Mr. Wilson Admits He Believes on Foot To Incite Mexico War

Organized Desire Troublesome, He Says, But Not Cause for Alarm—General Mexico Situation Is Greatly Improved

WASHINGTON, Aug. 11.—President Wilson let it be known today that he was inclined to believe there was an organized desire proceeding from sources unknown to him to incite war between the United States and Mexico. The president does not regard the movement as extensive, but as very real, and he referred to it in a conversation to certain newspaper editors. He indicated that he shared some of the views of President Williams, who had expressed his opinion that the United States should be on its guard against such a possibility.

There is no occasion for alarm, in the opinion of the president, who took pains to say that within the last few hours the Mexican situation had improved materially. It was made clear by the president to those with whom he discussed the matter that the instructions to him from his personal representatives were chiefly to inform the American government how things stand generally in Mexico, and what were the opportunities for aid from the United States. This was the main purpose of the president's visit to the United States.

There was evidence in the senate of a determination on the part of the committee to keep Mexico states out of the Mexican situation. President Wilson had said he would not promise them to do so, but they were expected to do so. He had said he would not promise them to do so, but they were expected to do so.
