parcels of bank notes, of the value of £10,000, had been abstracted from the drawer in which he had locked it. The smaller but more valuable parcel he had placed, for greater security, in a secret compartment of his secretary, and this, to his intense relief, he found to be intact. The ingeniousness of the contrivance had baffled the thief, who had been forced to retire without securing the bulk of the money.

Mr. Jay dispatched a servant with a telegram, which he had himself indited requesting the authorities at Scotland Yard to send down a detective at the "earliest possible opportunity."

Half an hour later the servant returned without having dispatched the telegram and accompanied by a tall, shrewd-looking, businesslike man of about thirty-five. He was immediately conducted to the library, where, without loss of time, he introduced both himself and his errand to the astonished Mr. Jay. He spoke with a quick, intelligent precision that was not without its effect on his listener.

"Mr. Walter Craft."

"Mr. Silas Jay, I believe?" he said, briskly. "I chanced to be in the telegraph office when your servant entered, and, observing the direction of the message he was about to dispatch, took the liberty of interrupting it until I had seen you. But first allow me to introduce myself."

He took a card from his pocket and laid it on the table. Mr. Jay picked it up and read the name, "Mr. Walter Craft, detective inspector, Scotland Yard."

"As you see," resumed the stranger in a matter-of-fact tone, "I am connected with the establishment to which your telegram was directed, and, this being so, I took the further liberty of making myself acquainted with its contents. The closing words, 'earliest possible opportunity,' particularly appealed to my professional recognition, of the value of time; so, being on the spot, I have come straight to you to offer my services in discovering the perpetrator or perpetrators of the robbery which took place here last night, the chief particulars of which I have already elicited from your servant."

Mr. Jay rose from his chair, "I am glad you came," he said.

The detective bowed, and then, resuming his brisk, businesslike air, which appeared to afford his listener no small satisfaction, said:

"Then let us begin at once."

"Had you any other money in the house?" His keen, gray eyes searched Mr. Jay's face.

The latter hesitated. He was at all times a suspicious man. But the detective's keen insight into the position of things had strongly prepossessed himself in his favor, while his character was no doubt unimpeachable. So, after a moment's consideration, he told the story of the untouched parcel of bank notes, even going so far, in the exuberance of his spirits at the thief's failure, as to touch the secret spring which opened the hidden compartment and reveal to the detective the notes within. As he did so, however, he appeared to regret the action, for he made a movement as if to reclose the compartment, but the detective stopped him.

"Pardon me," he said quickly, "but did I understand you to say that you drew these notes from the bank with those that are missing?"

Silas Jay nodded.

"In that case," said the detective, emphatically, "I must ask you to allow me to examine these notes. A great deal may depend on my doing so."

The Suspicion.

Silas Jay reluctantly drew them from their hiding place and handed them to the detective. The latter turned them over, one by one, his fingers lingering long over the task. Then, with a half-suppressed sigh, he handed them back to their owner and watched that gentleman as he once more replaced them in the secret compartment of the secretaire, and heard the sharp, metallic click of the spring as it flew into position.

When this was done he asked to be allowed to see the servants, and one by one they were called into the library. He said but little to them, however, chiefly impressing upon them the necessity for silence on the subject of the robbery, and dismissed them once more to their respective duties. Then he turned to Mr. Jay.

"Now," he said briskly. "I think I may confide to you the fact that my investigations so far have not been without their reward. To-morrow morning I shall return and shall probably require to again examine—and, if may be necessary to photograph—the notes still in your possession. I will now bid you good-day, as there are several things that need to be done in the meantime."

At half-past ten the following morning there was a loud pealing of the front door bell, and a few minutes later a servant announced that two police constables in uniform requested to see Mr. Jay on a matter of considerable importance. They were shown into the library, and awkwardly touched their helmets to the master of the house. They were typical country policemen—thickset, stolid-looking individuals, who might certainly form part of the arm of the law, but possessed no iota of its brains.

"Are you Mr. Silas Jay?" inquired one, in a slow, expressionless voice.

Mr. Jay admitted that such was the case.

"Well," explained the constable "we're in search of a feller who's wanted up in Brummagem for a little lob o' 'ousebreakin'. From information received"—he coughed to emphasize the professional phrase—"we know he's in this district, and we are hinformed that a man answerin' to his description was seen a-comin' into your 'ouse yesterday afternoon."

Silas Jay turned pale as a horrible suspicion crossed his mind. With a quick movement he pressed the secret spring of his secretaire, and a sigh of unutterable relief escaped his lips as he beheld the precious bank notes lying safely within their ingenious hiding place. Then, closing the compartment, he turned abruptly to the constables, who were watching him in evident curiosity, and said:

"He promised to be here at eleven this morning, and it barely wants a quarter to that now."

Instantly the men were on their feet.

"I wonder if he'll come?" said one.

"If he does," replied the other, "we've got 'im, and then we're safe for a stripe or two."

Eluded.

Simultaneously they moved to the window and stood looking out down the gravel paths that skirted the lawn and across the tall gates that led on the road. As for Silas Jay he was too bewildered even to think coherently and sat, with his chin resting on his hands, staring straight before him. An exclamation from one of the constables roused him.

"Here 'e is!" exclaimed the man.

Mr. Jay leaped to his feet and ran to the window. At the same instant a man who had just turned in at the gate came to a standstill and glanced irresolutely in the direction of the house.

"You infernal fools!" exclaimed Mr. Jay, with all his old disgust for the police returning in full force. "The fellow has seen your confounded uniforms through the window and has taken the alarm!"

It certainly looked as if this was actually the case, for at that instant the man turned and swiftly retreated through the gates and out on to the road, where he was immediately lost to view behind the tall hedge which shut in the lawn. With a smothered oath, Silas Jay threw up the widow, and, climbing out as quickly as his age would allow, started in hot pursuit. One of the constables followed his example, and, being a younger man, soon outstripped Mr. Jay.

When the latter reached the gate and looked down the road he beheld the bogus detective far away in the distance, speeding along through a cloud of dust, mounted on a bicycle. He was getting up a good pace, and, upon seeing Mr. Jay, waved his hand in token of his determination to catch the now rapidly disappearing thief. When Mr. Jay returned to the house he found that the other policeman had taken himself off.

The next day he was so restless that he could bear the house no longer, so he determined, as there was nothing to hinder him from doing so, to take the hundred $500 notes into Windsor and there deposit them in one of the local banks. He touched the concealed spring of his secretaire and the secret compartment flew noiselessly open. And then, with a wild cry, he staggered back against the wall and fell in a heap upon the floor. The bank notes were gone!

As soon as he recovered he rushed into Windsor and wired to Scotland Yard, and the chief sent me down to investigate. Both detective and his confederates, the country constables, were unknown—in that capacity, at least—to the authorities. When I communicated this information to Mr. Silas Jay I thought he would have a fit.

"What are you going to do?" he asked.

"I am afraid," I said, "there is but little left for me to do. I have been to the bank, and find that, owing to the ridiculous discussion which took place, the manager, in handing you the notes, omitted the customary precaution of taking down their numbers. All we can do, therefore, is to endeavor to trace the criminals by means of their description. But this is a tedious process, and not always crowned with success."

He handed me the card which the bogus detective had given him.

"An alias, I suppose," I said. "And Walter Craft is not an inappropriate name for one of his calling."

A gleam of something like self-contempt shone in the old man's eyes.

"Scarcely as appropriate as my own," he exclaimed savagely, "for if any man richly deserves the name of Jay, I am certainly he!"

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

Happiness the Real Secret, Says One of the Stage's Prettiest Girls

"Being happy is the secret of being well, looking well and feeling well."

This is Miss Lois Josephine's recipe for obtaining and maintaining a beautiful face and figure.

Miss Lois Josephine in two poses.

"I AM determined to be happy," said Lois Josephine to me, smiling the while with the wistful sweetness that is the heritage of Irish blood. "I think that being happy is the secret of being well, and doing your work well, and looking well, and feeling well! Well, with all these wells to be acquired, my search for happiness is going to be untiring."

"Just how does one go about being happy—deliberately happy?" I asked. The blue-bird of happiness is an elusive-winged creature, and even when he is found at last at your own fireside he flies away as you clasp him in the welcoming circle of your hands.

"To be happy," answered Miss Josephine, with a tiny shadow of a smile that ought to lure happiness right to her side, never to depart, "to be happy, you like all the things you have to do, you trust your friends, you love all the beauty of nature around you—and you avoid unnecessary contact with tasks that you can not teach yourself to like. Oh, truly, I think that if you are happy you will be healthy and wealthy and wise and—and, yes, beautiful!"

Now, Miss Josephine is the Sunshine Girl in "The Passing Show of 1913" up at the Winter Garden in New York, and most charmingly does she and her partner, Wellington Cross, dispense gayety and sunshine as they dance their "joy of living" steps for you. Perhaps it is here that Miss Josephine found her inspiration to be a sunshiny girl in everyday life, but to be happy seems to me to be a most excellent way to acquire beauty.

Her Program.

"I am going to be so happy and contented with life that I will just naturally attract sunshine instead of shadow," went on the dainty girl whose picture delights you to-day. "I am going to be so pleased with my life and work that my expression can never be bitter or discontented, but instead must be sweet and friendly.

"Bitterness, discontent, envy, worry, anger, malice—I am going to banish these evil feelings from my mind more and more earnestly as I get more and more power to pursue a search for happiness. If only girls knew what foes to beauty these evil feelings were they would all join me in a happiness hunt and get such sweet expressions that every one would be exclaiming: 'Well, I declare, if Mamie Jones isn't getting to be a beauty—she has the most attractive expression!'"

Suddenly Miss Josephine trilled out a merry laugh.

"Want to see one practical detail of my hunt for happiness? Well, I am making my feet happy, too! I wear flat-soled tennis shoes with buck instead of tennis soles, since rubber draws the feet, and so rest and relax the muscles and tendons of my feet. Narrow, tight, high-heeled shoes do not make your feet comfortable; they actually hurt your health, and they do great harm to the serenity of your face. You know the desperate expression you often see on the face of a girl whose shoes are too tight or are pitching her forward, with the strain coming heavily on already tired muscles. Well, an expression like that may carve its way in ugly lines right into a face. So I recommend making your feet happy if you want your face to look happy!

Ventral Courtesy.

"I am very polite to my digestion. I don't ask its overtaxed organs to handle heavy meats and rich sauces all through the hot summer. Instead, I eat vegetables and salads and the lighter meats, and give my system tonic food, instead of task food, in summer. An ideal summer program is to have meat on your dinner menu only two or three times a week. For instance: Chicken on Sunday, steak on Tuesday, lamb on Thursday, fish on Friday, and on the other three days try soup and a few extra vegetables for your dinner. Simple menus will give your 'digestery' a rested, happy feeling that will tell in a happy, rested-looking face.

"If you like it as well as I do, you will be delighted to drink three glasses of buttermilk during the day, and on rising and on retiring you will enjoy a bit of watercress with salt. Fine tonics for the system—both of these. Then to make your skin and muscles rejoice in the general prosperity, try a morning and evening rub with equal parts of alcohol and witch hazel. That will add a fine glow to the general beauty-dealing feeling of happiness you want to acquire. Oh, it is great fun working out a system whereby you will acquire happiness and all its attendant blessings of beauty and health and power to advance in the world."

As we left Miss Josephine's pretty home on a cross street, just west of Broadway, a friend called to the little blue linen-suited figure: "Hello, little bluebird!" And the bluebird is for happiness, you know.

LILIAN LAUFERTY.

Its Virtue.

President A. Lawrence Lowell, of Harvard, said at a dinner in his honor in Chicago:

"Early mariages are the best. It is neither good for the man nor for the community that he should wait until he is 28 years old before marrying."

President Lowell paused a moment and then, smiling, he continued:

"Another trouble about late marriages is that the man's habits—his bad habits—are formed, and it's hard to break him of them. You know, perhaps, the story of the cigarette?

"A man of the old fashioned 'manly man' type—the soft, full-stomached type that drinks too much, belongs to too many lodges, and must be superior to woman in everything—this man took umbrage over his wife's cigarette, the one modest cigarette that she took after dinner, though he, of course, smoked like a chimney all day long. And so he said, one evening:

"'I believe you think more of that nasty, poisonous cigarette than you do of me, your husband.'

"'Well, dear,' his wife replied, smiling and blowing a cloud, 'I can keep my cigarette, you know, from going out.'"

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Mildred Farley was a dressmaker," this gentleman went on. "If you read the newspapers you know that, and also know that she worked hard at her duties for some weeks before her death. But what is very strange in her connection, and, together with some other reasons unnecessary to state here makes it difficult for the police to settle down to the belief that her death was the simple suicide it at first seemed, is that no one has succeeded in discovering for whom she worked, and to what home she carried the various dresses she finished in that time. For though it may not be material to know this, and may not help the affair forward one jot toward its rightful issue, yet because it is a mystery and an unsolved one, those whose business it is to see every doubtful case made clear, have sent me to this house to see if some light can not be thrown by you upon it."

He paused and looked at Genevieve. She at once raised her eyes and surveyed him steadily.

"You think, then, that I knew Mildred Farley?" was her question, clearly and coldly uttered.

At Loggerheads.

"Did you not?" he inquired.

Her lips broke into a smile. "Ask Dr. Cameron," she suggested, and seemed to think she had answered his question.

Their visitor glanced at the doctor, met only a dubious shake of the head, and continued in a more formal tone.

"If you did not know Miss Farley, it is strange she should have made the dresses of your trousseau, Mrs. Cameron."

"I don't understand you," was that lady's reply. "My dresses were made by any one but that girl. This I can assure you most positively, sir."

"You can. We are then brought round to my first question: who was it that did make your dresses, Mrs. Cameron?"

It was smilingly said, but it caused her to flush with great indignation.

"Is it necessary that I should tell you?" she somewhat haughtily inquired.

"If you do not, I cannot prevent certain people I know from thinking it was Mildred Farley."

"And why?" Dr. Cameron now broke in. "What reasons have they or any one to connect my wife with that poor unfortunate?"

"Only a very material one which I leave to Mrs. Cameron to explain. In the room of that dead girl were found scraps and ends of silk and velvet, which were preserved by the police as pieces of the goods she had been lately making up into dresses. Among these was a morsel of trimming—here it is—and as this trimming or some just like it was seen by chance upon a dress worn by Mrs. Cameron, it struck one of our agents that she was in all probability the lady who had profited by this poor girl's handiwork."

"The conclusion of a man!" exclaimed Mrs. Cameron, with chill sarcasm. "I suppose there are in this city to-day, twenty ladies with just that trimming on their gowns."

"And with this gray velvet for a dress? And this—I do not know how to call it—for another? And this soft white silk so suitable for a bride's adorning, and"——

"Enough, enough," cried Mrs. Cameron, putting up her hands merrily as a half dozen samples of various goods and colors fell in a shower into her lap. "I own to these, but I do not own to Mildred Farley. You waste your time; you will never find that she did any sewing for me, however she came into possession of these pieces." And with a half careless, half disdainful smile, she flirted the bits aside, looking so imperious and so charming, that for a moment her visitor seemed a trifle abashed and half rose as if to go. "You see if I had anything to tell, I would," she murmured, graciously. "But I have not. I cannot explain any more than you how these samples from my dresses should have been found where they were. I can only look at them and wonder. Is that enough, sir?"

"Hardly," his look seemed to say, but he rose. "And you will not tell me where your dresses were made?" he smiled.

She shook her head, laughed and rose with an arch air.

The Back Porch.

"It is a secret I have kept even from my husband, but if you must have it, you must. And rising on tiptoe with a look of merry defiance at the doctor, she whispered something in the visitor's ear.

He listened, stared at her a moment and broke into a genial laugh.

"And so this is your secret," he cried. "Well, I know how to respect the secrets of a lady when such respect does not interfere with my duty."

And with a gallant bow he took his leave, expressing the hope that he had not made his call to lengthy.

After he was gone Dr. Cameron turned to his wife.

"And what did you whisper in that big man's ear to calm him so suddenly?"

"Ah, you want to know my secret too," she laughed. "Well, I told him that the work which has been so much admired had been done by no woman. That in my vanity and desire for originality I had had the poor taste to employ a man, and that I was secretly ashamed of it."

"She told you that?" cried Mr. Gryce. "And you believed here? Humph!"

"She spoke the truth," asserted his companion—the gentleman whose name we purposely suppressed in the last chapter."

"You think so?"

"I do. There was something in her tone, whisper though it was, which brought conviction. I do not question her word in the least."

"Well, we will see; I did not hear her and so may be pardoned for having my doubts. I will talk with you again, sir. The play may not be worth the candle, and it may; a few days more will determine."

"And Molesworth?"

"Is very well as he is."

This conversation, fragmentary though it is, will show something of the stand which Mr. Gryce was taking in this matter. He had Molesworth under his eye and as good as under arrest, and yet he was not satisfied. Something—was it instinct or experience?—told him that this affair possessed complications of no ordinary nature, and that to a conscientious man like himself there were doubts to be solved and possibilities to be sounded, before he would dare proceed against the doctor as against a presumably guilty man.

But with the kindred remembrance of what the woman in Mrs. Olney's boarding house had said about Mildred Farley's frequent comings and goings with her great box, he did not consider it so foolish now, and only wished he had probed the subject deeper at the time. It was not so late yet, however, but that proper inquiries in the right places would settle the question as to whether these two girls were the same. He had only to pass a word or two with the complaisant butler at Mr. Gretorex's house, to learn enough to have the laugh, to say the least, on his somewhat credulous superior. To Mr. Gretorex's house he therefore went, and to Mr. Gretorex's butler he at once addressed himself.

He found this person quite ready to talk in his easy, French way.

The Butler.

"Zat girl? I—none of ze help know somezing bout zat girl, only Mees Gretorex always was at home when she come. A veil for ze face? Oui, so zick you no can see if she was black or white. But she was ver pretty—look good, Sacre! She walk good—proud like a comtesse. She no look at me. One time Pierre try, I try to speak wiz her. It was no good. If she was much deaf she do just so; for she look not to me, she look not to Pierre."

"You're right, Count," laughed a voice over their shoulders, "and one of us ain't a bad looking man, either."

It was Peter, who liked a bit of gossip as well as his neighbor, and who now came forward smiling.

"I feel ze compliment, M. Pierre, and it is ver much good for you to say so," retorted the "Count" with a grandiose bow. "It is ze opinion of ze ladies in ze house."

The butler then winked slyly at Gryce, and satisfied that he had effectually discomfited the footman, proceeded to put questions to the detective as to his reasons for the interest he showed in this girl, which that functionary had wit and experience enough to successfully parry.

Peter helped him; for Peter was a rival of the butler's in more than one field, and in his good-natured way invariably took part against him in any controversy, and it was from Peter that Mr. Gryce finally got the acknowledgment that this young woman, or lady, as he persisted in calling her, usually wore a long, black ulster and made her appearance in the evening.

Now this was satisfactory. In the closet of Mildred Farley at Mrs. Olney's house there was a long, black ulster, and she, as we know, was accustomed to take her work home evenings.

"But she didn't have the ulster on the last time she came, oh, no," continued Peter. "I don't know what it was made the difference, but she looked foine. O, now! well I'm tellin' ye I wouldn't have known her at all, at all, but for her ould brown veil and little handbag. Them wur the same as before and so was the air of her. Not a word nor the divil of a look for ons of us; but being the night o' the wedding, she got out o' me head, for sure I had enough else to mind."

Her Handbag.

This last admission was a surprise, but Mr. Gryce was accustomed to surprises, so he kept quite still; the more so that he saw the butler was about to speak, and he always preferred to glean his facts through the questions of other people rather than his own.

"Zat girl here on Miss Gretorex's wedding night? I zink you was mistake, Pierre."

"Mistaken is it I am! when these two hands let her in meself at the back door. It wasn't only here she was, but it's helpin' Miss Gretorex to dress she was, and divil a minute she had to spare, aither, being just in the nick of time to be of any help at all, at all, to her. I didn't see her leave, though."

Mr. Gryce felt his interest cool. Reason told him how improbable it was that this person with all her mysteries, could have been the runaway bride of Julius Molesworth. Even if this house had not been miles distant from the C—— Hotel where he had himself seen her at 7 o'clock of that same night, the great improbability of her fleeing from her own nuptials to assist in this very humble capacity at those of another, was too manifest for his consideration even. Yet because habit was strong in him and habit forbade him to leave a subject till he had exhausted it, he put in a word which he thought must settle the matter.

EVANS DECLARES CLOUDY DAY IS BEST FOR GOLF

By Chick Evans.

TO my mind a gray day gives the ideal golfing weather. This sort of a day frequently precedes or follows rain and there is something in the moist freshness of the atmosphere and absence of glare that is wholly delightful. The clubs at such a time seem unusually light and if they are your own there is a wonderful balance and the blades appear to lie supremely well. The grip also seems perfect because the moisture of the air gets into the leather and gives that feeling of absolute security to the grip. While this feeling in damp weather is true of all grips, it is particularly true of the oiled leather kind.

For some reason, whether it is a quality of the atmosphere or because one's clubs feel so good, the flight of the ball seems steadier and the picture of the little white globe floating in a true and steady line against a dull gray background of sky is a sight to warm the heart of every golfer

Sun's Glare Hampers Player.

On a bright, warm day the glare from the sun is often distressing to the eyes of the golfer, and a round of golf under a midsummer sun leaves him exhausted. But an overcast day is a comfort to the eyes and a strengthening tonic to the whole physique. One's game itself is better, too, for the moist greens hold the iron shots and permit accurate placing.

The game of golf evolved under gray skies, along wide, moist, grassy places by the sea. In Great Britain there are hundreds and hundreds of overcast days. Then, on these matchless courses, in sight and sound of the waves, with the smell of the sea and the moist freshness of its breath in one's nostrils, the game is enjoyed in all of its natural flavor.

Prairie Courses Harder.

We miss, perhaps, a good deal of this subtle enjoyment of the game on our sun-baked courses. When the greens are like lightning and the fairway cracked and seamed iron shots will not stay where put and fine points of the game are impossible of application. But while we miss much, we are spared that frequent British affliction—a downpour of rain in the midst of an interesting match.

I love an overcast day for golf, the gray sky and moist breeze are like an inspiring draught, but heaven preserve me from a rainy day upon the links.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Tommy Walsh, of New Orleans, who looks after the affairs of Joe Mandot, has also taken George "Knockout" Brown, the Chicago middleweight, under his management. He has matched Brown to meet Jack Dillon, the Indianapolis fighter, in a ten-round bout at a show to be brought off at Terre Haute, Ind., on Labor Day.

* * *

Tom McCarey, the fight promoter, has offered to assist Jim Coffroth, the San Francisco promoter, in getting a star bout for his show on Labor Day afternoon. As Champion Willie Ritchie has agreed to fight Freddie Welch at Vancouver on that day, Coffroth has most left without an attraction. McCarey is willing to let Coffroth have Johnny Dundee, Ad Wolgast or any fighter that is under contract to him.

* * *

Charley White, who defeated Frank Whitney here last week, will meet Johnny Griffiths in a twelve-round bout at Akron, Ohio, on Labor Day. Griffiths recently defeated Young Saylor and also knocked out Phil Brock in three rounds. After this scrap White may go to the coast for a set-to with Harlem Tommy Murphy.

* * *

Jimmy Clabby, the veteran middleweight, is in San Francisco trying to get a match with Bob McAllister. Jim Coffroth is trying to match the pair for a September date. Clabby is one of the real marvels of the boxing game and should be a big hit on the coast.

The San Langford-Joe Jeannette match, which has been hanging fire for some time, is now a settled affair. Tom McCarey has received assurances from both fighters that they will be ready to go the marathon route on October 7.

* * *

If the proposed match between Willie Ritchie and Freddie Welch goes through it will be the first international contest for the lightweight championship since George Lavigne and Dick Burge fought in England a number of years ago.

* * *

It is impossible to any longer overlook Gunboat Smith as a candidate for the heavyweight championship honors. Smith has gone right along whipping every man he has been matched with. His latest victory over Jim Flynn has certainly added a big feather in his cap.

* * *

Charley Lee is one boy who looks to have the makings of a real fighter. The way Charley dishes out punishment when he himself is taking a beating makes it look as if he is a battler of much class.

* * *

Young Shugrue is coming to the front in rapid strides. The other night the Easterner handed "Fighting Joe" Hyland a great lacing in ten rounds. Shugrue is now after a return match with Matty Baldwin.

* * *

Al Palzer, the big Iowa farmer, plans to celebrate his return to form again with a bout against Frank Moran at New York on September 3. Both fighters expect to start training shortly for the scrap.

FRANK GOTCH RETIRES AGAIN FOR STEENTH TIME

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Aug. 18.—Frank Gotch, greatest of all wrestlers, is through with the mat forever. In a letter to the sporting editor of The Minneapolis Daily News, received today, Gotch says:

"While the Minnesota State fair people made me an excellent offer to wrestle Zbyszko on September 5, I have turned it down, as I will all other propositions to return to the game.

"I have enough money, am happily married, and will spend the balance of my days with the people of Humboldt, Iowa, which means more to me than being in a mansion in New York City or a castle in England. I shall always be an interested follower of the wrestling game, but will be satisfied to remain the outside of the ring in the future."

Tuesday Society Night at 'Drome
R. F. Maddox Sweepstakes Feature

TUESDAY night has been selected as "society night" at the Motordrome, and a special card has been arranged to delight the large attendance that is expected to witness the events.

The feature event on the program is to be the Robert F. Maddox Sweepstakes, to be run in three heats of six riders each. The award will be on points.

Then there is a three-cornered race among Jock McNeil, Harry Glenn and Harry Swartz, which also promises a lot of excitement.

Here is the program:

Motordrome Purse.

(Heats, 1 mile final, 2 miles; winner in each heat and second man in fastest heat.)

First Heat—Graves, Swartz and Lockner.

Second Heat—Richards, Luther and Glenn.

Third Heat—McNeil, Lewis and Glenn.

Three-Cornered Match Race.

(Three heats, 1 mile, 2 miles and 3 miles.)

First Heat—Glenn, McNeil and Swartz. One mile.

Final Motordrome Purse, two miles

Second Heat — Three-cornered match race, two miles.

R. F. Maddox Sweepstakes.

(French point system, 10 for first, 6 for second and 2 for third; three heats, 2, 4 and 6 miles.)

First Heat—Two miles: Graves, Richards, Luther, Lewis, Renel and Lockner.

Third Heat—Three-cornered match race, two miles.

Second Heat—Maddox Sweepstakes, four miles.

Third heat—Maddox Sweepstakes, six miles.

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

TWO MINUS ONE.

(Paraphrasing a well-known author.)

Two things greater than all things are.
One is a bush league baseball star
Who smites the ball with a heart of vim
And earns the kale they have paid for him.

P.S.—The other thing doesn't count.

It is said Fred Merkle is the lad who smote John McGraw on the jowl. This shows that ivory never melts.

In golf, which Mr. Merkle is alleged to play every morn, the slogan is: "Keep your eye on the ball." In baseball, which Mr. Merkle is alleged to play every afternoon, the slogan is: "Keep your eye on the base."

Charlie Ebbets is said to be figuring on a new manager, thus showing that he is willing to go to any expense to get something new to dedicate.

One is not surprised to read that Miller Huggins wants an entirely new team. But one might be surprised to read that he is satisfied with the team he has.

Occasionally a youth from California gets a trimming in a tennis tournament. We said occasionally.

Ban Johnson announces that the world's series will open on October 6. The announcement is received with great enthusiasm among ticket speculators.

It is claimed that tickets speculation on the world series has been reduced to a minimum. Figuring thusly, a maximum would be approximately 178 per cent of the gate receipts.

The report that Clark Griffith has offered $100,000 for Ty Cobb leads one to suspect that he is hitting .400 in the hop league.

We note in the newspapers that one Ar Chung, a Chinese lightweight, made one Pat McCarty quit. The A. O. H. will now proceed to start a libel suit.

It is rumored that Freddie Welch has saved $100,000 out of his earnings. This reveals the fact that his earnings were $100,000.05.

THIS PARAGRAPH IS WRITTEN TO IMMORTALIZE ONE HUMID KALLA PASHA, AN HONEST WRESTLER. HUMID IS HONEST ENOUGH TO ADMIT THAT THERE AIN'T NO SUCH THING.

Connie Mack Can Develop Youngsters, But He Fails in Grooming Managers

Connie Mack is regarded as being one of baseball's smartest managers. He has the knack of developing raw recruits into marvels, but he doesn't produce managers who can make good.

While the Athletics were winning two world's championships Topsy Hartsel and Harry Davis were his two lieutenants, and when they started to fade as major leaguers Mack found managerial berths for them.

Davis didn't even last a complete season as director of the Cleveland Naps, and now Topsy Hartsel has been dropped as manager of the Toledo (A. A.) club.

Toledo and Cleveland looked for their teams to play Connie Mack baseball, which means a pennant, but neither could produce the Connie results, although they were members of Mack's board of strategy.

"Handy" Anderson, who is playing third for Waycross, has developed into a remarkably fine player for a youngster. He joined Waycross from a school team, and made good with a rush. He plays short splendidly and is at home in the field. His bunting is a feature and he seldom fails to reach first when he gets one placed to his notion.

Stewart, the new pitcher with Brunswick, has a cross-fire ball that is mighty hard to hit. He has worked it with success on the best batters and fooled them every time. His brother, playing with Americus, is also able to work some deceptive balls over the plate.

TOMMY LONG AND CHAPMAN PLAY TO-DAY

HERE'S a grain of comfort. The Crackers will be able to send their regular line-up against the Barons this afternoon, when the first game of the series begins at 3:30 o'clock—note the change in the time.

Manager Smith said this morning that Tommy Long had about got over his severe cold and would be in left field this afternoon. Chapman's wrenched ankle has come around in good shape and Harry will be back of the wood.

As to the first slabman to get a whack at the Moles, Bill is going to try out the Gil Price jinx again. Gil has had something on the Barons all season; they haven't seemed able to make a start against the big left-hander, and Gil himself is eager to tackle them in the jump game.

A report from Birmingham announces the purchase of Ed Ery, leading pitcher of the Georgia-Alabama League, who is to report here to-day. "Rube" Evans, the big left-hander, has been suspended for failure to keep in condition, and Bill Prough was called away from the club by a sister's illness, so Molesworth's slab staff is badly in need of bolstering.

The Barons' manager said this morning that Prough was expected on almost any train from the direction of Athens, Ala., and that Ery was being looked for hourly, also. McGilvray is out of the line-up, too. Hardgrove is scheduled to pitch this afternoon.

J. Clabby On Coast; After 20-Round Bout

"Jeems" Wants to Step With Bob McAllister or Sailor Petroskey.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 18.—Jimmy Clabby, of Hammond, Ind., one of the foremost of American middleweights, dropped into town yesterday, accompanied by Jimmy Regan, a promoter, who dabbles in pugilism up at Butte, Mont.

Clabby has received tempting offers to take his Queensberry wares to Australia, but would prefer to linger in San Francisco a while if he receives the right kind of encouragement. Prior to the McAllister, Petroskey bout, Clabby expressed a desire to meet the winner. Of course there was no winner, but Clabby was equal to the emergency. He said he would not mind boxing both McAllister and Petroskey, but would prefer to tackle the Olympic Club graduate first.

It is understood that Promoter Jim Coffroth has taken up the matter and will endeavor to bring about a meeting between Jimmy and Bob. And for the sake of those who admire really clever glove play, it is to be hoped that Coffroth succeeds in his undertaking.

Thousands at Burial Of Mine War Victims

CALUMET, MICH., Aug. 18.—A big public funeral for the two copper strikers killed in a fight Thursday night between Deputy Sheriffs and strikers was held here yesterday. A special train brought the bodies here from the Champion mine and thousands of strikers from every part of the copper district attended the services.

Sports and Such

FAMOUS IN SPORT—VII.
The Fight Manager.

THE FIGHT MANAGER IS AN ever-present example of the value of human endeavor, so long as you can get somebody else to do the endeavoring. It is the mission of the Fight Manager to live by the toil of other men, and, so far as we are a judge, he does his duty. We never heard of one who starved to death.

Managing fighters has all of the advantages of managing a bank, with none of the risks. When a bank gets in bad you can not shake it and pick up another one; but the average Fight Manager continues to blow expensive cigar smoke into the eye of the Sporting Editor long after dozens of fighters he has managed have gone back to sparring for pork chops in the outskirts of Detroit and Cincinnati.

Lest you be thus encouraged to rush blindly into the business, it is our duty to warn you that certain natural gifts are essential. The successful Fight Manager must have tireless vocal chords, a bark-proof hide, a properly smile and the imagination of a mining-stock salesman. Also, the gall of a policeman.

It is by no means necessary that he have a fighter. Many men have tried to get by with merely a fighter and have failed. It is much better to tow around some muscular misfit with a ten-ounce brain and by persistent talking and "getting in with the right guys" convince the public that he is a fighter. A real fighter usually has enough intelligence to want to audit accounts every now and then, and this is a serious handicap to real success in this profession.

But for the kind of man that fits into the profession it is certainly the kind of profession for him to fit into. Two or three thousand per cent profits are common. For instance, Lute McCarty won $4,000 in his last fight, and when every one had gotten his there was $26 left for the estate. That's a business.

JEFFRIES 'DOPE STORY' GAINS NEW HEARING

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—The [illegible] statement that Jam[illegible]fries, after his defe[illegible] Johnson at Reno, sought an [illegible] proof that he had been drugged before the battle with the negro was made in a signed article written by a New York sporting editor and published in an evening paper to-day.

The statement follows, in part:

"Jeffries hired one of the greatest detective agencies in the world to run down the facts. The details he gathered make up a complete story of the most sordid plot that ever turned fair sport into a sure-thing gamble. Possibly Johnson would have won in any case, but the clique that handled the betting made it a certainty by drugging Jeffries with the help of men who were in his confidence and who had the run of his camp. They cleaned up a fortune through betting commissioners stationed in many cities. In Paris alone they wagered $24,000 and won $40,000. In Reno and San Francisco and Los Angeles and New York their gains went into the hundreds of thousands.

"The 'tip' for the big killing was received by the waiting commissioners less than 24 hours before the fight when the gamblers knew that Jeffries was 'safe.'

"The grst plot was broached in a back room; the last man necessary to its success accented his part in a meeting in a Reno alley two nights before the fight, after having learned that he could make no more money with Jeffries and that he could win thousands by turning Judas. One man whose available cash was also secretly wagered on Johnson smilingly posed as a friendly adviser of Jeffries during the fight."

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

Intense rivalry in Empire League cities is in evidence now in every game played. Charges and counter charges are being hurled at first one team, then another, while the president of the league gets his full share, too.

* * *

Babe Wilder, the wonder of the league, has lost the last three games he pitched for Cordele. The losses were not his fault, as errors behind him let his opponents score enough to win.

* * *

Brouthers, playing in the field for Americus, came mighty near pulling off a fatal play for his team recently. He tried to get a stone in center field, thinking it was the ball which had just been hit safely. A fellow fielder saw the mistake and nipped the real article up in time to save a run.

* * *

Left Fielder Powers, of the Waycross team, has returned to Jacksonville. He was declared ineligible and Waycross had nothing to do but let him go. He is a fleet fielder and has made a neat record during his stay with Waycross.

* * *

Ten victories to one defeat is the pitching record held by Dacey, of the Americus team. He was signed originally as a fielder but has developed into a pitcher as good as the best in the league.

* * *

Outfielder Schuyler, of the Brunswick team, is climbing rapidly in batting. He hits the ball hard regularly.

* * *

Day came back strong against the Valdosta team after they knocked him out of the box and won his game with ease for Thomasville. His shut-out record in the Empire is a good one.

* * *

Otto Jordan seems good on picking up good players. He has landed Wise, a catcher, and from the way the fellow plays he is slated for faster company. Gordon and Vaughan, pitchers, will both land in the Sally and perhaps higher. Gordon has already gone to Macon and ought to make good. And the Valdosta team has others just as reliable.

* * *

Umpire baiting in the league has ruined a number of games recently and the fans generally are in hopes of changes before another season arrives that will make this impossible. Attacks on umpires by players have received only minor treatment.

* * *

By winning four straight games, two from the league leaders, Waycross climbed out of the cellar position for the first time since early in July, when the second half of the season started.

* * *

Added to his fielding ability Doc Fenton, playing center for Waycross, has started hitting at a terrific clip. He got two home runs in succession and four hits in succession the next day. His put-out record is eight for one game, and has no equal in the league.

* * *

Red Stiles, who started the season with Waycross and went to Thomasville when he was released, has been suspended for the balance of the season at his own request.

TINKER READY TO QUIT JOB AS REDS' MANAGER

BOSTON, Aug. 18.—The repeated rumors that all was not well in the affairs of the Cincinnati camp and that the days of Joe Tinker as manager were numbered, were partly confirmed to-day.

The hustling leader of the Reds admitted he was ready to quit. The policies of Garry Herrmann, president of the club, does not jibe with his own, he said, and unless his superior was willing to reconstruct some of his pet theories the team would soon be under a new leader.

Tinker's declaration to-day was caused by the receipt of a telegram from Herrmann notifying Joe that he had "violated baseball law" by airing their differences.

* * *

"I REALIZE that I must take a stand with regard to the management of the club, or step down and out," said the Red manager. "The showing of the team has been a great disappointment to all concerned and I have held off because I felt that I am not a success myself, so far as I have gone. Since the club has not been making money I felt that it was up to me to stand for some things that I would not otherwise have endured."

* * *

THE selling outright of his players to minor leagues was what caused the break, according to Tinker, who felt that he should be allowed to make profitable trades with the other National League teams.

"I would rather go out to my fruit farm in Oregon," he added, "than to try to handle a club when I am not backed up by the owners. I shall not let another player go unless I know just what the deal is."

GRAND CIRCUIT MEET OPENS AT CHARLESTON NEXT WEEK

CHARLESTON, ILL., Aug. 18.—The Eastern Illinois Grand Racing Circuit opens the season with a program at Charleston next week, the dates being August 19 to 23. There will be three events of $1,000 purses each and ten events of $400 purses, assuring an attractive program. The second week of this circuit was awarded to Urbana, the dates being August 26 to 29. Entries to both meetings have been satisfactory.

PITCHER COMSTOCK SOLD TO DETROIT FOR $5,000

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Aug. 18.—Pitcher Ralph Comstock, of Minneapolis, who has been doing sensational work in the American Association to-day was sold to the Detroit Americans for $5,000, Catcher Rondeau and a pitcher to be named later. Comstock had been reported sold to Comiskey's club, but there was some hitch in the deal.

Barons Loaded for Grouch Fight

Next Series an Elimination Bout

By O. B. Keeler.

BESTOWING a parting and futile imprecation upon the Pepper Kids, Atlanta fandom will now direct its clamorous attention to the advancing Barons, here for three games.

Indications point to another grouch fight.

Moley still might be considered a pennant contender, if you are good at considering. The reason Moley isn't more of a p. c. is because the Crackers licked him a straight series in Slagville recently.

So you may see quite easily the esteem and affection Moley would hold for our crowd, who also can be considered a pennant possibility—granting for the second time that the consideration faculty is working well.

* * *

THE approaching combat, therefore, takes on the status of an elimination bout for the Hope Championship. If the Barons obtain the measure of revenge they naturally are seeking, the stuff is absolutely off for us, barring miracles.

And miracles do not happen in baseball as frequently as one might suppose.

On the other hand, if Messrs. Moley, Prough, et al, again fail to come through, M. P. & Co. are entirely to the frittz, so far as 1913 is concerned.

And as for our own little outlook, that depends very largely on what is happening to the Gulls.

* * *

OF course, as long as Mique Finn can keep his justly celebrated $30 ball club steaming along at anything approaching its present clip, it really doesn't make a blamed bit of difference whether the Crackers win double-headers and things or lose them.

That is the strategic disadvantage of being seven or eight laps back of the pacemaker.

ON the whole, we are beginning to frog up a little stuff about the prospects for 1914—proclaiming loudly, nevertheless, our entire willingness to die game on the platform as adopted by the 1913 convention.

* * *

THAT Chattanooga series, now, fell in on us at a thoroughly unfortunate place.

Chapman was injured and the services of the speedy and hard-hitting Tommy Long were lost after the first indecisive struggle.

* * *

That of itself would make an acceptable alibi, if this were the open season for alibis.

Except, in that case, the Pepper Kids could put witnesses on the stand to testify to their own dismemberment and the fact that they had so few pitchers that the huge Pole had to be unloaded three times in one series.

That, however, is strictly an alibi with a flareback. If the full staff of Chattanooga hurlers could have been sent against the Crackers in order, and the Pole left in the lumber pile, it would have been an agreeable surprise for the Town Boys.

That's the kind of a pest the Pole is.

* * *

WELL, here are the Barons, and, as stated somewhere up ahead near the baggage car of this alleged train of thought, the meeting is in the nature of a grouch fight.

That usually makes business good—also baseball. No man full of red corpuscles cares to see a baseball game played as if between roommates.

Then, too, Bill Smith's birthday comes along next Wednesday, and there is going to be a little party at Ponce DeLeon in his honor. There will be a band, and about nine thousands guests are expected—if it doesn't rain.

This will be a good chance for the great body of fans who like Bill and his work to come out and let him know about it.

LARGE CROWD SEES YOUNG AND WILLARD WORK OUT

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 18.—Packed to capacity training camp crowds saw "White Hope" Jess Willard and "Bull" Young, matched to box twenty rounds before the Pacific A. C. at Vernon next Friday night, go through with their work-outs yesterday afternoon.

Leach Cross, matched to box Mexican Joe Rivers on Labor Day, returned from Catalina Island yesterday and will immediately open his camp at Doyle's resort, Vernon. Rivers will start work to-morrow. The local boy is to select a camp site at one of the beaches.

EARLY BASEBALL MEETING.

CHICAGO, Aug. 18.—The annual meeting of the baseball league will be held here in October instead of December, according to B. B. Johnson. The earlier date was chosen on account of the world tour of the Chicago club.

A. A. A. WILL HAVE WATER SPORTS NEXT SATURDAY

There will be a lot of splashing, plain and fancy, at East Lake next Saturday when the second annual "water sports day" is to be observed by the Atlanta Athletic Club.

The water sports committee now is at work on the program, on which there are to be nine events, including swimming, canoeing, boat racing and fancy diving.

A dinner-dance will top off the afternoon's diversions.

JEANETTE AND LANGFORD TO CLASH IN 10-ROUND GO

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Sam Lanford, the Bostan "Tar Baby" and Joe Jeannette, the Hoboken heavyweight, have signed article to box ten rounds at Madison Square Garden the latter part of September. The match was closed yesterday.

FEW REFEREES HAVE COMMAND OF RING MEN

By Otto C. Floto.

IT may be "old stuff," this harping and dwelling on the duties and action of a referee in the ring, yet it is always a timely subject to those interested in fights and fighting. Not so long ago, in an Eastern city, the writer sat at the ringside and watched two huskies clinching each other and holding on for dear life. The referee, only a man of average strength, was exhausting himself prying them apart—and quite an unsuccessful job he made of it. The thought then struck me how easily all this violation of the rules could be remedied. The referee has but to live up the meaning of the code as promulgated for 50 years or so and all trouble is quickly eliminated.

In the first place, there is no rule which tolerates clinching; neither is there a rule strenuously forbidding it. But there is a rule which says positively there must be no holding. A man battling in the ring can keep on hitting an opponent just as long as he has both or one arm free and providing also that he is not holding his opponent while striking him. No matter how much one man holds, the other man can keep on whaling away if his arms are free.

The trouble with the average referee is that he has absolutely no command of the fighters. They simply do as they please, regardless of his commands. I have seen many officiate in the ring, but I can recall only one who never yet has gone between the men to separate them. This man is Billy Roche. Somehow or other he manages to separate the men whenever he walks to them and says, "Break!" I have seen other referees do this a hundred times and no attention paid to it, but I have never yet heard Roche say it that the men didn't part.

RITCHIE-WELCH MATCH POSTPONED TILL SEPT. 20

VANCOUVER, B. C., Aug. 18.—The Welsh-Ritchie bout, scheduled to be fought here on Labor Day, has been postponed until September 20. Welsh is suffering from a sprained ankle. Ritchie will stay here and meet the best available local man on Labor Day. Ritchie showed a very fair spirit when the accident occurred, and instead of calling off the match readily agreed to the postponement.

BROOKLYN MAKING CHANGES.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Aug. 18.—The Brooklyn club yesterday announced the unconditional release of Outfielder Scheer. Catcher Edwin was sent to Toronto. The club has exercised its claim on Outfielder Hub Northern of Toronto and relinquished its claims on Pitcher Williams of Nashville and Pitcher Echardt of Indianapolis.

KETCHEL GETS LONG SCRAP WITH EDDIE JOHNSON

DENVER, COL., Aug. 18.—Steve Ketchel's manager, Larry Lichenstein, to-day accepted the terms of Jimmie Fitzpatrick to have the Englewood lightweight star meet Eddie Johnson, the "fighting Dane," before the Pueblo Athletic Club, September 15. This contest is scheduled to take place during "State Fair Week" and the fighters will go twenty rounds, weight to be 133 pounds at 3 o'clock.

NATIONAL COMMISSION PUTS KEOKUK IN GOOD

CINCINNATI, OHIO, Aug. 18.—The National Baseball Commission yesterday restored the Keokuk club, of the Central Association, to good standing, the club having paid an award of $175 to Player R. A. Madigan. The National Commission revoked its order of August 6, which put the Keokuk club outside the provisions of the national agreement for failure to pay the player as authorized.

Player James Vaughn complained that Ray Caldwell, of the New York American club, refused to pay a loan of $16 which he alleged was borrowed from him by Caldwell in the spring of 1912. The Commission held that Caldwell had made no defense after a copy of the petition had been forwarded to him, and declared Caldwell ineligible to play unless the debt is settled through the office of the New York club within five days of the finding.

PALZER TO MEET MORAN AT NEW YORK NEXT MONTH

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Al Palzer, the big Iowa farmer, plans to celebrate his return to form again with a bout with Frank Moran of Pittsburg, at the St. Nicholas Club here on September 3. The Puttsburg heavy has improved steadily of late and believes he can give the mastodonic Western a very interesting evening.

Both fighters expect to start training shortly for the bout.

CHAMPAIGN WINS FLAG IN ILLINOIS-MISSOURI LEAGUE

CHAMPAIGN, ILL., Aug. 18.—Champaign won the pennant of the four-club race of the Illinois-Missouri League, after a brush with Lincoln, which was only decided by the final game of the season. As Lincoln won the six-club race last year a post-season series will be played between Champaign and Lincoln. Champaign played a doubleheader with Streator as the season's windup, winning both games, 6 to 1 and 2-1.

DUNDEE AND AD WILL NOT BOX BEFORE THEIR BOUT

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 18.—Ad Wolgast and Johnny Dundee have telegraphed that they will live up to their articles of agreement with Promoter T. J. McCarey and will not enter the ring until they face each other here on admission day.

Dundee returned from San Francisco yesterday morning and Wolgast is to follow inside the next few days.

"My alleged match with Tommy Murphy was only to bluff Wolgast out of fighting young Azevedo," said Manager "Scotty" Monteith. "We had no intention of breaking our contract. We do not want anybody else to get a chance at Ad before us Dundee will stop Wolgast inside the twenty round limit."

What Do You Suppose Interests Them on Board the Train?

National Affairs, Great Discoveries, News of Historical Importance? Not at All—Something Simpler.

"It hath not yet been shown what we shall be" is a fine sounding sentence, descriptive of our future greatness. "It hath not yet been shown what petty, little human mice we are" is a sentence that would describe pretty well the human race of to-day.

You have only to observe the mental occupations of your fellow passengers on Pullman coaches running between Atlanta and New York to be convinced of the vacuity of human minds, their absence of thought, their aversion to study.

Here are men traveling nearly a thousand miles, propelled by force buried in the coal several million years ago.

They travel in rooms lighted with the electric power that flashes in the clouds, on rails and wheels of steel.

Their journey is the result of millions of years of the earth's development, and hundreds of thousands of years in the development of human intelligence, AND THEIR MINDS ARE ON GAMES OR AMUSEMENT OR FOLLIES OF ONE KIND OR ANOTHER.

You see solemn old men and distressed old women reading—novels usually vapid or vulgar—when they are not playing bridge or solitaire.

If you see someone interested in a newspaper, what do you suppose most attracts his attention? Let us look over his shoulder and see.

No, gentle or fierce reader, he has not been reading important news of the Balkan war.

He hasn't wondered whether the United States would spread as it should all the way down this continent and stop just south of the Panama canal—for the present.

He hasn't been reading bulletins of scientific discovery, or news of importance in the world and its history.

He has been reading the important fact that Sommers "pitched" and Graham "caught" for Chattanooga, while Dent "pitched" and Dunn "caught" for Atlanta.

He has been reading the numbers of runs, hits and errors—if you know what they are—and finding out who won in various games of baseball throughout the country.

The human race has not grown up to its possibilities.

It is a race of children, easily tired, incapable of concentrated, earnest thought.

It is a race of men who work like beavers, or ants, or prairie dogs through the day, each in his own little direction, indifferent to the others, and who unite in intellect in the evening, not upon any subject worthy of the brain of a man, but in intense interest in some poor little make-believe game.

These men, "heirs of all the ages," have their magnificent minds concentrated on a childish game that could have been played and was played in another form by the savages that lived here before language was perfected.

Many a weary century must pass before the human mice of the present day will be really MEN.

Woes of "Affinity" Earle's Soul-Mates.

The folly of certain "advanced ideas" on marriage, that rise, phoenix-like, from the ashes of dead loves, comes with fresh proof in a London cable telling of a suit for divorce by the third wife of Ferdinand Pinney Earle, the New York artist, who has been in the limelight for years because of his love affairs.

The unsophisticated daughter of an English architect, Mrs. Earle No. 3—"the loveliest, sweetest, dearest of them all"—said she knew nothing of the American "affinity" advocate when she married him, two months after their first meeting. Now the mother of his child, she seeks her freedom on the ground of cruelty. Thus it was with Emilie Fischbacher and Julia Kuttner, both of whom Earle married and later lost.

Advocates of a nondescript affection may conjure up new forms of wedlock as an improvement on the old-fashioned vows, but such theories are like "silly moths that singe their wings and fall into dust." Discord and strife are the invariable accompaniments of defiance of the laws of decency and honor.

It is a fact that monogamic races have made the greatest progress in civilization. It was the monogamic barbarians, the virtuous Saxon vandals, that drove the hardest bargains with the Roman emperors. They preserved their rugged, healthy state from the weakening vices of a decadent age.

Pioneers who have cut the hard granite, hewn the tall trees, conquered the wilderness and forwarded the arts and sciences—who have made America the greatest miracle in the annals of the nations—all have had a wholesome regard for the sanctity of the marriage covenant. They rarely entered lightly into wedlock. Enemies of the free love that feeds on empty promises of a superfine conjugality, they were ever loyal to the lesson of Cana in Galilee.

Artist Earle's marital misfortunes are the common lot of all so-called idealists who set their own opinions against the experiences of the centuries. The religious element of the marriage relation can not be ignored without bringing counter obligations that gall and bind the offenders with worse cords than those that fret the flesh.

PRESBYTERIAN DOCTRINE

Editor Georgian:

Your recent statement, "The Presbyterian teaching of infant damnation seems to us horrible," is a gross misrepresentation, to say the least of it. And it is up to you to quote authorities and prove it, or else retract it. If I knew that you were a Methodist, I would tell you it was John Wesley, and not John Calvin, who once held such a belief. I come of Presbyterian ancestry dating back about two centuries, and claim to know something of the denomination at large. But I have never read or heard of one Presbyterian of any note who so believed and taught.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox Writes on Unfit Mothers

Poverty Does Not Make Them So, as Many Are Rich. Criticism Committees Should Be Established Everywhere.

Written for The Atlanta Georgian
By Ella Wheeler Wilcox
Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

"THE unfitness of mothers of dependent children, complained of by 'organized charity' is in my opinion all caused by poverty.

"The Mothers' Pension law recently enacted by the legislatures of eighteen States will, to a great extent, make the unfit mother fit because the pension removes the cause of her unfitness, which is her poverty.

"It is the common observation that the very fine and very fit mother becomes comparatively unfit to take care of her children after a few years of hopeless struggle with poverty.

"The mistake of organized charity is their allowing good mothers of dependent children to be made unfit by the poison of poverty, the poison of hopelessness, the poison of overwork in trying to earn the living for their children at hard work and give proper care to their children at the same time.

"Organized charity contends that a mother should have her children taken away from her because poverty has made her temporarily unfit.

"The real friends of the poor, the advocates of mothers' pensions, believe that the mother should have the cause of her unfitness removed and not her children. HENRY NEIL."

Unfit Mothers Caused by Poverty Open to Doubt.

MOTHERS' pensions now extend from coast to coast.

One can now travel from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean going through mothers' pension States only, starting on the coast of New Jersey and going through Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Utah, Nevada to the coast of California.

Other mothers' pension States are Washington, Oregon, Idaho, South Dakota, Minnesota, Massachusetts, New Hampshire—eighteen in all.

Three cities that have local mothers' pension laws are Kansas City, St. Louis and Milwaukee.

Meantime the statement of Mr. Neil that the unfit mothers are caused by poverty is open to doubt.

Some of the most unfit mothers to be found on earth are women of wealth.

Two little girls on board a large ocean liner were the daughters of a New York banker, and their mother was an educated woman, and their father was a man of parts; yet there were never seen on earth more insufferably disagreeable children than these. They were ill-mannered, impertinent, unkind and ungracious. The chief steward in the dining salon was obliged to rebuke them for their impertinence and their annoying treatment of other passengers.

The children she had should have been taken away from such parents and placed under wise and worthy instructors.

A woman who has been reared with excellent opportunities for culture is the mother of four children. There is no financial strain upon the family, yet the children have never been taught any of the gracious and lovely traits which help to build a worthy character and a pleasing personality.

Every School and Church Should Have a Criticism Committee.

Loud, harsh voices, flat contradictions, continual quarreling and the most disagreeable qualities distinguish this family.

Such parents are certainly unfit to bring up families.

A fund for the erection of a large scientific institution, such as Dr. Elmer Gates has always longed to see established, would be a benefit to the world, an institution where the brain cells of vulgar and disorderly children, as well as the perverted and viciously inclined, could be developed into constructive qualities.

Every school and church in the land ought to have a "criticism committee," such as existed in the Oneida community years ago.

To this committee every person who had a complaint to make of the manners or conduct of another member of the community went, and the committee called the offending person with the complainant, and the whole subject was calmly and thoroughly investigated. And reproof was administered where it belonged, and if it was proven that any personal or selfish or jealous feelings prompted the complainant, he was the one reproved and publicly placed under ban, and made to see how unworthy was his action.

An Institution for Brain Building Would Also Be Good.

Unselfishness was the religious keynote of the society, and had it let sex problems alone it would have been one of the greatest factors for bettering the world which ever existed in America.

If our schools and colleges and churches could adopt this excellent idea of the Oneida community and established the "Criticism committee" and then carry Dr. Elmer Gates' dream of a brain-building institution into realization, the children of the idle rich might stand as good a chance of becoming agreeable and useful citizens as do the children of the poor to-day.

: A DEAD FIRE :

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

WHERE some lean trapper lingered long ago
To make himself secure against the night,
It stays a scar whereon no blade will grow,
Its old, cold ashes sifting to and fro,
Its charred sticks black where once was leaping light.

All green and lovely lies the forest floor
Around this patch of ever-barren soil;
Nearby the pinks and daisies bloom once more
Abundantly as in the years before,
Watching the queer gray serpents writhe and coil.

In all the world of grim and ghostly sights
There is no sight more like to lasting pain,
Suggesting hopeless days and long, sad nights;
It is the ashen wraith of past delights—
It is the heart of one who loved in vain.
